[Text] Bonn 27 Sep (DPA) -- According to CSU Secretary General Edmund Stoiber, future developments in Bonn now depends on the FDP. In an interview for North German Radio today, he said that the decisive question is: "Is the FDP a predictable and reliable political force or not?" At the moment, the CSU politician said, he does not know whether the statement on Sunday evening by FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher "will still be valid today or tomorrow." It is a question "to what extent Herr Genscher is still representative of the FDP." This will emerge during the next 24 to 48 hours.

According to Stoiber, the Union must in the main, "take care that it does not get landed with some of the trouble" which the FDP met with in the Hesse elections, undoubtedly as a result of its behavior in Bonn.

If the FDP could guide the situation and discussion in its own ranks toward a policy where one could say this is a clear and distinct direction, "then by all means, things can proceed according to plan," Stoiber stressed, referring to the constructive vote of no confidence against Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt planned for Friday and the fresh elections on 6 March. If this were not the case, then everything would have to be reconsidered within a very short time. He could only say in this event that "I regard it as a very, very dangerous situation for the Union parties as a whole to go into the coming years, the next few months, with unreliable partners."

HESSE FDP REGIONAL EXECUTIVE MEMBERS TO RESIGN

[Excerpts] Wiesbaden, 27 Sep (DPA) -- The 23 members of the regional executive of the Hesse FDP, headed by Interior Minister Ekkehard Gries, will resign collectively on 20 November. This will happen at an extraordinary party conference of the Hesse liberals, the location of which has not been designated yet. This was stated by party spokesman Frank Methlow on Monday evening following a 6-hour meeting of the party leadership body in the Wiesbaden regional diet.

The FDP spokesman said further that the regional executive has decided to make use of paragraph 7 of the party statutes and demand the expulsion of five prominent party members. These are the leading members of the social-liberal "Giessen Circle," Heide Lehmann, Theo Schiller and the former regional diet deputy Ulrich Krueger. Expulsion proceedings are also to be taken against the chairmen of the Hesse Young Democrats, Goetz Kaschubowski and Heinz-Hermann Stork. Both put their signatures to an advertisement distancing the left wing of the FDP in Hesse from the statements of their party in favor of a coalition with Alfred Dregger's CDU.

HESSE RESULTS 'IMPRESSIVE BACKING' FOR SCHMIDT

[Excerpt] Bonn, 27 Sep (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt feels that his political line, which he signaled on 17 September in the lower house with his proposal for immediate fresh elections to the Bonn parliament, has been confirmed by the result of the Hesse assembly election. Government spokesman Klaus Boelling told the press in Bonn today that the chancellor regarded the Hesse election as "impressive backing" for his course of action. Immediate fresh elections were the best and cleanest solution.

Asked whether the chancellor was perhaps now thinking of influencing developments in Bonn by resigning, Boelling said that Schmidt saw no reason to deviate from his line. It was for others to now draw conclusions from the Hesse election.

HAMBURG GREENS INCREASE DEMANDS FROM SPD

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 27 Sep (DPA) -- The Hamburg Green Alternative List (GAL) wants to make more demands than it has made so far in the negotiations with the SPD to support an SPD minority senate. In a statement on Monday, the GAL said that the results of the Hesse elections show that a majority supports a change in politics. As regards the Hamburg SPD/GAL talks, this means that the SPD will have to "make considerably more changes in policy."

This switch in politics makes necessary, in Hamburg as in Hesse, a change in peace, environmental, economic and social policy. Those who consider the Alternatives and Greens as existing to create majorities for SPD policies will fail, the GAL statement said.

OVERVIEW OF PRESS REACTION TO HESSE ELECTIONS

DW271433 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0600 GMT 27 Sept 82

[Press review]

[Text] The outcome of the Hesse land diet elections is the main topic for newspaper commentaries today. The daily DIE WELT writes: A boundless surprise. No one expected the CDU to fail to gain an absolute majority and the Social Democrats to handily hold their ground -- this was little expected by the politicians concerned, and even less by the opinion pollsters, the absolute losers in these elections. We see that much has changed in the Federal Republic. The Free Democrats, of whom almost nothing is left, must feel hardest hit. They were literally cut in half and sent off. This result had been predicted by many and was not the biggest surprise of the day. The daily adds: The outcome will have very great repercussions on the Bonn government's plans. By the way, where were those CDU/CSU politicians yesterday evening who wanted to bring about immediate new elections? Silence everywhere, especially in Bavaria.

The HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The Hesse land diet elections ended with many surprising results. Most surprising of all, however, is the unexpected strong influence events in Bonn ultimately had on the Hesse elections. The breakup of the Bonn SPD/FDP coalitions provided a bonus to the Social Democrats in Hesse. An obviously strong bitterness about the liberals' tactic turned into an expression of loyalty to the SPD. There is no other explanation for the results achieved by the SPD. The fact that, despite all forecasts and despite all its own misgivings, it lost a mere half a percent of the votes -- which means that for the time being Boerner can continue governing -- can be considered by the SPD to almost be a victory.

The FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE comments: The election results are first of all a catastrophe for the CDU/CSU. If the CDU was unable to assume power in Hesse now, when the situation seemed to be more favorable than ever before, when could it ever succeed? The Hesse elections have also dealt a serious blow to the FDP. Not only was it ousted from the land diet, but the FDP's entire new coalition policy was to have been decided in the Hesse elections. The Hesse elections were a vote on Genscher's and Lambsdorff's course, and the vote was devastating for the FDP. The FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE adds: What the consequences of the Hessian electorace's vote will be for Bonn is unforeseeable. The entire coalition policy of the CDU/CSU and FDP will now perhaps be impossible.

We read in the MANNHEIMER MORGEN: After everything that has happened, it was the Hessian's this time who by proxy reflected the mood in the republic and proved that the electorate reacts faster than the negotiators in Bonn. The CDU/CSU perhaps had a unique chance to win an absolute majority in Hesse for the first time. Two weeks were enough for Helmut Schmidt's challengers, totally irresolute and full of envy, to lose the wave of sympathy. If Kohl and Genscher had been able to push the vote of no confidence through last week, the result would have been different for Wiesbaden.

The Koblenz RHEIN-ZEITUNG remarks: Despite statements to the countrary, the debacle of the party which was cut in half following the resignation of its ministers from the social-liberal coalition in Bonn will not remain without effect on events in the federal capital, on Genscher's position and on the majority which has now become even less sure for Helmut Kohl's election as chancellor. The land diet elections were dominated by federal politics and the totally unexpected result for the SPD was largely attributable to the Schmidt effect.

His 17 September move kept the CDU/CSU in other areas, split the FDP and mobilized unthought-of forces in the SPD, which had been resigned for a long time. Within the CDU, however, in the final and decisive phase of the election campaign, the Strauss effect appeared as did some contradictions during the coalition negotiations with the FDP. The differences over the date for new federal elections have certainly been given a fresh impetus by the elections.

The BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG says: It is hard to conceive of a more clear answer to those in Bonn who are trying to form a coalition than that given by the Hessians. Alfred Dregger, who prior to the break of the social-liberal coalition, had been considered the invincible favorite for the minister-president's office in Wiesbaden and who on the eve of the elections for the fourth time was deprived of his victory by his fellow party members in Bonn, has already drawn conclusions for himself. There will be other conclusions to be drawn. For Bonn, the clear message from Hesse is that the experiment for a change begun by Kohl and Genscher, with a sensational false start, attempting to exclude the electorate, must be immediately stopped before it turns completely into a bad comedy. Nothing else will be of help now but new elections as demanded by Schmidt and Strauss in rare unanimity.

The NEUE OZ OSNABRUCKER ZEITUNG has this to say: The change has come. However, it is entirely different from what the CDU and FDP had expected. By a sensational vote, the citizens in Hesse have stopped the political trend of recent years and also abruptly changed the political situation in Bonn. What seemed to be sure yesterday no longer holds true today. There will not be a change of government in Wiesbaden, and a constructive vote of no confidence against Schmidt does not now seem to have the necessary support. Thus, the loser is not just Dregger. Particularly hard hit are Genscher and Kohl because their concept of a change was not accepted by the electorate in a vote which amounted to a vote by proxy for Bonn. Moreover, the SPD was able to turn the vote in Hesse almost into a plebiscite for the present chancellor.

The FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes: There will be no situation in Wiesbaden like that in Hamburg. Through his attacks against the Greens, Boerner has blocked the road to cooperation. The election results confirmed his negative feelings. By the same token, the Greens, who are not really squeamish either in cultivating enemy images, will refuse to cooperate with the Social Democrats as long as Boerner holds the baton in Wiesbaden. In Wiesbaden, therefore, there will be no agreements on a case to case basis as in Hamburg. It has much rather become clear that Holger Boerner intends to continue with a caretaker government with a minority in the land diet. It certainly is not too daring to assume that the SPD is thinking of new elections which, in the shadow of Bundestag elections will improve the political landscape in Hesse in favor of the Social Democrats again.

The KOLNER STADT-ANZEIGER writes on this subject: So we now have the situation of Hamburg also in Hesse. What is more, following Hamburg and Hesse, we will have to expect the same ratio of forces in the event of new Bundestag elections also. Neither the CDU/CSU nor the SPD can govern alone, and the Greens, who are replacing the FDP, do not enter into the matter because of their desire and that of the other coalition partners. What then? One great coalition of the CDU/CSU and the SPD? Will the country be ungovernable otherwise? No matter how important we may consider Genscher's FDP to be, this question is the most important result of the Hesse elections.

POLICE SPECULATE BOMBINGS DIRECTED AT ISRAEL

NC271227 Paris AFP in English 1208 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Frankfurt, Sept. 27 (AFP) -- Police here now say that three overnight bomb blasts that killed one person and injured another were probably directed against Israel. Authorities had earlier suspected that the attacks were linked to the second anniversary of the outbreak of the Iran-Iraq war.

Offices of Pan American Airlines and two West German travel agencies that arrange flights to Israel were the likely (?targets), investigators said. Police believe the first bomb, which went off at 12:35 a.m. near the offices of Iran Air not [words indistinct] the central rail station, had originally been left in front of the Pan Am facility.

A plastic bag, containing a detonator and an alarm clock, was reportedly discovered by two passers-by who tossed it into a trash can near Iran Air before going to the police.

The explosion, which occurred before police could reach the scene, caused no injuries but did an estimated 100,000 marks (40,000 dollars) worth of damage. An hour later, after authorities had sealed off the area, a second bomb exploded in front of the Mayco Touristic Travel Agency causing material damage.

Police reported that a third bomb went off shortly after 5:00 a.m. outside another travel agency, Iessler Flugreisen, seriously injuring the housekeeper of the building who later died in hospital. A passer-by was also injured and hospitalized. The blast caused damage estimated at 250,000 marks (100,000 dollars).

BALTIC STATES ON TRADE, TRANSPORT COOPERATION

[Text] Lubeck/Moscow, 27 Sep (DPA) -- The states bordering on the Baltic want to cooperate more closely in foreign trade, shipping, sea transport and tourism. This is the result of a meeting of the Baltic Chamber of Commerce which ended this weekend in Moscow. According to a spokesman of the Lubeck Chamber of Industry and Commerce on Monday, it was decided that a multilateral body for cooperation should look into these subjects.

In order to strengthen regional foreign trade, intra-German cooperation is to be strengthened, for example. A fourth intra-German economic meeting in Lubeck has been agreed upon. The Soviet delegation again expressed the wish for the conclusion of a shipping agreement with the FRG. The rail-ferry project Memel (USSR)-Rugen (GDR) which is to be completed in 1986 was discussed, as well as a connection between Memel and an FRG Baltic port.

MOZAMBIQUE DELEGATION ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] Bonn, 26 Sep (DPA) -- A Mozambique Government delegation, headed by Transport Minister Luis Alcantara Santos, arrived in Bonn this evening for a 1-week official visit. The delegation will conclude an agreement with the Federal Government on starting development cooperation.

Mozambique, until now closely aligned with the Eastern bloc, last July, after years of resistance, accepted the "Berlin clause" in an agreement on German food aid and thus fulfilled the international law prerequisite for Bonn development aid. The Berlin clause, which Bonn includes in all international agreements, states that the corresponding agreement also applies for the land Berlin.

CHEYSSON WILL NOT DISCUSS PIPELINE WITH SHULTZ

LD280900 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 28 Sep 82

[Text] Claude Cheysson will not discuss with George Shultz the question of French participation in the building of the Siberia-Europe gas pipeline as long as the United States maintain its sanctions. The French minister of external relations made this quite clear last night after his first meeting with the U.S. secretary of state. Lifting the sanctions, Claude Cheysson said, is a measure for the Americans to take unilaterally.

DEFENSE MINISTER DEFINES FORCE'S ROLE IN LEBANON

[Text] Defense Minister Charles Hernu, has issued some clarifications about the mission which the French paratroopers are undertaking in Lebanon. The minister said that our soldiers are operating solely on the orders of the Beirut government. They will support the Lebanese forces in their task of protecting the civilian population. The third contingent of French troops disembarked this morning in Beirut. More equipment will be shipped out immediately.

LE MONDE ON ISRAELI REACTION TO MASSACRE

[Editorial: "General Sharon's Partial Confession"]

[Text] Mr Begin and Mr Sharon undoubtedly won a victory at the end of the Knesset debate Wednesday evening, 22 September. By rejecting by 48 votes to 42 the motion which would have forced the government to set up a commission of inquiry on the Sabra and Shatila massacres, a majority of deputies refused to start a major political crisis.

The proposal to set up a commission of inquiry was rejected, that is true. Nonetheless, Mr Begin was only able to extricate himself from that difficult situation by promising his allies from the religious parties to hold a different kind of investigation into the massacres. Thus, the matter has not been closed and the Israeli press -- which has already done most of the work -- can be trusted to continue its reserach. It will do so all the more since General Sharon unwittingly stressed the need for that by admitting in his speech to the Knesset that the Sabra and Shatila killers had entered the camps with the agreement of, if not at the request of, the Israeli leaders.

Far from satisfying public opinion, General Sharon's cynical explanations require many more explanations. For example, who were the killers who were officially given the job of purging the camps of the last Palestinian fighters in order to "spare" Israeli lives? Official circles in Jerusalem merely talk of "Phalangists" but so many lies have been told so far that one cannot help finding the statement rather inadequate.

There is another question: Why did the Israeli officers mounting guard at the gates of the camps allow the massacre to continue for 24 or 36 hours? General Sharon had the audacity to say that there had been no cause for anxiety since the orders given to the commandos made provision for "women and children to be spared." The HA'ARETZ journalists have just contradicted him again this Thursday morning by reporting the revelations of two Israeli soldiers stationed near the Palestinian camps who had warned their officers about what was happening on the evening of Thursday, 16 September.

Many Israelis are wondering about all these points, and especially about the three Begin aides who abandoned the government coalition back on Wednesday: Energy Minister Berman, Liberal Party (rightwing) Deputy Zeigerman, and Mr Milson, who was responsible for administration of the occupied territories.

A broad section of Israeli public opinion is also refusing to fallinto the trap being laid for it by Mr Begin which consists of exploiting the persecution and isolation complex from which his fellow citizens suffer to extremes. It is probable, therefore, that the political and moral crisis shaking Israel is only just beginning.

The same evolution is now beginning to be preceptible in the Diaspora. Many Jewish leaders, especially British and American, do not understand -- or understand only to well — why Mr Begin is afraid of the truth. The same is true of French Jews, although to a lesser degree. These are all healthy reactions. They are all reasons for keeping this debate calm and cool and combatting the Manichaeism to which some people would like to reduce it.

LE MONDE CRITICIZES ISRAELI ENVOY'S OUTBURST

[Jacques Decornoy commentary: "Should Mr Rosenne Be Recalled?"]

[Text] Israel's ambassador to France believes that "what has been happening in the media over the last 48 hours is an incitement to murder against every Israeli and every Jew." (LE MONDE 21 September).

The accusation, responsible or not, is serious: -- First of all, because of its sweeping nature. Except perhaps under certain totalitarian regimes, there is no uniform entity called the "media," any more than there is a single press; -- next, and especially because of its gravity, that Mr Rosenne should equate every threat against the Israelis with threats against the Jews will cause no surprise. I will simply point out that a good many Jews and non-Jews do not equate an anti-Israeli attack (or a criticism of the Israeli Government) with an anti-Semitic action. This is a longstanding and banal debate.... Less banal, on the other hand, is the use of the word "murder."

It is not surprising that the representative of Mr Begin's government is displeased with certain commentaries. But the wording of his accusation suggests that he is irritated by the dissemination of certain reports -- written or televised. Well and good.... But the opinion can no longer be accepted when a body, which is no more or less immune to mistakes than the diplomatic corps, is accused of incitement to crime against Israeli nationals and against the Jews.

If such facts can be established, if, at least in the mind of the person raising them a shred of evidence can be put forward; the law should be invoked and allowed to decide.

If, on the other hand, the ambassador maintains his accustions without legal action being taken, the French Government is entitled to request that Mr Begin have himself represented in Paris by a diplomat who is worthy of that name and remains within the bounds of his mandate.

On returning home, Mr Rosenne will then have to attempt to restore to what he regards as rationality a good many Israeli and Jewish journalists who still believe in the freedom of the press.

EQUATORIAL GUINEAN PRESIDENT CONCLUDES VISIT

AB241806 Paris AFP in French 1549 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] Paris, 24 Sep (AFP) -- The official working visit of Equatorial Guinean President Teodoro Obiang Nguema to France, which served to reinforce bilateral cooperation, ended with an agreement giving French tuna fleets access to Equatorial Guinea's territorial waters.

Negotiations leading to a fishery agreement between Equatorial Guinea and the European Community will also begin very soon, Louis le Pensec, the French minister of maritime affairs, announced on Thursday.

According to observers, these negotiations should permit a definite solution to the dispute which occurred last August between France and Equatorial Guinea. At that time, the Malabo government ordered the French tuna fishermen to leave Equatorial Guinea's waters, where they were fishing.

Fishing is, with cocoa and timber, one of the main assets of the country, whose economy was devastated through 11 years of Macias Nguema's dictatorship.

On Friday, the last day of his visit, the president of Equatorial Guinea visited Concarneau, the main French port for tropical tuna fishing, at the invitation of Mr le Pensec.

On Thursday, the Equatorial Guinean president was received by Francois Mitterrand, with whom he discussed "the possibility of strengthening cooperation between France and Equatorial Guinea." He also met with Claude Cheysson, minister of external relations, and Jean-Pierre Cot, minister of cooperation and development.

Bilateral cooperation mainly concerns the rehabilitation of the infrastructure. France participated in the overhauling of the port of Malabo, the rehabilitation of roads and the improvement of the Malabo and Bata airports as well as in the launching of the mining operations.

Teodoro Obiang Nguema will leave Paris on Saturday morning for Rome, where he will be received by the Pope.

COLOMBO CONFERS WITH UN SECRETARY GENERAL

[Text] (ANSA) New York, September 27 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo conferred here today with United Nations Secretary General Perez de Cuellar on the Mideast crisis and Italy's participation in the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon.

Colombo began an intense round of consultations and appointments as diplomatic and political leaders converged on the U.N. headquarters at the world body's annual assembly.

Colombo told De Ceuellar that the Rome government joined the multinational force because of the impossibility of creating a viable UN peacekeeping force. Colombo and De Cuellar agreed that the UN Security Council should extend the UN troops' mandate in southern Lebanon, which Italy has supplied with a contingent of helicopters.

Israel has repeatedly shown hostility to UN troops, particularly in southern Lebanon. The Italian diplomatic chief and the UN official also discussed the possibility of a UN inquiry into the Beirut massacre of Palestinians in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps under Israeli control.

This topic was also discussed earlier by Colombo with Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, who first urged such an inquiry in a letter to the chairman of the UN Security Council, Japan's Nishibori.

SPADOLINI, COLOMBO TO VISIT U.S. 3-4 NOV

LD271934 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] U.S. President Reagan has invited Prime Minister Spadolini to pay an official working visit to Washington. Spadolini will stay at the White House on 3 and 4 November for talks with Reagan, Secretary of State Shultz and other members of the U.S. administration. The prime minister will be accompanied by Foreign Minister Colombo.

DALAI LAMA ARRIVES IN ROME FOR BRIEF VISIT

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, September 27 -- The Dalai Lama, the exiled spiritual leader of the Tibetan Buddhists, flew in here this morning for a visit which is being described as only religious and cultural in nature.

He arrived from Moscow via Budapest and will move on to Spain, France and West Germany, then returning to northern and central Italy to visit other Italian towns. Today, he will meet with Rome's Communist Mayor Ugo Vetere and in the afternoon, he will give a lecture on the theme, "Love, Wisdom and Compassion".

The fourteenth Dalai Lama came to Rome in 1973 and 1980. He met with Pope Paul VI and Pope John Paul II, whom he may see again when he comes back to Italy.

Press Conference

[Text] ANSA, Rome, September 27 -- The Dalai Lama, the exiled spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists, said here today that the situation in Tibet has improved in the last few years, especially after the end of the cultural revolution in China.

He added, however, that it is still not good enough for exiled Tibetans to return to their homeland, taken over by China in 1959. The Dalai Lama made the statement in a press conference at the Sant' Anselmo Pontifical College where he is staying during his Rome visit. He arrived here from Moscow via Budapest today and will move on to Spain, France and West Germany, then return to northern and central Italy to visit other Italian towns.

With respect to talks four of his representatives had with Chinese Government authorities four months ago, the Dalai Lama said they exchanged views on the current situation in Tibet, particularly religious freedom.

The Tibetan spiritual leader said his visit to Western Europe is at the invitation of several Buddhist centers and Tibetan communities and he is not on a "missionary tour".

The Dalai Lama also said he hopes to be received by the pope, either tomorrow, or during the second part of his visit to Italy October 16-24. He was already received by the pope two years ago.

LEBANESE PRESIDENT MAY MEET POPE, PERTINI

[Text] (ANSA) Beirut, September 27 -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil is planning to visit Italy, France and the United States as soon as possible in the search for aid to bring back peace and stability to his country, Lebanese television announced today.

According to the broadcast, Al-Jumayyil intends to request an audience with Pope John Paul II and will also address the UN General Assembly in New York.

Lebanese sources say he hopes to meet Italian President Sandro Pertini. He would also like to ask for an enlargement of the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut to cover the whole Beirut region once the Israelis have withdrawn, the sources reported.

JORDAN'S KING HUSAYN ARRIVES IN SARDINIA

[Text] (ANSA) Olbia (Sardinia), September 27 -- King Husayn of Jordan arrived on the Island of Sardinia today for a brief vacation in the exclusive Costa Smeralda resort area.

The king arrived on a Jordanian military aircraft and was welcomed at Olbia Airport by high-ranking local officials.

DETAILS OF NATURAL GAS DEAL WITH ALGERIA GIVEN

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, September 27 -- Italy and Algeria signed a deal here today governing Italian supplies of the North African state's natural gas for twenty-five years via a seabed pipeline between North Africa and Sicily.

The accord, which came after long negotiations, set the price of the gas at 4.41 dollars per million British thermal units (BTUs), each equivalent to about 27 cubic meters.

The contract, to be reviewed every three years, also provides for indexation of the price and the link between the flow of Italian exports towards Algeria.

The Rome government agreed to subsidize the deal in order to push the agreement to its conclusion. The government will pay SNAM of the ENI group the difference between the contract price and what the company considers a competitive price, 4.01 dollars per million BTU.

The subsidies will cost the Italian state about 90 million dollars a year.

A statement issued after the accord was signed by Italian Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria and Algerian Energy Minister Belkacem Nabi said Italy signed the accord "to carry out a diversification of energy sources in order to increase the conditions of security of the Italian economic system".

ARREST WARRANT ISSUED AGAINST LIBYAN OFFICIAL

[Text] (ANSA) -- Milan, September 27 -- Milan magistrates have issued arrest warrants against a Libyan Government official and another Libyan national for the murder of a Libyan businessman who had fled his nation for Italy.

It was announced here today that charges were filed one month ago against Muhammad (Abdulla Rashed Said), described as a high Libyan Government official, and Muhammad (Bu Asha Kalifa) in connection with the killing of (Azzedin Lahderi) in June 1980 near the Milan train station.

(Lahderi) was one of many Libyan expatriates who ignored strongmân Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's calls that they return to their homeland or face violence.

During that period, several Libyans were killed in Europe and in the United States, purportedly by hit squads sent from Libya.

NEW PRESIDENTS FOR IRI, ENI, EFIM ANNOUNCED

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, September 24 -- Italy's three major public sector holding companies were given new presidents by the Italian Government today after months of delicate maneuvering among the five government parties over who should control these nerve centres of the Italian economy.

The groups in question are the Instituto per la Ricostruzione Industriale (IRI), which will be headed by former Industry Minister Romano Prodi, the Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi (ENI), to be led by Umberto Colombo and the Ente Finanziaria per l'Industria Manufatturiera (EFIM), whose boss will be Corrado Fiaccavento.

The appointments will only become effective towards the end of October because of the complex parliamentary procedure needed for their approval. The three groups control operational companies employing about 700,000 in Italy alone.

IRI, the largest of them all, has interests ranging from engineering to steel and from shipbuilding to communications, as well as a number of state-controlled banks. Its best known names for the general public are probably Alitalia, Italy's national airline, and the RAI radio-television network.

IRI gives jobs to more than 500,000. Its turnover in 1981 was about thirty thousand billion lire, equivalent to about 23 billion dollars and about 1.8 percent of Italy's gross domestic product.

ENI's special responsibilities are oil and chemical products. Its best known subsidiary is AGIP, the gas station people.

It employs more than 122,000 and its turnover last year was 37,000 billion lire, almost 28 and a half billion dollars. According to FORTUNE magazine's listings, it is the ninth company in the world, and third if you rule out the American giants.

EFIM covers the manufacturing industry. It was set up in 1962, and most of its interests are in the south. Its main aims are to reduce Italy's dependence on foreign supplies of metals, food and paper.

All the new appointees named today are youngish for the posts in terms of the usual practise in Italian Government service. Prodi is 43, Colombo 55, and Fiaccavento 45.

The first, who was industry minister from November 1978 to March 1979, is a Christian Democrat and an adviser to Christian Democrat Party Secretary Ciriaco de Mita.

He majored in law and has taught numerous university courses in Britain and the United States.

Colombo is an internationally known expert in his field since 1978. He has been president of Italy's Nuclear and Alternative Energy Board.

Before that he was deputy director-general with responsibility for research at the private sector chemical colossus, Montedison. He was the Socialists' candidate.

The Social Democrats advanced the name of Fiaccavento, who was thus confirmed at the head of EFIM where he has been president since 1979.

The appointments have been one of the many sources of polemic among the government parties -- the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini's own Republicans.

But, as soon as they were announced, criticisms, initially from the extreme right, have already been levelled against them because they represent a policy of sharing out posts on the basis of party affiliation.

Prodi is IRI's third president after the extremely long tenures of Giuseppe Petrilli and Pietro Sette, both Christian Democrats.

ENI, which was founded by Enrico Mattei in 1952, has had a more difficult history since Mattei died, just ten years after his brain child's birth, in a plane crash which many people believe was engineered by opponents of the independent policies he was trying to put into effect.

Mattei was followed by Giuseppe Boldrini, Eugenio Cefis, Raffaele Girotti, a government commissioner Egidio Egidi, the Socialist Giorgio Mazzanti, and Enrico Gandolfi, a government commissioner appointed in March who will stay at his post until Colombo's appointment becomes official.

The three new presidents face one major task -- to reshape the corporations so as to reduce their massive debts which, according to a recent study carried out by Mediobanca, now amount to a total of 70,800 billion lire, or about fifty billion dollars.

HUNGARY'S LOSONCZI VISITS; EANES HOSTS DINNER

[Excerpts] His name is Pal Losonczi, he is the president of Hungary and he arrived in Lisbon today on an official 2-day visit, repaying the visit of Ramalho Eanes to Budapest in March 1979. Speaking a short while ago at a dinner in Losonczi's honor, the Portuguese president pointed out that his visit to our country was possible because of the democratic spirit of our political regime, which has expanded the framework of our foreign relations.

Eanes spoke of our foreign policy which he described as sound, aware and without complexes or subordinations of any kind. He said that Portugal is seeking to contribute to the stability of the geostrategic balances and to support and collaborate in the negotiated and peaceful settlement of conflicts between states and regions. In this connection he mentioned southern Africa where, he said, Portuguese foreign policy is seeking to play a moderating role. This may have been a reference to the possibility, often mentioned lately, of Portuguese troops being sent to Angola as part of a peacekeeping force.

Eanes also touched on the question of Timor. As far as we are concerned, he stated, we shall do our utmost to bring about a settlement, a task which we are compelled to undertake by a question of national dignity and respect for the dignity of other peoples. He appealed to the international community: We trust that particularly those countries who have been striving for a political settlement may be capable of bringing about a convergence of efforts in order to find a rapid solution to this grave problem.

For President Losonczi's reply, here is a report by Cesario Leitao from Ajuda Palace: [Begin recording] The Hungarian president, for his part, stated it was only after April 1974, after centuries of sporadic relations, that an uninterrupted and organized relationship developed between our two countries.

Your visit to Hungary in 1979, Mr President, he told Eanes, was an important landmark for us in the development of relations between Portugal and Hungary. Losonczi stressed that neither the differences between our social systems nor the distance between our two countries should cause political barriers between our two peoples.

He later stated that the Hungarian People's Republic has no illusions as to the serious nature of the problems confronting all mankind. We are aware, Losonczi stated, that the implementation of the principles approved in Helsinki is not easy, but it is possible and necessary. There is no reasonable alternative to peace and peaceful coexistence, he stated, adding that it is important that we strengthen the ties between our two countries and develop our relations. We are ready to proceed along this course, he declared. [end recording]

Tomorrow, in addition to another meeting with Eanes, Losonczi will receive the Portuguese prime minister and visit the Assembly of the Republic and the Gulbenkian Foundation.

EANES ISSUES DECREES ON CONSTITUTION, ELECTIONS

LD242022 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1800 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The big news of the day is the declaration by President Eanes of a decree-law on the revision of the Constitution. The good news was announced to the press by the speaker of the Assembly of the Republic, Oliveira Dias, after being summoned by the president of the republic this afternoon. President Eanes has also declared a decree-law fixing the date of the next local government elections for 12 December. The two decree-laws are expected to be published in the government gazette early next week. The revision of the Constitution will come into effect thirty days after publication of the respective decree-law in the government gazette.

FOREIGN MINISTER TO ADDRESS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

PA272204 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1137 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Madrid, 27 Sep (EFE) -- Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca said today in Madrid that the legislative elections scheduled for 28 October "will not bring about important changes in the foreign policy."

In a short statement made shortly before he left for New York to attend the 37th session of the UN General Assembly, the head of the Spanish diplomacy said that his speech at the UN "will not be affected by the imminency of the general elections."

According to observers, the Spanish minister's speech will center on three main subjects: the Middle East, with the Israeli invasion of Lebanon; decolonization, stressing the issues of Gibraltar and Malvinas; and international detente, placing emphasis on the Conference for European Security and Cooperation that will again begin meeting in Madrid on 9 November.

EQUATORIAL GUINEAN PRESIDENT ARRIVES ON STOPOVER

[Text] President Teodoro Obiang Nguema of Equatorial Guinea arrived in Madrid this evening aboard a Spanish Air Force DC-8 from Rome. He is on an official stopover of 15 hours and was met at Barajas by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo and Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca. Calvo-Sotelo and Obiang Nguema are due to meet at the Moncloa Palace at this moment.

The Spanish Government will be particularly interested in having a report from President Nguema himself on the 3-day official visit he has just paid to France. The French Government has been showing great interest in the former Spanish colony because it borders on two French-speaking nations -- Cameroon and Gabon. France has a dozen or so technicians working in Guinea and last year gave the country 300 million pesetas in aid. This is a paltry sum when compared with the 400 technicians and 11 billion pesetas Spain has provided for Guinea in the past two years. But France wants to step up its influence and in return for its aid has obtained the green light for oil prospecting and rules allowing French boats to fish in Equatorial Guinean waters.

Span's relations with its former colony are now cordial, after overcoming some recent tensions. Calvo-Sotelo and Nguema will be looking at the state of Spain's assistance, which for the sake of greater effectiveness has been concentrated in the fields of education, health care and agriculture.

At 2100 the Spanish prime minister will host a private dinner at the Moncloa Palace for Nguema, who will leave for home at 1000 tomorrow.

INDONESIAN PRESIDENT TO MAKE OFFICIAL VISIT

PA240245 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1005 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Text] Madrid, 23 Sep (EFE) -- General Suharto, president of the Republic of Indonesia, will make an official visit to Spain from 7-10 October at the invitation of King Juan Carlos de Borbon. During his stay in Spain, General Suharto will be received by King Juan Carlos and will meet with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo. Among other activities, the itinerary for President Suharto's official visit includes a visit to Granada (in southern Spain).

POPULAR DEMOCRATIC PARTY ELECTS NEW OFFICIALS

[Text] Madrid, 26 Sep (EFE) -- The Popular Democratic Party (PDP) constituent assembly came to an end in Madrid today with the election of Oscar Alzaga as president. He said that "we are going to render the Socialist triumphs unjustifiable." The PDP is the result of a split by the most conservative Christian Democrat faction in the official party.

Alzaga, who was a parliamentarian representing Spain's official party, the Union of the Democratic Center (UCD), until recently, said before the PDP assembly that "we are not a party created for the elections; we are here to stay in Spain's public life."

In addition to Alzaga as president, the party's Board of Directors will include Eduardo Carrilles and Jose Luis Alvarez as vice presidents, Jose Manuel Otero as secretary general and Jose Ramon Pin as deputy secretary general.

The PDP assembly closed after 2 days of meetings in the Spanish capital. The PDP will run in the 28 October elections in coalition with the conservative Popular Alliance (AP).

AP'S FRAGA ADDRESSES MEETING, OUTLINES PROGRAM

PM270737 Madrid ABC in Spanish 21 Sep 82 p 29

[Excerpt] Madrid -- The need for a strong democratic state with a balanced system of autonomies; the defense of the market economy and private enterprise, together with a substantial reduction of fiscal pressure; the reform of the administration with a view to improving the professional standards of officials; freedom of education; Spain's integration into West European bodies; the use of all available laws to end terrorism.... These in short, are the chief ideas contained in the Popular Alliance election program presented by Party Chairman Manuel Fraga at a crowded meeting yesterday.

At the same meeting an announcement was made of the Popular Alliance-Popular Democratic Party [PDP] coalition's Congress of Deputies and Senate lists for Madrid. Jose Juiz Alvarez and Oscar Alzaga, leaders of the latter party, were conspicuous in their absence, though Gonzalez Estefani, chairman of the confederation of Spanish small and medium Businessmen, acted as the group's representative.

At no point during his meeting with representatives of the media did Fraga agree to comment on the meeting of the PDP caretaker committee then in progress on the stance the group would adopt following the difficulties posed by the preparation of electoral lists. He asserted that there was no cause for alarm and that his party has substitutes ready.

The Popular Alliance leader also harshly criticized the PCE and Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] election programs -- the others yet announced. He said the Communist program was a "mere compendium of ornamental trappings, because they are not of serious intent." As for the PSOE program, he rejected above all its economic content, which he considers unfeasible and liable to impoverish the country. He said its foreign policy would lead Spain into isolationism.

No to Constitutional Reform

Among other points in the program, he stressed that constitutional reform would not be proposed now, "since the country has other, more important problems facing it." He discussed the plan to reduce fiscal pressure "as a way of creating wealth and therefore jobs," and how to use all available means to destroy the terrorist phenomenon.

The main principles of the 276-page Popular Alliance program presented to the voters are as follows:

-- the advocacy of a moral approach to social life, based on Christian humanism;

-- service to Spain, as a nation with a rich and varied cultural heritage oriented toward the Hispanic world;

-- an institutional approach to the life of the community;

-- a strong and efficient democratic state that will protect human and social freedom within a legal framework;

-- a realistic economic system based on the real situation;

-- the creation and fair distribution of wealth;

-- Spain's occupying its natural and rightful place in today's world.

With regard to the political model, the program points to observance of the principle of the unity of the state -- national unity, the shared cultural identity of all Spaniards, the economic unity of the market and the development of the powers granted to the state by Article 149.1 of the Constitution to ensure the realization of the autonomies process envisaged in the Constitution, with adequate guarantees of order and stability.

Lower Fiscal Pressure

The economy was the subject on which the Popular Alliance had most to propose in the way of government action. It stresses the defense of the social market economy, based on free private enterprise, and a moderate and subordinate involvement of the public sector.

It also proposes a long-term neutral monetary policy, with a view to maintaining the peseta's domestic purchasing power and the clear creation of a money market. With regard to budgetary policy, the aim is strict control of public spending.

One of the key aspects, in the opinion of Popular Alliance experts, is the reduction of fiscal pressure by abolishing the wealth tax. All earned income below 750,000 pesetas a year would be declared tax free and it would be proposed that the Cortes withdraw the present bill on death duty and gift tax.

With regard to labor policy and welfare, the Popular Alliance proposes drastic reduction of the employers' share of welfare contributions and a consequent increase in the state subsidy.

KOIVISTO ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE, OTHER ISSUES

PM271311 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 23 Sep 82 p 4

["Today's Discussion" column: "Koivisto and Foreign Policy"]

[Excerpt] The second part of the interview with President Mauno Koivisto [no "first part" monitored] was published on Wednesday [22 September] in center party newspapers including SUOMENMAA. Among the issues raised by Koivisto were the nuclear-free zone, the current foreign policy debate and the bloodbath in Beirut. Regarding the zone, the president said: "If, for example, Finland and Sweden were to declare themselves a minizone, this could lead to a situation in which other countries would say that the decision had been made without their involvement, and that they did not intend to get involved in the future. During peacetime, the Nordic region is already a nuclear-free zone in practice. But if we want to ensure that the situation would remain unchanged during a crisis, the decision must obviously be made with the involvement of the nuclear powers."

Koivisto said that the nuclear-free zone is now dependent on the Soviet Union and the United States. Referring to PRAVDA, he said that the Soviet Union is prepared to discuss the matter and, when asked if the ball were now in the U.S. court, the president replied: "It seems as if the United States has no desire at all to take this ball, at least not in the present situation." When asked if it is not pointless for Finland to continue its efforts, Koivisto said: "It isn't pointless. Now is the time for a more active approach, because we have to consider which measures could give the desired results and which would not do so. Thus, our problem is what we still can do to move things along.

"The point of departure is that the Nordic countries reach agreement, but because of the nature of the issue, we should also involve the leading nuclear powers." After mentioning the stockpiling of heavy U.S. combat equipment in Norway and saying that the present government seems to be less active than its predecessor, and noting the ballyhoo about submarines in the Baltic, which Koivisto said should not give rise to hysteria, the president came to the foreign policy debate in Finland. He raised the question of Finland's behavior at the United Nations in connection with the treatment of the Middle East question.

"The position taken recently by Finland was tougher than that in June. But there is every justification for saying that the situation has also changed. There is no reason for assuming that Finland's political line should be dependent on what Israel does. We pursue our policy on the basis of our own points of departure, and they have not changed. We have every reason to follow the line which is now well established and is called the Paasikivi-Kekkonen Line.

"The discussion has now taken the road of calling for a higher level of activity along old lines, for more participation and for more statements of views. I consider it obvious that we must make clear our position in the world organization and also elsewhere. The alternative that Finland should keep silent does not exist. Even in the cases where we adopt no clear position, we must explain our stance; or we should always adopt a position. The question is: 'What position should we adopt and with what weight?'"

President Koivisto considers Max Jakobson's description of Finnish foreign policy as "vacillating" very badly chosen.

"Finland's much-discussed position adopted at the United Nations was largely based on careful consideration. And as far as the word 'anger' (suuttumuus) used at the United Nations is concerned, it was merely rhetoric.

"You should not draw from it the conclusion that the decision was made in anger. You cannot assume that the people who look after foreign policy should not be allowed to have feelings about what is happening in the world." Koivisto said, however, that Osmo Apunen had been exaggerating and had expressed himself badly when he wrote that the fanatical realists working on foreign policy should be sacked.

The president also expressed his horror at the recent bloodbath in Beirut. "It is appalling how people who call themselves Christians share in the guilt of such a bloodbath, which was made possible through the actions of the Israeli Government."

Finally, Koivisto said that a low foreign policy profile is possible on the condition that this does not mean inactivity.

HUFVUDSTADSBLADET VIEWS KOIVISTO INTERVIEW

[Jan-Magnus Jansson editorial: "The President's Analysis of the Situation"]

[Text] Mauno Koivisto's interview with the Center Party press on central problems in domestic and foreign policy has aroused justified interest. It is the first political interview the president has given to Finland's domestic press. It seems natural that it is the Center party's readers that the president is first contacting in this way. For if the result of the presidential election left any wounds, and if there is a party where a certain amount of loss of direction still remains since the power handover, it is the Center Party, which, because of the change in president, was robbed of a number of the channels of influence it had previously had.

Let us first note that the interview is both personal and has content. You could also say that it is as concrete as you could expect a presidential interview to be. Koivisto himself said that it has been difficult for him to "refrain from making public statements on such questions as one has been very used to commenting on." It is tempting to comment on many small, thought-provoking passages in the interview, but we must stick to the broad outline.

One of the topics Koivisto touched on in the domestic policy section of the interview was the efforts to change the national Constitution. He said he was amazed that during the election campaign the parties showed so clearly that they were ready for changes in constitutional legislation, when the same parties -- at the time of the formation of Koivisto's government in 1979 -- were unable to reach any agreement at all on reforms in this area. Since the election, interest has once again cooled, but there remains nevertheless "some sort of readiness" for minor reforms, the president said. It covers changes in the method of electing a president, for example, the possible adjustment of statutes relating to majorities in the Eduskunta and the shortening of the president's term of office.

The loss interest in constitutional reforms is probably also related to Koivisto's attitude as president. He has made it clear that the president's power can be toned down without constitutional changes, and in saying so may have taken the wind out of the sails of far-reaching demands for limitations on the president's formal powers. The issue on which Koivisto's position is most clear is the reduction of the president's term of office. When he points out that two terms -- 12 years -- is a long time in international terms and that the idea of a two-term maximum "does not seem appalling in the least," we probably must interpret this as indirect approval of the reform plans.

Koivisto also answered questions on the composition of the government after the election and reached a conclusion which indicated that the previous government coalition would remain in office, unless the relative strengths in the Eduskunta are radically altered. He pointed out that the Finnish People's Democratic League is opposed to joint government with the National Coalition Party and that in such a situation the Social Democrats give higher priority to cooperation with the left.

In itself this is nothing new, but more a statement of a state of affairs which existed for years. However, what is interesting is Koivisto's own assessment of his role in this context. When the interviewer noted that the National Coalition Party is looking to the president and that it is hoping the president will open the way for the party into government, Koivisto replied that this was a strange way of looking at it and that the government should be born through negotiations between the parliamentary forces, without the president's dictating -- at least in the initial stages -- the road the parties should take.

An analysis leads to the conclusion, therefore, that the Communists' veto and the Social Democrats' priorities still block the National Coalition Party's road into government. The National Coalition Party could -- and this must be the conclusion to be drawn -- only govern as part of a purely non-Socialist coalition. And this is something which is not high on the president's list of wishes, since he takes as his point of departure the notion that the government should have two-thirds majority in the Eduskunta because of the rules of parliamentary procedure.

It goes without saying that one can only embrace the president's wish to give a more important role to the parliamentary forces in the formation of a government. Nevertheless, it is our view that the president's own desires and his views of what is best for the country are bound to remain a factor in government formation. Our first presidents, Stahlberg and Relander, did not hesitate to exert a certain amount of influence on the solution of government crises. If, for example, at some point President Koivisto indicates that the National Coalition Party's involvement in the government is of interest, this could in the longer term, at least, have an effect on the course of events.

The interview's section on foreign policy is both personal in tone and skillfully composed. A large part is devoted to Koivisto's attitude to the notion of a nuclear-free Nordic area. The picture which emerges indicates that he is both positive and realistically cautious. It is intended to clear up a few questions which arose in the past when Koivisto differentiated between two cases. The Nordic countries, or some of them, could reach agreement and proclaim themselves a nuclear-free zone, but if such a status is to have any significance in a crisis, it would be necessary for the nuclear powers to be involved in the arrangement.

Koivisto's comments on events in the Middle East and Finland's attitude to these are also interesting. The president had no reservations in his defense of Finland's controversial stance at the United Nations and explained that it was the result of long, cool assessment. He said that Max Jakobson's description of the vote as a "mistake" in relation to our foreign policy line was a "most unfortunate expression." At the same time, he censured Prof Osmo Apunen for his stated wish of getting rid of Jakobson as a political debater. Why, Koivisto asked, do people first call for an open debate and then find that they cannot tolerate the divergent views put forward?

Everyone will agree with Koivisto's unconditional condemnation, personal in tone, of the bloodbath in Beirut. At the same time, it should of course be stressed that not even in the present situation can "cool assessments" be neglected in Finland's practical policy in the Middle East or anywhere else. We can search in vain to be controversial or challenging in the president's analyses. But they do serve another purpose -- that of integration and putting forward such arguments as are understood and supported by various circles both in Finland and beyond the country's borders.

UN SPECIAL ENVOY INTERVIEWED BY I SIMERINI

NC250818 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 25 Sep 82 pp 1, 10

[Interview with Hugo Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, by I SIMERINI editor Filippos Stilianou -- date and place not specified]

[Text] Question: In your opinion, how long could the intercommunal talks continue without concrete results?

Answer: Your question stems from the hypothesis that the inercommunal talks have been held without any result to date. I believe this does not reflect the account of the talks. We are holding a genuine dialogue at the Ledra Palace Hotel which has made it possible for each side to precisely determine its position. The dialogue has also made it possible to crystallize the points of agreement and disagreement. It is true that the philosophical confrontation that underlines the negotiations has not yet been bridged. However, until now there has been only one round [of talks] on the constitutional aspect of the (Waldheim) evaluation. Furthermore, when you discuss a global solution, the results would be a more or less final settlement.

As to how long the two interested parties are inclined to wait in order to achieve this goal, this is a question I cannot asnwer; but I can tell you that 1983 will be a crucial year. This is not only my view. Both sides believe that we must break the deadlock next year, otherwise the talks will be faced with skepticism and it would be very difficult to have progress in the future. Then there will be other political developments which will cause delay. For this reason, I believe that during the period following the presidential elections and the 1983 UN General Assembly we must achieve some solution. I do not think we will have a comprehensive solution, but at least an "almost agreement" on some questions would allow us to proceed.

Question: What will follow at the talks after the discussion on the evaluation is completed?

Answer: This is one of the problems we are facing now. I shall be in a better position to give you an answer when I return from New York. You know, we have not finished discussing the evaluation because there are certain elements which we did not have time to study -- for example, the territorial aspect and some aspects of the executive authority. We have almost finished with the constitutional points in the evaluation; this has given us a general picture of the two sides positions.

Question: When discussion on the evaluation is completed, will you go back to it? Are you not going to deal with the proposals at the negotiations table?

Answer: No, we should make an appraisal of this round in order to see on which points there can be agreement, and on which points we should exert greater effort. But this will also depend on the talks which the UN secretary general will have with President Kiprianou and with the Turkish side.

Question: At your last meeting with newsmen prior to the recess [in the talks], you stated that the forthcoming consultations in New York aim at bridging the differences between the two sides. How can this be done, since no political decisions can be made prior to the presidential elections in 1983?

Answer: We are continuously working to bridge the existing gaps. I understand that a preelection period does not always contribute to the adoption of certain political decisions, but at the same time this cannot interrupt preparatory work. When the positions of the two sides are presented through technical negotiations, then it is necessary to make political decisions. Without political decisions, we cannot proceed. Here the case is about negotiations, and, like all negotiations, it is understood that there should be give and take. It is easy to take, but one needs courage to give.

Question: In this case, it is the Turkish side that has taken and is very reluctant to give. Are there indications that it can be more yielding?

Answer: I cannot speak for others. I do not know whether your side or the Turkish side is prepared to make sacrifices, but I think both must find the balance between the points they will gain and those they will lose. They must proceed.

Question: Are you in a position to say whether the two sides are in a position to make political decisions?

Answer: This is a difficult question, as it requires my appraisal of the internal political situation. I am obliged to assume that they are both capable of making decisions, otherwise it would not have been possible to hold negotiations.

Question: You have also stated that important preparatory work for the territorial aspect is being carried out. Can you expand on this?

Answer: Unfortunately, I cannot expand on this question. But you can rest assured that we have undertaken much preparatory work and have prepared many studies on the question.

Question: According to the agenda, the question of Famagusta was to be given first priority at the talks, yet is is not being discussed at all. How did this happen?

Answer: The UN engagement on the question of Famagusta was reflected by some initiatives in the past. Those suggestions failed because of absence of unanimity between the two sides and not because of UN negligence.

Question: There are persistent reports that the UN secretary general will undertake an initiative on the Cyprus problem. Could you tell us what would determine the undertaking of such an initiative and what shape it would probably take, particularly in the light of the secretary general's recent criticism of the Security Council's inability to function effectively in the matters of international peace and security?

Answer: With regard to the Cyprus problem, the secretary general looks forward to a comprehensive solution, and he would be ready to study whatever ideas were submitted to this end. The reports that he is about to undertake a personal initiative are mere speculation. The secretary general's comment in connection with the security council's inability to function effectively in matters of international peace and security does not mean that he will terminate all UN initiatives for fair causes.

HALKIN SESI CAUTIONS BOTH SIDES DURING RECESS

NC240923 Nicosia HALKIN SESI in Turkish 23 Sep 82 p 3

[Article by Ali Mert]

[Text] Turkish community leader Rauf Denktas emphasized in a statement to our paper the other day that the intercommunal talks aimed at the settlement of the Cyprus issue have reached a delicate stage. The Greek Cypriot side has made a similar evaluation. In fact, not only the dialogue but the situation at the border has become serious as a result of reciprocal speeches and publications, proving that the question of security, too, is in a delicate state. On the strength of information emanating from various sources and in light of the disclosures made by Levon Ekmekciyan, who participated in the Esenboga massacre in Ankara, the Turkish Cypriot community is convinced that Armenian terrorists have settled in southern Cyprus and it has warned the Greek Cypriot leadership accordingly. In the meantime, the Greek Cypriot press has not remained idle. It has proclaimed Turkish Cypriots in the south spies, creating an atmosphere against those who fled to the south. Naturally, this state of affairs has affected the soldiers and security officials positioned on both sides of the border.

It is obvious that, as a result, the question of security has entered a delicate stage and, in view of the official and one-sided charges that those who fled to the south are spies, we cannot be expected to assume that those fleeing to the north are heaven-sent angels.

That is why, now when the intercommunal talks have been adjourned for 40 to 50 days, it is absolutely imperative that situations on the border be viewed quite calmly and that acts likely to provoke the opposite side or endanger its security be avoided. In trying to keep the Cyprus question alive, the Greek Cyprior side should refrain from creating tension. Refraining from creating unnecessary incidents and from causing probable loss of life should be its main concern.

A single spark sometimes leads to uncontrollable situations, just as a single match sparks a forest fore which could get out of control despite the superhuman efforts of hundreds of persons. There are infinite advantages to be gained if the leadership of both sides exercise utmost care in this respect. Instead of just taking precautions to lessen tension, if the Greek Cypriots do the wrong and dangerous thing by embracing the bands of armed Armenians, we will feel equally compelled to adopt extreme security measures against such conditions.

In reality, the shortest way out of these matters is for both sides to sit at the conference table and reach some reasonable agreement. But such an agreement should be based on strong foundations. Kiprianou, who acts with obstinacy, as well as his associates, reminds us of a goat meeting another goat on a narrow bridge. The story has it that both goats fall into the river, never abandoning their obstinacy.

ARCHBISHOP URGES HELLENIC ACTION TO RESTORE LAND

NC261224 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0720 GMT 26 Sep 82

["Text" of sermon given by Archbishop Khrisostomos at John's Cathedral in Nicosia on 26 September 1982 -- live]

[Excerpts] Turkey, a neighboring country, has invaded our island. It has uprooted our people from their ancestral homes; it has captured and held our territories. Its military presence constitutes a permanent threat to our entire country. Because of this situation, which is terrible for our people, agony and anxiety for the future of this country and the people are crushing us every day.

We are small and, unfortunately, do not have the possibility of dynamically claiming the restoration of our violated rights. We appeal to international organizations; we seek the support of small and great countries. We appeal to the United Nations to pressure Turkey into withdrawing its troops from our country. However, no one heeds us. No pressure is exerted on Turkey, first because the strong powers of the world -- for the sake of their own interests -- show indifference toward the unfair treatment of small countries. Then -- please note this -- we ourselves fail to portray our just cause in the necessary and proper dynamic manner. Thus, instead of being persuasive for the pressuring of Turkey, we have succeeded in putting ourselves on the same standing as the invaders, both with regard to the responsibility for creating the Cyprus problem and for the failure to achieve a solution for it.

What I am saying is not an exaggeration. The statement by Greek-American Congressman Paul Tsongas, who recently visited our island, is characteristic of our failure to persuade others about our just rights. This Greek-American congressman stated that no side in Cyprus has been displaying any interest in a political solution to the problem. If we have managed to make this Greek-American Congressman, one of our own people, form this sad idea about us, we wonder what strangers conclude.

Why is this? We must be sincere. It is due to the fact that we have adulterated our struggle. We have converted the struggle from one of liberation into one of territorial readjustments and constitutional reforms.

We have abandoned the substance of our problem, which is the capture and occupation of Cyprus by foreign troops, the uprooting of our people from their ancestral homes and the settlement there of both Turkish Cypriot and Turkish settlers. With the procedures we have been following we have consolidated Turkey's propaganda, namely that our problem is a mere intercommunal dispute which we, the Greek Cypriots, are responsible for creating. Thus, we have provided Turkey with the opportunity to wash its hands. Its crime has been forgotten and it is acquitted of all responsibility and guilt for what has been taking place in Cyprus.

For this reason, the policy for the repositioning of our problem -- the policy as declared by Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou -- becomes a necessity. But we cannot possibly reposition our problem on a sound course on our own, following so many fruitless years on the wrong course, and be persuasive enough that Turkey may be pressured. As we have said, we are a small and weak country; we are negligible amid the great mass of the great powers' interests. Therefore, we must try to secure the assistance and support of more countries and more powers. But who will sincerely help and support us?

The horrible events in Lebanon this year have taught us that we are vainly awaiting any foreign help. Beyond some moral support from the nonaligned countries, and beyond some vague statements by others, aimed at causing sensations, it would be futile to expect support either from the West or the East. Only Greece, the motherland, only Hellenism can support us and align with us in our struggle for national survival, because we are part of the nation -- and this cannot be overlooked. For this reason it is imperative that we all mobilize ourselves -- without delay -- in order to bring about the mobilization and unity of all Hellenism in our struggle. It is an imperative national duty that we activate ourselves in order to achieve this mobilization and unity. Unity can be achieved not within partisan or personal framework, but on the basis of a joint line of struggle for joint goals. The metropolis of Hellenism, Greece, today offers the joint line of struggle and its most willing alignment with our struggle to restore our rights, which are being violated by the Turkish invasion.

But instead of accepting this alignment with emotion and national enthusiasm, it is sad to see that there are many -- some for the sake of broader political-ideological reasons or for narrow, temporary personal aims -- who either undermine or slander the motherland's offer. Noting this state of affairs, with grief and acting without partisan, political or personal considerations, our orthodox church addresses itself to all parties and organizations, to all people, and calls upon them to become conscious both of the dangers confronting us and the responsibilities that we bear, so that we may face these dangers. As we have said, it calls upon all to mobilize in order to join our forces with those of the motherland, with the forces of all Greeks, in a nationwide alignment and crusade to reposition our question, before the world, on its correct course. Thus we will be able to persuade the small and the great of the fairness of our struggle which will thus be freed from the adulteration and corrosion which have been brought about by the (?bogey) of long and fruitless intercommunal talks.

Let those who believe otherwise be set aside. Let he who is willing to give soil and water to the invaders for the sake of displaying or not displaying prudence by Hellenism be excommunicated, because he cannot be, he is not, Greek. He has not been brought up with the teachings of Greek grandeur; he has not been brought up with the glory of our race.

Government Spokesman Comments

["Text" of 27 Sep statement by government spokesman in response to Archbishop Khrisostomos' 26 Sep sermon -- read by announcer]

[Text] In his sermon yesterday, Archbishop Khrisostomos continued the policy which he introduced a long time ago, embarking on politicking and unbecoming attacks against the government and its handling of the national issue.

It is indeed regrettable, because the archbishop cultivates disruption and division in the name of unity by aligning with those whose goal is to undermine the government and its efforts to achieve a fair Cyprus solution.

The archbishop appears to believe that speeches decorated with rhetorical language, nice words and sloganeering can replace that systematized policy which -- each time based on a careful study of the given fact -- can lead up in the quickest and safest way to our goal, which is solely to deliver Cyprus from occupation and find a nationally acceptable solution.

The archbishop speaks about adulteration of the struggle and about its conversion from a national liberation struggle to one of boundary readjustments and constitutional reforms and provisions. The Government of Cyprus has never ceased to consider the struggle of Cyprus as primarily a struggle of liberation. It has never ceased to struggle for the liberation of our occupied territories and for returning the uprooted people to their houses and property. This is the primary and most substantive aspect of our struggle. However, this does not mean that we should not also exert efforts at the same time to settle the internal aspect of the Cyprus problem, a settlement which, if achieved, would hasten the end of occupation and would safeguard our people's rights.

The archbishop alleges that the procedure of the talks allows Turkey to portray the Cyprus problem as an intercommunal dispute. However, the present government neither invented nor first accepted the procedure of the talks. Intercommunal talks based on the UN resolutions were being held for many years following the invasion, with the approval of Cyprus' great leader, Ethnarch Makarios, and without the present archbishop voicing any disagreement. If he disagreed, why was he silent then, while he is attacking the government today? Could it be because it has been following precisely the same policy? Could it be that the proposals which were submitted at that time did not provide for percentages and constitutional reforms? Could it be that the archbishop believes that this was adulterating our struggle against occupation? He had said nothing publicly at that time.

The charge that the Cyprus Government is not acting with the necessary dynamism to put pressure on Turkey does not respond to reality at all. The government has never slackened its efforts to mobilize international quarters to pressure Ankara. The fact that to date no effective pressure has been put on the occupying power to comply with the UN resolutions does not mean that the government is not doing everything possible in this direction. The government will continue exerting every effort in this direction with the necessary consistency and persuasiveness.

By stressing the huge importance of Greece's support to and alignment with Cyprus, the archbishop is taking coals to Newscastle. The Cyprus Government has always believed, and continued to believe, that Greece's alignment is the mainstay of our struggle. However, this national alignment is being undermined, not by the Cyprus Government -- as the archbishop maintains, thus obviously reflecting the pertinent slanderous opposition charges -- but by those who, in order to serve their party interests and their political ambitions, exhaust themselves day and night inventing ways and means to poison, weaken and undermine the very close and sincere cooperation existing between the Cyprus and Greek Governments. Those who, from their chair or pulpit, judge or criticize the responsible government's positive and intensive efforts and actions for a fair Cyprus solution, do not serve the cause of Cyprus or strengthen, under any circumstances, the established alignment of Greece.

Through his declarations, the archbishop challenges -- without having such a right -- the government's patriotism, and in fact the patriotism of the majority of the Cypriot people. Moreover, he ascribes self-interested motives to the country's leadership in connection with the handling of the national issue. Both the president of the republic and the government reject such allegations as the worst of insults. The president and the government do not accept lessons of patriotism from anyone.

During our country's current crucial moments, the people expect positive approaches and constructive views from their leaders -- both political and spiritual -- and not a spirit of negation stemming from petty political expediencies.

CAGATAY VIEWS CYPRUS, MIDEAST IN BAIRAM MESSAGE

TA271823 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1330 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] Ankara, 26 Sep (AA) -- Mustafa Cagatay, the prime minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, had issued a Bairam message.

Referring to various issues in his message, Cagatay said that the federated state has economic problems but that every possible effort is being exerted to eliminate them. Cagatay expressed the federated state's gratitude to the motherland for its help on the issue.

In his message, Cagatay further said: During this sacred Bairam of sacrifice, in our country where we suffer the strains of a political problem, our people have the tranquillity derived from fulfilling, with a sense of responsibility, their duty, aimed at securing a lasting peace. The bitter part is that a lasting peace can not be achieved through a unilateral wish and approach. While reiterating this view, which we repeat at every Bairam, I would like to point out that we expect our political counterpart to participate with equal sincerity in these efforts for peace.

The recent developments in the Middle East serve us daily as a bitter example of the great tragedies faced by humanity and the peoples in the event peace is not strongly guaranteed. We, the Turkish Cypriot people, do not wish to relive in our country our past regional tragedies and bloody events which leave deep wounds in the international field and we assume our responsibilities on the issue.

During these sacred Bairam days, we feel the profound and burning pain of the genocide campaign launched by the fascist Zionists against our Palestinian brethren in the Middle East. The Zionist occupationists, who have continued their imperialist climb through the most savage methods, despite all the peaceful steps taken by humanity and the United Nations, are responsible for the barbaric murder of hundreds of innocent people in the Palestinian refugee camps. Those who prepared the way for this horrible genocide are as responsible as those who pulled the triggers. They will carry the shame of this indelible human tragedy throughout history. Humanity should, without concessions, be determined to oppose barbaric attempts to eliminate the concept of justice under which the defenseless and the oppressed take refuge and should take measures against barbarism.

BRIEFS

LEBANESE SHIP SINKING -- A small Lebanese merchant vessel is sinking off Cape Arnauti [Cyprus] after sustaining engine trouble while en route from Turkey to Lebanon. Shortly after the 15-member crew was compelled to abandon ship, they were picked up by Royal Air Force helicopters and taken to Paphos. A U.S. Navy plane also participated in the rescue operation. The 4,000-ton displacement ship was not carrying any cargo. [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 27 Sep 82 NC]

FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES IN U.S., BEGINS TALKS

NC271959 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Upon arriving in New York yesterday, Foreign Minister Ioannis Kharalambopoulos addressed a message to Greek Americans. Mr Kharalambopoulos will address the UN General Assembly on Thursday and will outline Greek positions on international issues. The foreign minister conveyed the warm greetings of Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou to Greek Americans and stressed the government's interest in the problems facing the Greek emigrants.

Mr Kharalambopoulos referred to his activities during his stay in New York. He will also go to Canada where he will take part in the [word indistinct] conference of the NATO foreign ministers and will meet with Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen. As Mr Kharalambopoulos has said, this meeting aims at setting the framework in which the procedures will be made for opening some form of dialogue between the two governments so that there may be a climate of detente and good neighborly relations.

Answering a relevant question, Mr Kharalambopoulos said that during his meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz it is likely that they will also exchange views on the question of the U.S. bases in Greece.

The Greek Government takes a favorable stance toward liberation movements and people's struggles to gain their freedom. This was one of the things Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos stressed to his Nicaraguan counterpart Miguel d'Escoto, with whom he met this morning at UN headquarters. In his statements to newsmen after the meeting, Mr Kharalambopoulos expressed pleasure at meeting with freedom fighters, fighters who through hard struggles have managed to gain their independence, as he characteristically stressed.

Tomorrow Mr Kharalambopoulos will meet with the Polish and Egyptian foreign ministers. At noon, he will give a luncheon in honor of UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar. In the evening he will attend a dinner to be given by the EEC chairman and Danish foreign minister, Mr Olesen.

CSSR INTERMINISTERIAL DELEGATION ARRIVES 27 SEP

[Text] The Czechoslovak delegation that will participate in the 2nd session of the mixed interministerial committee of the two countries arrived in Athens today. The delegation has been received by alternate National Economy Minister Ioannis Pottakis.

The conference will discuss questions of trade, industry, energy, scientific and technical cooperation and transport. In the field of trade, they will discuss the possibilities for doubling the quantity of trade exchanges and expanding the spectrum of exported Greek products. In the industrial sector, the conference will discuss specific proposals for establishing mixed enterprises for the manufacture of excavators, road transport material, tools, machinery and agricultural machines. In the energy field, they will discuss plans for building a lignite gasification unit. A special scientific and technical cooperation agreement will cover, among other things, the sectors of agriculture, particularly forests; energy, particularly lignite; and industrial production of porcelain crystals.

TURKMEN TALKS WITH NEWSMEN BEFORE NEW YORK TRIP

NC281252 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 25 Sep 82 p 7

[Text] Ankara, (Special) -- Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen held a press conference yesterday at which he dwelt on various issues. Expressing his views on developments in the Middle East, he said: "I cannot say that we are hopeful that the Israeli Government will choose the path of sagacity. Israel is pursuing an escalating policy of intransigence."

Foreign Minister Turkmen stated that he was aware that the Arab countries wanted Turkey to sever diplomatic relations with Israel and commented: "But every country defines its policy according to its own realities."

At his press conference yesterday, Foreign Minister Turkmen said that he was going to New York on 26 September to attend the 37th session of the UN General Assembly. He also said that he would attend the NATO ministerial council meeting in Montreal [as received] on 2 and 3 October where he would be meeting with the Greek foreign minister.

Stating that his meeting with the Greek foreign minister in Montreal had been determined earlier, Turkmen provided this information: "The program will be carried out. We do not expect a comprehensive meeting with the Greek foreign minister at this stage. I believe that we will draw up the framework for subsequent meetings. Our objective is to get the dialogue going. A mere desire for talks is not enough. We must also reach agreement on the framework of the talks."

Turkmen then said that the attacks on diplomats and the question of maintaining their safety is on the agenda of the UN General Assembly, but not terrorism itself. He added: "States have differing attitudes on this matter. Some states consider [the term] national liberation movement as conveying the same meaning as terrorism. Therefore, they are sensitive about the use of this term. However, terrorism will be taken up against the United Nations in all its manifestations. We have always attached importance to the establishment of international cooperation and solidarity."

When asked to comment on those who fled Turkey and are now living in camps in Greece, Foreign Minister Turkmen said that "there was no information that Greece has granted these people the right of settlement outside these camps."

Turkmen then stated that the Greek Cypriot authorities have informed the United Nations that they would not allow Armenians to embark on terrorist activities in their own region, and added that no "definite information" had been obtained that the Armenians have settled in the Greek Cypriot sector of the Island," and he reiterated that "such a thing was bound to entail serious consequences."

Referring to the answer Turkey is expected to give to the complaint of the European Human Rights Commission, Foreign Minister Turkmen said: "Turkey is still studying the documents. The necessary answer will be given at the appropriate time."

DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF RETURNS FROM NATO MEETINGS

TA271902 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1330 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Ankara, 27 Sep (AA) -- General Necdet Oztorun, deputy chief of staff, returned home Sunday night from Brussels where he took part in the NATO chiefs of staff meeting. Gen. Oztorun, who represented Gen. Kenan Evren (head of state and chief of staff) at the meeting also visited the Federal Germany.

KREISKY, 'ARAFAT MAY MEET IN TUNIS 10 OCT

AU301224 Vienna KURIER in German 30 Sep 82 p 2

[Erich Grolig report: Kreisky-'Arafat "Secret Meeting Planned for October in Tunis"]

[Text] A meeting with PLO chief Yasir 'Arafat is on the program of Chancellor Kreisky's official visit to Tunisia, which is scheduled for 9-11 October. This visit had originally been planned for March of last year, but had to be called off because Kreisky fell ill.

As has been learned from circles close to Kreisky, a meeting between the chancellor and 'Arafat has been under consideration for some time. The last time it was planned for Vienna, following 'Arafat's visit to the pope in Rome, but was called off at the last moment. Now, according to the same source, the planned meeting is to take place in Tunis, where the PLO chief has set up his new headquarters.

Although no official date has been fixed for the talks between the chancellor and the PLO chief, the cancellery source says it is expected that Kreisky and 'Arafat will meet on 10 October.

It is already known what topics will be discussed on this occasion: The PLO chief will give the guest from Austria an outline of his view of the new Palestinian situation resulting from the Lebanon war. The Reagan plan, the Arab peace initiative, and the situation in Lebanon and the Middle East will also be discussed.

While KURIER has received confirmation of the planned Kreisky trip to Tunisia and the envisaged meeting with 'Arafat from circles close to the chancellor, the Interior Ministry has denied rumors about a planned visit to Tunis by Interior Minister Erwin Lanc. It had been reported that Lanc intended to visit Tunisia early in October with a delegation of his ministry to study Tunisian security institutions, and that he might also meet with PLO leaders at that occasion.

HUNGARY'S LAZAR ON ECONOMY, USSR OIL CUTS

AU301307 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1140 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Friedrich Orter interview with Hungarian Prime Minister Gyorgy Lazar at press conference at the Vienna Concordia Press Club on 30 September -- recorded; Lazar replies in Hungarian followed by German translation]

[Text] [Question] Mr Prime Minister, in view of Hungary's obtaining another $300 million loan at the beginning of this week, the impression is increasing that Budapest is experiencing serious difficulties in meeting its commitments -- 40 Austrian firms are currently waiting for their money from Hungary, and my question is -- what is the situation as regards Hungary's financial soundness?

[Answer] Since I had to expect such a question, I had this whole question very thoroughly checked directly before my departure from Budapest, and on the day of my departure I was informed by my assistants that at that time there was not a single bill from an Austrian firm that was unpaid. To date, Hungary has lived up to all its payment commitments, but I will not keep from you the fact that there are occasional delays here, just as there are sometimes delays regarding the payment of debts to Hungary.

[Question] There have been reports in the West that one of the reasons for Hungary's economic difficulties is the fact that the Soviet Union has cut oil and gas deliveries -- is that correct?

[Answer] The Soviet Union has complied with all contractual commitments vis-a-vis Hungary, but your information is correct inasmuchas -- on the strength of a bilateral agreement -- there has been a reduction of Soviet oil deliveries to Hungary. Let me stress again, on the strength of a mutual agreement.

[Question] Mr Prime Minister, several hotels have been built in Budapest with a $300-million Austrian loan, $130 million are still unused -- can you promise that Austrian firms will continue to obtain construction orders from Hungary?

[Answer] I actually find myself in an easy situation here, because over and above the remaining $130 million, further credit offers are on the table. But one thing is sure -- namely, that where Austrian firms submitting bids prove to be competitive, we will certainly allocate orders to them. Let me add that although the granting of this Austrian $300 million in the past was of course very valuable aid for us, it was not just aid, but certainly also a business deal.

VICE CHANCELLOR SINOWATZ ENDS CSSR VISIT

[Excerpt] Prague -- Vice Chancellor Fred Sinowatz yesterday ended his 5-day official visit to the CSSR and returned by car to Austria.

BRIEFS

DOLLAR COUNTERFEIT -- Vorarlberg police have arrested an FRG citizen by the name of Herbert Karl Schindlboeck, who tried to exchange fake $100 bills. He is 39 years old, from Kempten. A search of his car revealed nearly 1 million schillings worth of counterfeit bills of excellent quality. To date, Schindlboeck has not given the police any information as to where he obtained the counterfeit money. [Vienna KURIER in German 26 Sep 82 p 13 AU]

INQUIRY ORDERED INTO 'ZAIRE BRIBES' CLAIM

PM301233 Brussels LE SOIR in French 27 Sep 82 pp 1, 2

"P.L.V." report: "Zairian Bribes in Belgium?"

[Excerpts] Is it slander or scandal? Did several prominent Belgian figures receive "rewards" from Zaire for "services rendered" which were paid into Swiss bank accounts? That is what a report by Mr Erwin Blumenthal, a former IMF expert who is now retired, seems to suggest.

In an appendix to the report, Mr. Blumenthal reports written replies given to him by former Zairian Prime Minister Nguza Karl I Bond which, in particular, indict former Prime Minister Henri Leburton, [former Foreign Minister] Henri Simonet -- according to other sources, his wife alone is cited -- Mr Herman de Cross, Mr Alfred Cahen and Mr Arthur Doucy.

Mr Doucy is the only one to be directly accused by Nguza Karl I Bond on the grounds that he received several tens of millions of Belgian francs. As far as the others are concerned, there is only indirect evidence. For instance, the report reads: "Mr Davister told (Mr Nguza Karl I Bond) that Mr Cahen was well rewarded through a Swiss account for a service rendered." In the other cases, the report merely says, "It is said," and gives no proof.

[Prime Minister Wilfried] Martens referred to the matter at the end of the cabinet meeting on Friday, stating that "the government has been informed of a report by Mr Blumenthal on the situation in Zaire and has taken the appropriate measures." Indeed, the government has apparently asked the public prosecutor to open a fact-finding inquiry into the affair. Some of the people cited in the report have made similar requests.

It is too early to tell whether the affair will be taken seriously and whether it will have serious repercussions. In that connection, we questioned Communications Minister de Croo, who is cited in the report. He told us that he had not read the report and does not see how he could be implicated.

NETHERLANDS

MISSILE ISSUE DELAYS CABINET FORMATION

PM301545 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 28 Sep 82 p 1

[Unnamed "own corresondent" report: "Christian Democratic Appeal Rejects Nuclear Arms Proposal"]

[Excerpt] The Hague -- The Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] Second Chamber group will reject government formation negotiations leader Van Kemenade's proposals on nuclear arms, and in doing so, will bar the way to a cabinet comprising the Labor Party [PvdA] and the CDA. Unless Van Kemenade makes radical changes to his proposals, group leader Lubbers will propose to his group that it reject such a coalition and subsequently begin work on forming a center-right cabinet.

On Monday [27 September], Lubbers gave a political assessment of the government formation negotiations leader's nuclear arms plan.

"I have made it clear to Van Kenenade that I do not view the course outlined in the proposals as any solution." And: "I do not hold out much hope for a PvdA-CDA coalition. There were no surprises for me in the proposals for peace and security policy. That is bad enough in itself," said Lubbers, who added that on the basis of the Van Kemanade ideas which are on the table at present, he could not see the formation of a real and effective cabinet.

The CDA negotiator also refrained, he said, from suggesting what would for him be acceptable alternatives. "That is not my job. I have the feeling that the problem lies more at the door of the PvdA, which is sticking to its well-known position."

The CDA thinks nothing should be done or omitted that could damage the talks in Geneva. It would seem that the government formation negotiations leader's secret document contains proposals which the CDA cannot square with its basic position. On Monday, Democrats '66 group leader Brinkhorst said that the document was exclusively a procedural proposal and that it included no new ideas on peace and security policy.

Brinkhorst's remark and the government formation negotiation leader's political background leads to the assumption that his document is a counter to the view of his [PvdA] party colleagues Stemerdink and European Parliament Chairman Dankert. They take the view that the United States does not need to hurry with the deployment of cruise missiles to the extent that has been assumed. For this reason, a definitive decision may prove unnecessary in the life of the next cabinet. However, the CDA is firm in its support of the Geneva negotiations being pursued by the Americans on the basis of the NATO dual decision.

It seems unlikely that Van Kemenade will make many changes to his views, which will be made public today. Radical changes to bring them closer in line with the CDA would lead to oroblems with his own Second Chamber group.

Following his party colleagues [Prime Minister] van Agt and [Overseas Development Cooperation Minister] de Koning, Lubbers also stressed that the CDA is not very willing to rule with the PvdA. He did so in a letter to Van Kemenade, who had asked -- also in an open letter -- the CDA negotiator if he was still serious about his participation in the government formation talks. Van Kemenade wrote that he considered it "remarkable, to say the least," that Van Agt as well as the CDA Party Executive are expressing preference for the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy, while Lubbers is taking part in talks which could lead to a cabinet with the PvdA.

NATO SPENDING INCREASE TARGET WILL NOT BE MET

[Unnamed "own correspondent" report]

[Text] The Hague -- Next year, defense spending will rise by less than the 3 percent agreed by NATO in 1978. In the budget, the Defense Ministry writes that under the present circumstances, a 3-percent increase is "hardly a realistic proposition." This will mean that a number of projects will be postponed and, for example, the annual purchase of F-16 aircraft will be cut back from 24 to 18. In 1983, the number of personnel in defense will be reduced by around 1,500. However, on the other hand, the construction of a number of depots for U.S. Army materiel in the Netherlands will provide jobs for about 1,500 people.

As far as NATO's agreed 3-percent (real annual increase in defense spending) norm is concerned, the budget notes that in the last few years the actual increase has remained at around 1.5 percent. This means that a shortfall of 1.5 billion guilders has arisen, and this shortfall will increase to 7 billion if existing plans are put into effect.

The defense bill, a new 10-year plan for the Netherlands Defense Forces announced by the second Van Agt cabinet earlier this year, whose first phase will be reflected in next year's budget, has still not been made public. The government crisis in May and the resulting cabinet formation negotiations in the coming weeks or months have made it impossible to produce the bill and work out its effect on the defense budget.

SOCIAL, ECONOMIC POLICY DRAFT PLEASES DEN UYL

[Unnamed "own political correspondent" report: "Den Uyl in Agreement, Christian Democratic Appeal Very Restrained"]

[Text] The Hague, 24 Sep -- Labor Party [PvdA] negotiator Den Uyl agrees "in essence" with government formation negotiations leader Van Kemenade's draft proposals for policy in the field of social and economic affairs. After his meeting with Van Kemenade this morning, Den Uyl declared that the proposals "are a good attempt to find as broad agreement as possible between the PvdA, the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] and Democrats '66."

The CDA's reaction to the confidential 22-page document which Van Kemenade presented to the three parliamentary group leaders yesterday has been restrained. Next Tuesday, the three parliamentary groups will receive definitive proposals.

The CDA parliamentary group noted that the draft proposals contain a large number of alterations to the CDA election program. Group leader Lubbers will discuss this with government formation negotiations leader Van Kemenade this afternoon.

The CDA is still insisting on at least a 1-percent annual reduction in the budget deficit. A plan put forward by the National Federation of Christian Workers in the Netherlands was received enthusiastically by Van Agt, but later the Finance Ministry estimated that implementation of the plan would lead to a budget deficit of 6 billion guilders.

Without going into concrete detail, Den Uyl said that the draft proposals primarily "offered the prospect of bringing about economic recovery." He said that he was satisfied with the proposals and with what he thought was just distribution of the tax burden. Den Uyl remarked that he had expressed reservations on subsidiary matters where the proposals clearly diverged from the PvdA election program.

GOVERNMENT DENIES VISAS TO TAIWAN OPERA COMPANY

[Text] The Hague, Sept. 29 (AFP) -- The Dutch Government has denied entry visas to 40 members of the Taiwan Opera Company for fear of offending China, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today.

The Taiwan company had been due to present what was described as a "Beijing opera" at the central Dutch town of Hilversum next week.

However, according to the spokesman, the fact that the opera was not in fact from Beijing could have complicated tha already delicate relations between the Netherlands and China.

Relations between Beijing and The Hague were downgraded to charge d'affaires level in May 1981 following Dutch authorization for the export of two submarines to Taiwan.

BUNDESTAG DEPUTY MOVES NO CONFIDENCE VOTE

LD011016 Hamburg DPA in German 0930 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 1 Oct (DPA) — Moving the constructive no confidence vote submitted by the CDU/CSU and the FDP, Rainer Barzel accused Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of merely polemicizing against the opposition and of not having rendered an honest account. Schmidt had forgotten two promises that had been made: namely full employment and stability.

Brazel said that the opposition is making legitimate use of Article 67 of the Basic Law. He said that the attacks by the Social Democrats show that they have double moral standards and are insincere.

KOHL REPLACES SCHMIDT AS FEDERAL CHANCELLOR

[Text] [No dateline as received] Helmut Kohl is the new federal chancellor. Of the Bundestag deputies, 256 voted for the constructive no confidence motion against Helmut Schmidt, and 235 opposed the motion. Four deputies abstained. All votes cast were valid. This was announced by Bundestag President Richard Stuecklen.

New Ministers Listed

[Text] Bonn, 1 Oct (DPA) -- Helmut Kohl has now completed his list of ministers, and the final decisions with regard to the posts of justice and transport have now obviously been made. The CDU has eight ministers and the CSU and the FDP four each. According to the listing as of noon today, the cabinet list should be:

Chancellor	Helmut Kohl (CDU)
Vice chancellor and federal foreign minister	Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP)
Interior minister	Friedrich Zimmermann (CSU)
Justice minister	Hans Engelhard (FDP)
Finance minister	Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU)
Economics minister	Count Otto Lambsdorff (FDP)
Food minister	Josef Ertl (FDP)
Labor minister	Norbert Bluem (CDU)
Defense minister	Manfred Woerner (CDU
Family affairs minister	Heiner Geissler (CDU)
Transport minister	Werner Dollinger (CSU)
Minister of posts	Christian Schwarz-Schilling (CDU)
Construction minister	Oscar Schneider (CSU)
Minister for inner-German relations	Rainer Barzel (CDU)
Research minister	Heinz Riesenhuber (CDU)
Education minister	Dorothee Wilms (CDU)
Minister for economic cooperation	Juergen Warnke (CSU)

Philipp Jenninger (CDU), the present parliamentary manager of the CDU/CSU parliamentary party, is to become minister of state in the chancellor's office and Waldemar Schreckenberger (CDU), at present justice minister of the Rhineland-Palatinate, is to be head of the chancellor's office. It is also intended to set up a special department in the chancellor's office for coordination of cooperation with the Laender, which will be headed by Friedrich Vogel (CDU) as state secretary.

SCHMIDT CRITICIZES CDU/CSU, FDP IN LOWER HOUSE

[Text] Bonn, 1 Oct (DPA) -- According to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the change of government in Bonn to the CDU/CSU and the FDP has no moral justification, lacks credibility and is disapproved of by the vast majority of the people. In a statement made prior to the constructive no confidence vote intended to oust him and install CDU head Helmut Kolh as chancellor, Schmidt told the lower house today that over three-quarters of the people were in favor of new elections and saw the change being sought by the CDU/CSU and FDP as a breach of trust. Schmidt accused the new government partners: "Your method of operation is legal, but it has no inner, no moral justification."

The chancellor cast doubt on the honesty of the announcement by the CDU/CSU and FDP that they wanted to hold new elections on 6 March. He argued that Federal President Karl Carstens had expressed constitutional reservations about the agreement between Kohl and FDP head Hans-Dietrich Genscher and said that in the coalition agreement no mention was made of new elections. He said that Kohl's slogan about a "state emergency," which was not true, was meant to distract attention from this, because he did not want immediate elections.

Schmidt urged Kohl: "Please state today to the lower house and thus to the whole nation without any if's and but's that on 6 March we are going to vote for a new lower house and state how you intend to cause the dissolution of the present lower house for this purpose." He said that if Kohl failed to make such a statement today, he would threaten the credibility of the CDU/CSU and FDP. "These three parties want to join together in the parliament in a maneuver that is far removed from the mood in the country and that is viewed with disapproval by the large majority of our citizens." This change of government affects the credibility of the democratic institutions.

Schmidt accused the FDP and party head Genscher of having moved away, purposefully and progressively, since August 1981 from all earlier statements in favor of the continuation of the SDP/FDP coalition. Schmidt said that the FDP had replied to his call for a commitment to the coalition with threadbare statements. "It will be many years before the people forget this behavior."

Schmidt also reaffirmed his political and personal solidarity with many FDP politicians with whom he had worked since 1969, as well as with leaders Willy Brandt and Herbert Wehner. "The political and human common ground that arose from this cannot be undone by tactical maneuvers."

Schmidt outlined the SPD's political guidelines in domestic and foreign policy in twelve points and linked this definition of the party line with criticism, warnings and demands addressed to a new government. He sharply attacked, in particular, the economic and social policy part of the coalition agreements of the CDU/CSU and FDP. "The overall direction of their financial and economic policy is wide of the mark," said Schmidt. "It can at best produce an illusory growth which will give way to increasing unemployment after a few months."

The chancellor gave a strong warning against the consequences of a policy of budget cuts and curbing demand. As in the United States, the result would be a higher rise in unemployment. He reproached the conservative-liberal coalition for "redistributing from the bottom up." Thus, tenants are to bear the burden for the landlords, and the housing bonus should be cut at the same time. Educational opportunities would be impaired, and those receiving social aid would be forced to make greater sacrifices than those receiving higher incomes. The trade unions' protest against this was reasonable.

Schmidt described the planned compulsory loan as a "monster." This measure completely, superfluously raises state borrowing, about which the opposition had so loudly complained, and did not make economic sense. He and the SPD still considered a surcharge for those earning more as a suitable instrument of social justice. While the compulsory loan, according to the wishes of the CDU/CSU and FDP, was tobe paid back later, the sacrifices made by schoolchildren, apprentices, those receiving social aid, child allowances and housing bonuses, as well as pensioners, would endure.

Schmidt gave the assurance that the SPD would oppose every attempt to displace social justice as an obligation under the Basic Law and to replace it with the every-man-for-himself principle. He also stressed internal liberalism as a condition for a humane society and expressed concern that legal and internal policy had been almost totally absent in the CDU/CSU and FDP coalition statement. He emphasized the awareness that most young people have of the liberal nature of the Federal Republic, even though they by no means agreed with everything that took place.

Addressing the Greens and the Alternatives, the chancellor said that the SPD did not want to place these groups, as in Hesse, "in quarantine." However, they must state their commitment to responsibility in parliament and to democracy, and realize that violence was not a suitable way of achieving political aims.

Schmidt said that FRG foreign policy must be imbued with the spirit of readiness for peace and must be peaceful in nature, and must further deepen reconciliation with its Eastern neighbors. Partnership was absolutely necessary, especially among states with opposing basic systems, interests and ideologies. He stated his commitment to the European Community and to NATO and to friendship with the United States of America and France, because they could only guarantee security and peace together.

Schmidt again emphasized the idea of a security partnership for the preservation of peace between East and West and reaffirmed the appeal to the superpowers for nuclear disarmament. He called for a critical and stimulating accompaniment to the Geneva negotiations on European medium-range weapons. If, however, these negotiations were unproductive, despite great efforts by the United States of America, then an appropriate counterbalance of the SS-20 missiles that were threatening the West was necessary.

All governments in the West and East must face up to the urgent questions of their people and the peace movements about how to break out of the vicious circle of the arms race. The answer could not be sought in either unilateral disarmament or unilateral arms increases.

Addressing Kohl directly, Schmidt gave the assurance that the SPD would keep a careful watch to ensure that its foreign policy guidelines were not twisted under the cloak of alleged continuity and reliability.

In policy on Germany, Schmidt affirmed the aim of maintaining the unity of the nation. He called on the future government not to allow the dialogue with the GDR leadership to end. "We must take every opportunity to strengthen the fellowship of all Germans and to make it a practicalexperience." The chancellor criticized the agreements of the CDU/CSU and FDP on this point as being only a blank sheet. The new government has to fill this out and must not restrict itself to repeating old formulas.

With reference to the change of government and the future attitude of the SPD, Schmidt said that he would not complain if the social-liberal government had to hand over responsibility. Change was part of the credibility of democracy. However, the lack of credibility was what depressed him about the present change.

Millions of employees put their hopes in the SPD as the force that would stubbornly fight for social justice. Millions of young and old people had the SPD to thank for more equality of opportunity and they could continue to count on this. The Germans in the GDR also placed trust in the policy of goodneighnorliness and the safeguarding of peace. "We Social Democrats are grateful for the trust," the chancellor closed. "Nor will we betray it in the future. Everyone can -- and must -- count on our constancy."

Views Coalition Prospects

Schmidt said: "We do not want the 1980 election result to be stood on its head." He said that in Hesse the FDP "got what it deserved." He disputed that Genscher has a mandate to change the government "in his own way." In 1980, voters cast their votes for the FDP/SPD coalition for 4 years. Everyone who now supports his ouster must ask himself whether in so doing he could put aside the promise he made 2 years ago and the guarantee for the coalition's continuing existence.

On the new elections planned by a CDU/CSU/FDP coalition, Schmidt said that the new alliance is scared of fresh elections because "it knows exactly that the majority of the people do not stand behind it." Schmidt said he doubts whether the CDU/CSU and the liberals are intent on holding fresh elections on 6 March at all. They will find arguments to prevent them in any event. He said that today, a maneuver to deceive the German people is already underway.

On the policy of a conservative-liberal coalition, Schmidt said that only with the Social Democrats is a continuation of the peace policy possible, and added: "With them, new treaties will not come into being." Nothing is "more important than treaty on disarmament in Europe." He said: "We want the Russian missiles taken away so that there need not be any U.S. missiles." On domestic policy, Schmidt said that the CDU/CSU wants to renew legislation against extremists and to set up a state of snoopers.

Outlines Foreign Policy Aims

[Text] Bonn, 30 Sep (DPA) -- Addressing the diplomatic corps in Bonn today, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt summed up the foreign policy which he believes in with a grave warning against trade wars. "Safeguarding peace remains our priority task." He hoped with his speech to contribute toward "strengthening confidence in the continuity of our policy of peace," the chancellor said the day before the constructive no confidence vote in the Bundestag. Schmidt received the diplomatic corps in the Schaumburg Palace near the federal chancellor's office.

"You too must know that the FRG, despite the often harsh internal political disagreements, is and will remain a reliable partner in the world." He wanted to sum up his experiences after 8 1/2 years as federal chancellor, the Social-Democrat government leader said. He then named seven points which for him constitute the basis of a foreign policy geared to safeguard peace.

At the top of the list, Schmidt named trust in the Atlantic alliance. "President Reagan and I spoke this summer of disagreements within the family and, in so doing, implied that these disagreements can and will be settled within the family.

The federal chancellor underlined as the second point, a friendly alliance between Germans and Americans. It was, and is, impossible to imagine our policy without it." Schmidt recalled the American Revolution, which also bestowed upon the Germans the intellectual legacy of individual freedom of rights.

As point three, Schmidt once again endorsed the NATO dual decison and stated: "If the talks, despite the greatest efforts of our American friends, remain unsuccessful, then I will certainly be prepared to have U.S. medium-range missiles sited." Only a contractually established balance can protect the world from a continued arms race.

In points four and five, the chancellor stressed the importance of the European Community and German-French cooperation. The Community, which at present is not in a good economic state, is in need of fresh impulses, including those of reform after a quarter of a century. The cooperation between Bonn and Paris, initiated by Adenauer and De Gaulle, has become one of the main constant factors in the two countries' policy, regardless of who heads the government in the two capitals.

As his sixth point, the chancellor named the special interest of every federal government in adhering to the policy of detente and cooperation in Europe on the basis of equilibrium. Ostpolitik must not be allowed to "go under" even if a deterioration in the world politcal situation at present leads many skeptics to make negative prognoses. The Soviet leadership should also realize: "We have more to offer each other than gas or pipes or grain." The closer human contacts in Germany and certain progress toward reasonable relations between the two German states must be preserved in the national interests interests of the divided people.

As his seventh and final point, Schmidt described nonalignment as a decisive factor of stability and peace and his assurance that the Germans will continue to be reliable partner of the Third World in development policy. In conclusion, Schmidt made an urgent appeal to the countries represented by the ambassadors gathered in Schaumburg Palace never to allow dialogue between statesmen and governments to be broken off, even and especially in international crises, "no matter what good reasons one may have for leveling serious accusations at the other." He warned against believing, at this time of great threat to worldwide economic and financial cooperation, that one's own problems could be settled by pursuing a policy at the expense of others or trying to settle political conflicts by economic instruments. "We can only secure peace, we can only secure the ability of the world economy to function, together."

GENSCHER ON CDU/CSU-FDP COALITION AGREEMENTS

DW301203 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1800 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Interview with FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher by reporter Reiche on 29 September; place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Couldn't you really have pursued the same policy -- particularly in your old foreign policy department -- in a social-liberal coalition that you are now striving to promote within a new formation?

[Answer] In foreign and security policy matters it is important not to follow a zigzag course, but to continue the current FRG policy persistently and predictably. This is particularly of great importance for a country located on the dividing line between the East and the West. We were forced to note in the past, however, that some SPD groups were increasingly abandoning the Federal Government's foreign and security policies.

[Question] Will the alliance policy be continued in connection with the dual decision?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] What about Ostpolitik: Will a stronger position be adopted in Bonn in the future?

[Answer] No, our policy toward our Eastern neighbors will be continued on the basis of treaties and will be supported by the desire to cooperate.

[Question] Regarding economic and social policies, in the old coalition couldn't you have proceeded almost exactly the same way with a view to unemployment?

[Answer] This is the actual reason for the split of the old coalition: The SPD was no longer in a position to make and implement the necessary economic and financial decisions. This was demonstrated by the criticism of the Federal Government's decisions of June and July. The attacks which are now being voiced against the plans of the new coalition -- attacks which cite the dismantling of social benefits -- demonstrate that the SPD is simply under pressure from its Munich decisions which demand more debts, more taxes and duties, and increased economic regulations. These attacks also show that it couldn't have supported the policy we are presently planning for the recovery of the German economy.

FDP'S MOELLEMANN ON COALITION AGREEMENT

DW291217 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0550 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Interview with FDP Bundestag Deputy Juergen Moellemann by reporter Kroenig, date and place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] If you look at the agreements you have made with the CDU/CSU, there is almost nothing you couldn't have agreed on with the SPD in the economic and social-political fields. On the other hand, you had to swallow some bitter pills. Was the liberal profile of the FDP blurred?

[Answer] I don't share this opinion at all. Looking at the program, which is a working program for 3 months -- seen soberly -- it couldn't have the character of a government statement which is usually produced at the beginning of a 4-year cooperation period. If I take a further look at the fields involved -- we were reasonable enough to concentrate on main issues -- I must say that there is continuity in the foreign and security policy fields, a policy which was very much characterized by Genscher and which lately had come more and more under the very critical influence of some SPD groups. The coalition collapsed in the fields of economic, budget and social policies because of its inability to act. It was a fact that we couldn't agree there any more because the basic concepts were too different.

Naturally, the current program is not an adopted program where the FDP could say: Look, the FDP position is faultless. However, we could not achieve this in any coalition. I must say that as a whole, the FDP influence in this coalition is obviously not smaller than it was in the former.

SCHMUDE PRESENTS REPORT ON EXTREMISTS, ESPIONAGE

[Text] Bonn 29 Sep (DPA) -- Acts of violence and readiness to use force have increased among right and leftwing extremists in the Federal Republic. The Federal Republic still remains the preferred target of the Communist states' espionage services. Moreover, the number of members of foreign extremists organizations rose in 1981. These are the essential findings of the 1981 Protection of the Constitution Report submitted in Bonn on Wednesday by Federal Interior Minister Juergen Schmude (SPD). Because of the breakdown by the SPD/FDP coalition, his predecessor Gerhart Baum (FDP) was no longer able to conclude work on the report.

According to the report, at the end of 1981, some 1,850 (1980: 1,800) known neo-Nazis were either organized in the 18 (1980: 22) known neo-Nazis groups, or were active as their supporters or independent activists. The number of violations of the law by rightwing extremists rose, compared with the previous year from 1,643 to 1,824 and thus reached the highest level since the end of the war. Threats of violence increased from 123 to 189; an increase of 54 percent. The security authorities recorded 92 acts of violence (1980: 113) with a rightwing extremist background, including 59 with neo-Nazi connections. Schmude said that one characteristic was that violations of the law of a nature hostile to foreigners, numbering 297, increased by about 150 percent compared with 1980.

The number of members registered in the 73 rightwing extremist organizations and groups rose in the year covered by the report from 19,800 to 20,300. Antiforeigner campaigns in rightwing extremist circles, in particular against foreign guest workers, persons having received asylum and those seeking asylum continued and increased in the first half of 1982. Leftwing extremist activites likewise continued to gain ground, above all in the so-called "housing struggle" (squatting), the "peace struggle" and in actions against the building of the "western runway" of Frankfurt airport. The "German Communist Party" (DKP) and the "Socialist Unity Party of West Berlin" (SEW) together with their secondary organizations, according to the Protection of the Constitution Report, appear to still be capable of action and are increasingly aggressive.

The Protection of the Constitution Report states that leftwing extremists, through rioting and militant actions, had a more detrimental effect on public safety and order last year than in 1980. The new wave of protests which appeared in 1980 involving squatting, increased in militancy and spread in all parts of the republic. Acts of violence committed by German leftwing terrorist groups or ascribed to them, according to present information and numbering 129 -- 2 deliberate murders, 28 explosive and 99 incendiary attacks -- again increased markedly in 1981 compared with 77 incidents in the previous year.

The "Red Army Faction" (RAF) has apparently recovered from the setbacks of past years, as is shown by their attacks on the NATO air force base in Ramstein and on U.S. General Kroesen in Heidelberg. The "revolutionary cells" are pursuing their program of widening "armed resistance" with increasing intensity. They claimed responsibility not only for killing Hesse Economics Minister (Herbert Karry), but also for 6 explosive and 15 incendiary attacks. The great majority of the 4.6 million foreigners living in the Federal Republic are still law-abiding. The total number of members of foreign extremist organizations rose in the year covered by the report from 109,600 to 123,800.

According to the report, the increasing number of agents legally coming to the Federal Republic as alleged immigrants and as travellers with official jobs poses a particular challenge to counterintelligence in the Federal Government and the Laender, information from the political field with 37 percent [of agents' activities] was still at the center of enemy interest. Military espionage including missions against arms concerns totals 21 percent and is the second target of enemy spy work.

The main target was the Bundeswehr, its troop strength, barracks, depots, airfields, radar positions and missile bases. In the field of commercial and scientific espionage (18.5 percent) information from the vehicle, aircraft and shipbuilding industry was of primary interest. Counterintelligence was successful in making 38 arrests. In the first half of 1982 a total of 20 employees of enemy intelligence services were arrested.

LE MONDE CITES CHEYSSON NEW YORK REMARKS

[Nicole Bernheim dispatch: "Cheysson Thinks West Should Draw Up 'Economic Strategy'"]

[Text] New York [no date as received] -- External Relations Minister Cheysson, who is attending the UN General Assembly, dined with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz the evening he arrived in New York -- Sunday, 26 September. He will leave for Montreal Saturday for a private meeting of Atlantic alliance foreign ministers.

Monday, Mr Cheysson met with the Egyptian, Argentine, Austrian and Polish representatives; Wednesday he will have talks with Israeli Foreign Minister Shamir, with whom he has not met since the latter visited Paris in June; Friday Mr Cheysson will attend a meeting of the contact group of Namibia before lunching with Mr Gromyko, his Soviet counterpart. This Tuesday he is having lunch with representatives of the New York Jewish community.

At a meeting with the French press Monday, Mr Cheysson said that his 3 hours of talks with Mr Shultz had taken place in an atmosphere of responsibility and mutual understanding. It was the first time that the French minister had met the secretary of state, although they had had many telephone conversations.

With regard to the U.S. embargo aimed at preventing sales of European technology to the Soviet Union, Mr Cheysson said that the French position was clear: The United States, he said, has adopted "arbitrary, extraterritorial and discriminatory measures which are incompatible with the market economy." Moreoever, in Mr Cheysson's view, a large country like the United States will not be able to hold to "such an aberrant idea."

Indeed, the embargo question was not discussed during his meeting with Mr Shultz, by common aggreement it seems. When reporting on Mr Shultz' talks, the State Department spokesman said that the subject had in fact not been raised "in detail" with either the French minister or the West German representative.

Clarifying his thoughts on the Atlantic alliance, Mr Cheysson said that, in his view, it is a "free alliance among equal partners...there is no 'leader.' There is only one country which is stronger than the others." The allies should draw up a strategy, and especially an "economic strategy." Of course, the French minister thinks it is necessary to limit and perhaps halt anything which might serve the Soviet Union's military interests. But by what right, Mr Cheysson said, does Washington forbid some European enterprises to trade with the USSR when the United States has just signed its biggest grain contract with the same country? He recalled that while French-Soviet trade fell by 25 percent last year and trade between the USSR and the FRG fell by 20 percent, U.S. trade increased by 50 percent.

Reforming UNIFIL

Despite those differences of opinion, Mr Cheysson described his meeting with Mr Shultz as "very promising." He added that it was "of the type which is essential between allies."

Moreover, there was complete agreement on other points, particularly on the use of the multinational force in the Near East. The two ministers gave priority to the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon and the restoration of security in Beirut. Paris and Washington also think that the multinational force is primarily intended to support the army and back up the protection of the civilian populations.

Asked whether the multinational force's presence could have prevented the massacre in the Palestinian camps, Mr Cheysson was doubtful; according to him, the disparity between the forces was too great and, moreover, the Israelis had taken up positions outside the sectors assigned to the French, American and Italian troops. Some Lebanese had called for the multinational force's first mandate to be extended, but nothing had been done officially.

The minister said he thinks that the 3,500 men of the multinational force should be able to accomplish its task. However, he did not rule out the possibility of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon [UNIFIL], which is in southern Lebanon, being sent to Beirut: Moreover, 450 French soldiers in UNIFIL are being sent to the Lebanese capital to strengthen the contingent. But Mr Cheysson said he wants UNIFIL to be radically reformed: "We are determined never again to allow ourselves to be drawn into such an equivocal mandate," he said, criticizing the installation and organization of the UN forces in southern Lebanon and especially the fact that its command is installed in Israel. "It is with that type of equivocal situation that the United Nations runs the risk of being considered, [as published, presumably misprint for discredited] he added, mentioning UNIFIL's inability to prevent the Israelis' invading Lebanon in June. Nonetheless, France will vote for UNIFIL's mandate to be renewed 19 October.

The minister is obviously still worried about possible developments in Beirut: The protracted nature of the negotiations which have led to the — still partial — withdrawal of the Israelis from the Lebanese capital should prompt caution, he said, and there should be constant consultation between the members of the multinational force and the Lebanese Government to prevent misunderstandings.

MITTERRAND ADDRESSES MEETING ON HUMAN RIGHTS

[Text] The president of the republic is at the European Council in Strasbourg. Francois Mitterrand just made a speech a few moments ago, addressing the Strasbourg International Human Rights Institute, a body which has as its aim the full and independent promotion of the protection and improvement of fundamental human rights. As the institute's charter declares, "the observance of such rights is an indispensible condition for the preservation of peace." The following is Francois Mitterrand developing a topical theme, that of crisis and freedom:

[Begin recording] What would Europe be if it were deprived of economic and social rights? Freedom is also something that has been achieved there. I know that you are here within this assembly in full awareness, because in a resolution you expressed the desire that a special statute should be drawn up in this field. It is in this very spirit, in my view, that the creation of the social charter can be conceived; this complementary and indispensible instrument of the convention on rights, the European Council seems to me to be an essential element for the thinking out process required in order to coordinate our efforts as states, governments, MPs and social partners so as to improve and correct economic and social discrepancies, and where possible, to halt the scourge of unemployment which threatens our democracies. Please believe that France will do its best to achieve such results because what is at stake is nothing less than the blossoming of man in his full dignity. [end recording]

'ALL STATE'S RESOURCES' TO COUNTER TERRORISM

[Jacques Isnard report: "The Government Compares International Terrorism With an Act of War"]

[Excerpt] The French Government compares terrorism with acts of war from outside against the national territory and thinks that that challenge should be met with all the state's resources, including those of its armed forces, as acts of legitimate defense justified by the 1959 law on France's military organization.

That deliberately all-embracing and almost offensive concept of this fight against international terrorism was propounded by Premier Mauroy at the beginning of this week in his speech to the Higher National Defense Studies Institute [IHEDN]. In such a solemn place and before such a select audience, none of the government chief's remarks passed unnoticed, and the premier obviously placed his remarks on terrorism at the end of his 45-minute speech to more effectively draw the attention of the audience -- composed of civilians and military personnel -- to the importance of his warning, which follows the one given by the head state.

"It is," Mr Mauroy said, "consistent with all forms of terrorism to push their theaters of operation into civilian populations foreign to conflicts.... Terrorism is a crime which uses the means of war and, in some cases, has the support of states.... In defense terms, it is an aggression against which a state's full resources should be deployed.... Indeed, terrorism's challenge is all-embracing. It calls for a defense which is also all-embracing.... We must make efforts to adapt our organization, our means and our plans of action to constantly changing hypotheses. That constant preparation...is now an integral part of the defense mission."

To justify the mobilization of all the state's resources -- Mr Mauroy mentioned the police, the civilian security forces [La Securite Civile], the armed forces, the gendarmerie, the legal system and "all other public services" -- in this struggle against international terrorism, the premier had no hesitation in invoking a fundamental document on the general organization of defense which dates from 1959 and which the Socialists criticized in the past because it struck them as essentially totalitarian due to its intention to generalize national security problems.

That document is the 7 January 1959 statute, which has the force of law and is still in force despite later adjustments which General de Gaulle, then premier, had largely inspired, aimed at establishing the main principles governing defense organization.

To support his remarks, the premier read to his IHEDN audience the first article of that statute, which gives defense the "object of guaranteeing at all times, in all circumstances and against all forms of aggression, the security and integrity of the territory and the lives of the population."

The message could not be clearer: The threats to the nation do not stem only from the dangers of a sudden invasion successfully "overcoming" nuclear deterrence; today, the most plausible threats are those of terrorism which "attacks the stability of our societies" without directly attacking "our might."

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON UN, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

[Text] [Question] Mr Minister. The General Assembly appears to be (?dead) as a meeting place and as an effective means for the UN organization to adopt a precise role in world crises. I am thinking of the Falklands war, the Polish crisis, the situation in Afghanistan, and the situation in Lebanon. I see a frightening impotence on the part of the United Nations. Mr Minister, in your meetings in New York, have you noted an awareness of this crisis of the greatest international organization?

[Answer] The United Nations has, in fact, failed to come up to expectations in these various crises. Why? One must search for the causes of this state of affairs in the functioning of mechanisms and also in the greater or smaller support of individual states for the agreement that unites the members of the United Nations. Obviously, instead of this connection becoming stronger, it has weakened over the years. One must search for something that is more cogent than [words indistinct].

[Question] As a rule, international affairs are so urgent that it is difficult to ponder matters beyond the emergency. But I would like to go beyond the news with you, Mr Minister Colombo. The [word indistinct] crisis developed within the system of Western alliances. The Mideast crisis is linked to the forces present in that area. The Polish and Afghan crises are managed by the [word indistinct] Soviet bloc. Crises are no longer arising between the various systems but within those systems. Is this the new international emergency of the eighties?

[Answer] In fact, the growth of the international system does not make it possible to affirm, as one used to, that the great powers are capable of finding solutions to crises within their own spheres of influence. There are so many regional movements and other organizations, for example the Nonaligned Movement, the Arab League, the OAU, the Organization of American States. There are a number of realities today which render these spheres of influence heterogeneous. The great powers have difficulty [words indistinct].

[Question] You are implying that there is a need for a more effective political initiative by the medium-sized countries, like Italy. I ask you, therefore, Mr Minister Colombo, how can this initiative express itself for Italy following the impetus we gave the new multinational peace force in Beirut? Can we go further? I am thinking of political recognition of the PLO over and above the clause of mutual recognition between the PLO and Israel.

[Answer] Italy has taken initiatives which express the responsibility it has assumed in this area together with other countries. I think that our policy must be one of initiatives. If you ask me whether there are other initiatives that Italy can take, I say certainly. In light of the new situation, Europe must now make its contribution to the resumption of the [word indistinct] peace process. We face difficulties. The Arab world is more united. Israel reacts to the proposals made by the Arabs and also to those of the Americans. Therefore, Europe should play a role.

As for the importance of this particular aspect -- mutual recognition by the Israelis and Palestinians -- this is just one element in the process. I do not know whether it comes under initiatives. A climate of trust must be established and each of the two major protagonists can know that in the end it can count on (?Italy).

DETAILS OF COLOMBO-GROMYKO TALKS REPORTED

LD010010 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Dispatch from Italo Galiano in New York]

[Excerpts] The Colombo-Gromyko talks lasted 1 hour and 40 minutes in the offices of the Soviet mission to the United Nations. The talks reasserted what the political observers have noted for several months now; Detente is going through a rough time, dialogue is difficult and this has repercussions on all relations, including economic. As regards the problem of the Siberian gas pipeline, Colombo repeated to the Soviet foreign minister what he had already told U.S. Secretary of State Shultz, that Italy will honor pledges already made, the contracts already signed, for the supply of equipment to build the pipeline. Regarding contracts still to be signed and which concern above all the future supplies of gas from the USSR to Italy, we have to wait for the consultations among the allies.

East-West relations, as Colombo mentioned to journalists, dominated the talks with Gromyko. Gromyko said that martial law in Poland is that country's internal problem and that the Soviets intervened in Afghanistan at the request of the Afghans to stop Pakistani infiltration. The Italian side pointed out that events such as those in Poland and Afghanistan substantially altered the international balance and cannot benefit detente. Moreover, they are regarded with concern by the Italian Parliament, not only by the government majority parties. He found that the views of the two foreign ministers coincided one one point: There are no alternatives to detente. Efforts to improve matters cannot succeed until the concept of detente and the views of the two sides become more similar.

ECONOMIC FORECASTS FOR NEXT YEAR PRESENTED

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, September 30 -- Italy's rate of inflation for 1983 will be 13 percent, GNP will climb by a scant 0.8 percent and the state deficit will come to 60,000 billion lire (over 40 billion dollars at the current rate of exchange) in the most optimistic of a pair of forecasts presented to the Rome cabinet today by Budget Minister Giorgio la Malfa. The document containing the two forecasts was unanimously endorsed at the end of today's long meeting.

According to the first set of projections, based on passage in Parliament before the end of the year of the entire set of economic and fiscal measures presented by the government this summer, inflation will decline from 17 percent for the current year to 13 percent next year and modest economic growth will be accompanied by a 1.5 percent increase in unemployment in industry.

On the plus side, according to the brightest of the two forecasts, the current accounts sector of the balance of payments will end next year only 1.280 billion lire in the red, some 910 million dollars. The second set of figures, however, based on the failure of government measures to win the approval of Parliament, foresees a rate of inflation soaring along at 20, GNP growth of 1.5 percent and a staggering public debt of 100,000 billion lire, over 71.4 billion dollars. The current accounts sector of the balance of payments, according to La Malfa's second forecast, would wind up 1983 12,600 billion lire in deficit, 9 billion dollars.

The Socialist state industry minister, Gianni de Michelis, said that the forecast would require further study and argued that, "a policy made up solely of cuts and credit restrictions leads nowhere. It is unacceptable to reduce inflation by raising unemployment". The Socialist and Social Democrat cabinet ministers, in general, spoke out in favor of elevating the 60,000 billion lire ceiling set on the 1983 budget deficit to avert, as one minister was quoted as saying, "the unbearable level of three million jobless". According to the budget minister, the growth of government spending has led to negative repercussions in all the industrialized nations and Italy must follow the lead provided by the United States with its mix of fiscal and monetary measures.

FORMER PREMIER SUAREZ ON HOPES FOR GOVERNMENT

PM301511 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 28 Sep 82 p 15

[Excerpt] [Democratic and Social Center (CDS) leader] Adolofo Suarez appeared on television for an hour last night in the first of a series of interviews with political leaders to be broadcast this week. Suarez provided an image described as "cautiously conciliatory" by one of the reporters who interviewed him; did not smoke a single cigarette throughout the program; and showed complete control of the television medium.

The former prime minister said that if he takes part in the government resulting from the coming election, or if he is asked to take part, he will be in favor of renogotiating Spain's integration in NATO to achieve an integration in Europe "at all levels," including international cooperation to combat terrorism and the start of "progress toward resolving the Gibraltar issue."

Suarez said that the Spanish economy is entirely dependent on the international economy, except that "we are suffering the downpour without an umbrella." Consequently, he added, a long-term industrial policy should be planned and "action should be taken in the areas of the future, such as the major electronic and space industries, seabed research and research into renewable energy."

The CDS leader answered a question about how he viewed his own center group by citing the need for the supremacy of civilian power, the need to consolidate the democratic system and therefore the need to create tolerance among all Spaniards. He added: "We have the political will and also the ability to achieve this."

However, Mr Suarez confessed that "my plans in no way include winning the election." "I would prefer," he added, "to hear people say in 5 months' time: 'I was wrong not to vote for Suarez,' rather than 'I was wrong to vote for Suarez.'" The former prime minister said that "there are no plans" regarding a possible postelection pact with the Socialist Worker's Party, though "the next government must be very stong in Parliament, and we are all involved in the governability of the state, that is, so long as we are not nurturing putschists."

CENTRIST LEADER REAFFIRMS COALITION STANCE

[Antonio Palacio report]

[Excerpts] Oviedo -- During a press conference, at which he refused to disclose details of his party's election program to be presented next Monday, Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] Chairman Landelino Lavilla simply said that the center program was a balanced one and that it was not true that 80 percent of it was devoted to economic matters.

With regard to the pact with the Liberals, he referred to his remarks last Sunday and merely stated that it was not a pact but a cooperation. He also said that the UCD was a party whose grassroots would not have permitted a form of cooperation with the Liberals in which the center party was in a minority or at a disadvantage vis-a-vis Antonio Garrigues' party.

He denied that there had been a strong group within the UCD Executive Committee favoring a coalition.

"Those who proved most in favor of a coalition," he said, expressed themselves in such a manner that such a coalition seemed impossible," and he pointed out that the Executive Committee session prior to the UCD national convention "voted by a large majority in favor of the center option, as agreed by the political council."

Lavilla explicitly denied the suggestion that his strategy could envisage a postelection center-left pact with the Socialist Workers Party: "Nor is there any agreement on -- nor does the strategy decided on envisage -- the creation of a coalition government."

UNION OF DEMOCRATIC CENTER ELECTION PROGRAM

PM301535 Madrid ABC in Spanish 28 Sep 82 p 28

[Text] Madrid -- The Union of the Democratic Center [UDC] election program begins with a declaration of principles, described as "inalienable postulates," then goes on to explain its various points. The program defends private enterprise, equal tax pressure, the penalization of abortion and freedom of education, among other things, and also discusses job creation. The postulates of the Center program are as follows:

1 -- The defense, implementation and maintenance of the Constitution, which is a political commitment for the vast majority of Spaniards and a fundamental rule of concord and coexistence.

2 -- Spain's unity, and solidarity among all the communities that make up the Spanish nation.

3 -- The consolidation and defense of the democratic institutions and the stability of the political system.

4 -- The primacy of the individual in all spheres of life, the elimination of discrimination, the protection and guarantee of civil and human rights, including the right to live and therefore the classing of abortion as a crime.

5 -- The rule of law, citizens' security and the defense of public order, with the adoption of whatever means are needed to combat terrorism within the context of the state based on law.

6 -- The primacy of civilian authority in the direction of military policy and administration.

7 -- The defense of the interests of the state and of Spaniards abroad.

8 -- Economic policy at the service of better and great fairness in the distribution of burdens and benefits.

9 -- The achievement of the maximum possible growth rate compatible with the basic balances of the economy, by means of private enterprise and support for employers as the motive force behind a reactivation, modernization and adaptation of the national economy. The public sector must set an example of promotion and reactivation and also containment of expenditures not generating immediate production activity.

10 - The need to stimulate and achieve agreement among social partners to deal with the economic crisis, combat unemployment and ensure peace, stability and social progress.

11 -- The pressing need to modernize state organization and administration (in the judicial, military, foreign affairs, economic, health and welfare fields), by improving officials' professional standards, rationalizing functions and activities, streamlining procedures and achieving more direct, simpler and quicker contacts between the administration and the citizens.

12 -- A special and priority approach to economic, welfare and promotional problems affecting young and old people.

13 -- The effective defense and protection of the family by means of legislative, economic, fiscal and cultural measures.

14 -- The defense of freedom of education, guaranteeing equality of opportunity and parents' right to choose whatever form of education they want for their children. The improvement of the quality and level and the expansion of public education and equal assistance to private education.

Also:

-- A policy of free enterprise and support for private investment as the motive behind economic recovery and job creation. Attention will be given to small and medium enterprises and cooperative companies.

-- The expansion of the area of irrigated land at the rate of 100,000 hectares a year. The transformation of some agricultural disaster loans into state subsidies to the sector.

-- The maintenance of the GIP growth rate at 3-4 percent in real terms.

-- The maintenance of the public deficit over the next 4 years, with the intention of subsequently reducing it so as to stimulate private investment.

-- A monetary policy that will slow inflation and increase credit to the private sector to provide adequate finance for enterprises.

Unemployment and Employment

With regard to job creation and the reduction of unemployment, the center election program states that a 3-4 percent growth rate in the GIP will permit the creation of a large number of jobs over the next 4 years.

To achieve a reactivation, which should in turn affect employment, the program recommends the adoption of nonrestrictive measures in economic relations with other countries.

Still against the background of the present crisis, the Center experts have written an epigraph entitled "Solidarity for Employment," which lists a series of measures for the underprivileged sectors of society. These includes: Greater flexibility in numbers of staff when renewing labor contracts (this measure is coupled in the program with the assertion of the inadvisability of freedom of dismissal), unreserved backing for part-time temporary contracts for training and work experience, and struggle against unemployment benefit frauds.

With regard to pensions, the program aims to achieve a minimum retirement pension equal to the minimum guaranteed wage.

The UCD considers it necessary to maintain the present level of fiscal pressure and the same balance between direct and indirect taxation. However, it makes an exception for families and businesses with regard to direct taxation. The way is left open to a reduction of this pressure "in plans to support business investments and in the case of families." It also places the fiscal emphasis more on consumption than on employment.

GONZALEZ DISCUSSES PSOE PROGRAM WITH PRESS

PM300853 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 21 Sep 82 p 15

Alfredo Relano report on Socialist Worker's Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez 20 Sep press conference in Madrid]

[Text] Madrid -- Felipe Gonzalez asserted yesterday that he does not expect obstruction from financial sectors in the event of a Socialist victory at the coming elections.

The Spanish Socialist Worker's Party secretary general, who spoke to newsmen to explain his party's election program, rejected the possibility of a government pact with the army or of negotiations with Basque Homeland and Freedom [ETA] and argued the case for a "majority social pact" to resolve the crisis. With regard to foreign policy, he indicated as priorities EEC entry and the expansion of relations with Latin America and the Mediterranean area, including the Arab countries.

The press conference was held at the Castellana Hotel and was attended by no less than 200 reporters. The questions and answers were based almost without exception on the premise that Gonzalez will be the next prime minister. In his introductory remarks the Socialist leader suggested the possibility that the election campaign will center on the Socialist platform, "which is unusual, because it is normal for the campaign to center on criticism or defense of the government's action." He added that if this is not the case now, it is because it is difficult to specify which parties support the government's action in these elections. He also lamented the absence of a proper representation of the center-right political spectrum.

With regard to the Socialist platform, he explained that its foundation is to create confidence and to secure the support of various sectors of society, and he announced the progressive reduction of the working week and lowering of the retirement age. He added that some parties are offering the impossible when they claim they are prepared to eliminate the public deficit, cut taxes, facilitate the return of emigres and control inflation.

In answer to specific questions, he said that Spain's entry into the EEC will be a priority concern, "though not an obsession: It will not account for 90 percent of our foreign policy." He indicated as the other priorities in this field relations with the Latin American countries and with those of the Mediterranean area, including Arab countries. With regard to NATO, he confirmed his already expressed opinions: "Ours is not an anti-NATO stance, but an antimembership stance, which is not the same. We do not regard Spain's withdrawal from NATO as a priority, but the matter will be frozen and studied."

Asked whether it would be possible to imagine a government pact with the army, Gonzalez replied with a definite negative: "Errors may occur in the exercise of government, but the worst would be to not take any government action. A pact of this kind would be profoundly damaging to civilian power."

Asked about the possibility of a dual pardon for putschists and ETA members, he replied that such a parallel is unimaginable. With regard to the firm decision on the sentences in the 23 February [1981 attempted coup] trial, he said that "the good thing about them will be precisely their firmness."

With regard to the Future Combat Aircraft Program, he said: "We do not know how the decision was reached, and we would like to know. We will examine the matter without preconceptions and decide accordingly. We took no part in the exhibition of pressures, which gives us an advantage."

Financial Sectors

Asked about the possible obstruction of a Socialist government by financial sectors, he replied: "There may be some people who secretly wish for a trial of strength with a leftwing government, but I do not believe that anyone is planning any action. The financial sectors know more about figures than anyone else and know it would cost plenty to create conservative tension." He added that "we will make the utmost effort to show our willingness to facilitate an economic recovery" and said that "the famous model of society will not be altered by the nationalization of the electricity sector. Nobody is seriously worried about the nationalizations issue, even if they claim to be." He also said that "a democracy is consolidated when certain powers live and act outside the state apparatus."

He added that an end must be put to the situation whereby public enterprise has become a cemetery for failures in private enterprise, and claimed that the minimum total defrauded from the Finance Ministry could equal 50 percent of the budget deficit. "Determined action must be taken against this evasion."

With regard to possible changes in top posts, he announced that there will be replacements, based on a quest for criteria of efficiency rather than of political allegiance, adding that "we will have to revise extremely carefully the appointments made since 20 June, some of which could have been dictated more by financial sectors than by the ministries concerned."

With regard to terrorism, he announced that there will be no negotiations with ETA and that he hopes to secure greater cooperation from other parties in the struggle against this organization (?not on the basis of similarities of approach to government, but as a result of a general recognition of the problem"), and to painstakingly improve police techniques and deprive terrorists of popular support.

He ended the press conference by expressing his desire that the phase of Socialist government be remembered for its achievements in education: "Of all the inequalities, those in education seem to me the most serious."

ALZAGA ADDRESSES PDP CONGRESS, RAPS UCD, PSOE

PM300907 Madrid ABC in Spanish 26 Sep 82 pp 17, 33

[Luisa Palma report]

[Excerpt] Madrid — The opening day of the first Popular Democratic Party [PDP] congress yesterday was devoted mainly to meetings in committees, which began debating the 15 reports submitted. The greatest interest was prompted by the analysis of the Spanish situation presented by Oscar Alzaga to the 1,200 party delegates shortly after the congress opened. His arguments -- applauded and cheered at several stages — were based on three points: The weakness of the government's action; the crisis in the system of political parties; and the crisis of despair being suffered by the Spanish people as a result of the previous two factors. In this connection, the PDP leader examined the Union of the Democratic Center's [UCD] recent history, accusing it of a policy of "permanent improvisation" and blaming it for many of the problems currently besetting society, which "should have been resolved some time ago." Apart from this, he reasserted the need for a "young policy" and explained that his party was contesting the elections in a coalition as a result of its having been "loyal to our analysis of the situation." He devoted a large part of his speech to listing the "Spanish Socialist Worker's Party's [PSOE] serious errors," referring to its recent activities and its present attempt to "exploit the national dissatisfaction resulting from the UCD government and the consensus with the Socialist Party itself."

Alzaga noted the government's responsibility for the present lack of control in the economy. "And at the same time," he said, "the number of unemployed has risen to 2 million. Therefore the failure of the UCD's economic policy is a serious blow to hundreds [as published] of families and has brought us to an extreme economic situation." Alzaga repeated several times the need for an authoritative democratic government "with the utmost authority and efficiency" -- a government "such as would result from an election victory of the Popular Alliance-PDP coalition."

His criticism of the UCD, sometimes sarcastic and biting, earned lengthy applause from the delegates, augmented by guests to the congress, who included Fernando Suarez, several Popular Alliance members representing their party and Jose Antonio Seguardo of the CSOE [Spanish Confederation of Business Organizations]. The UCD, to which an invitation had been extended, was not represented, since the invitation was turned down and [Democratic Liberal Party leader] Antonio Garrigues Walker, who had also been invited was not there either.

Former UCC members who left recently to swell the PDP ranks, such as former Minister Jose Luis Alvarez, joined the applause for the PDP leader's remarks. "The UCD's guitar," Alzaga said, paraphrasing Machado's poem, "plays the jota today and the pentenera tomorrow, while voters' ears are obviously being diverted. They have withdrawn their support to the point that the party finds itself in a comatose state. What used to be the key party of our democratic system is now the principal source of weakness in the Spanish democratic system. This is why the PDP emerged with the resolute determination to make Spanish politics center on the old and permanent truths. Our aim was not to disunite but to unite. We were aware that the nonformation of the broad electoral coalition demanded by circumstances would objectively facilitate the PSOE's electoral victory. And the UCD's unilateral decision to refuse it ultimately disqualified it from voters' objectives. The UCD has turned its back on its origins and aspires to be a residual party so as to enjoy a place in the sun vis-a-vis a hypothetical PSOE government." Alzaga took the opportunity of his speech to clear up the subject of the incidents in connection with the presentation of the joint lists with the Popular Alliance and guaranteed his party's commitment to defending the coalition program, "acting with the utmost loyalty," in the interests of Spanish democracy.

BUDGET DEFICIT FORECAST FOR 1982 ANNOUNCED

[Excerpt] The Finance Ministry's annual estimate of the budgetary balance for 1982 forecasts a state deficit of 756 billion pesetas, Finance Minister Jaime Garcia Anoveros announced at a press conference yesterday. The figure is the result of a budgetary deficit of 599 billion pesetas, resulting from revenue totaling 2,834 billion pesetas against 3,433 billion pesetas in expenditure.

According to the minister, it must be borne in mind that the forcast budget did not include the extraordinary payments of 55.3 billion pesetas approved by the government in March and the additional 120 billion pesetas in state unemployment benefit payments.

Garcia Anoveros said that this deficit is expected to be financed by a net increase in the public debt of 289 billion pesetas and funds of 501,586 million pesetas from the Bank of Spain.

ETA SEVENTH ASSEMBLY ANNOUNCES DISSOLUTION

LD301326 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Excerpt] A press conference is being held at this moment at an undisclosed location in southern France by the main leaders of the terrorist organization ETA-Politico-Military -- Seventh Assembly -- to announce the disbanding of this faction of ETA and the renunciation of violent means for the attainment of political goals. Newsmen were told to arrive at the venue at 0700.

This self-dissolution is the end of a process which began in February of 1981 a few days after the coup attempt staged by Lieutenant Colonel Tejero. At that time ETA-Politico-Military initiated a truce intended to give the political forces the chance to negotiate a solution to matters. A year later one section of the organization came to the conclusion that the truce had not been conducive to attaining the progress they were seeking, and as a result a split developed within the "Poli-Milis." This gave rise to the Eighth Assembly, which favored breaking the truce and resuming the armed struggle.

NORWAY

BRUNDTLAND VIEWS FUTURE POLICY TOWARD EEC

PM301609 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 25 Sep 82 p 5

[Labor Party leader Gro Harlem Brundtland "Saturday Guest" column article: "25 September"]

[Text] The 10th anniversary of the referendum on Norwegian membership in the EEC is a basis for reflection on our future policy toward Europe.

The question of EEC membership was decided by the referendum. Since then, there has been broad political agreement that this issue is no longer on the agenda in Norwegian politics.

The debate and the subsequent decision were harrowing and split the Norwegian people into two camps. The first task after the referendum was therefore to bridge the gap between the two opposing camps. We have succeeded in this and the wounds have healed over, but, for this, time was necessary.

The second task was to secure Norwegian economic interests vis-a-vis the EEC. This was done through the trade agreement which solved Norwegian industry's market problems. Since the agreement, economic and trading ties between Norway and the EEC have developed satisfactorily. Arguments used by both camps in the membership debate later turned out to have been exaggerated.

But in this work to bury old conflicts and solve the practical problems, the political perspectives attached to European policy have been absent.

The time now seems to be ripe for introducing the question to the political debate. In the eighties, policy toward Europe will gain new content and new dimensions as a result of developments between the United States, the Soviet Union and West Europe. Thus, the new Europe debate will not be about EEC membership, but about Norway's attitude toward and interest in these developments.

In this situation it is important that we extend our contacts with the EEC -- including those on the foreign policy level.

The foreign policy cooperation between the EEC nations have become an important factor in East-West relations and in international politics, and its results will be of great significance for our own country.

However, a closer alignment with the EEC and with West Europe does not mean that we will automatically support the EEC nation's decisions or views. We must assess each issue individually on the basis of our own interests and objectives. Issues vary; governments do too -- on both sides of the Atlantic.

If we take, for example, the current difference of opinion within the Western alliance over the view to be taken of the policy of detente, Norway itself has obvious interests to defend. They are that the policy of detente should be further pursued and that the objective is to overcome the division in Europe. Therefore, we must cooperate with the forces which stand for the same policy. This view of the necessity of continued detente must also determine our position on actual conflicts, such as the planned gas pipeline between the Soviet Union and West Europe. Another such concrete question is our attitude toward the peace movements and their goals. They are strong in the West European countries, but they are also growing strong in the United States. However, not all West European governments seem to be very interested in the peace movement's activities.

These, therefore, are some of the dimensions we must include in the approaching debate on our relationship to Europe. A good starting point for this debate is the fact that it can unite former promarketeers and antimarketeers and that it is a debate about our relationship to the whole of Europe.

KIPRIANOU DELIVERS INDEPENDENCE DAY MESSAGE

[Independence Day message delivered by President of the Republic of Cyprus Spiridhon Kiprianou on 30 September; place not given -- recorded]

[Text] On the occasion of the Cyprus independence anniversary I address warm greetings of love and honor to the cruelly-tried Cypriot people. I address to all a message of faith, militancy and hope; hope for overcoming the present trial and for better days to come for martyred Cyprus.

The honor for the achievement of Cyprus' independence, following tremendous sacrifices, belongs to all our people, who, under the inspired leadership of Ethnarch Makarios, rose to spheres of idealistic grandeur and added glorious pages to our history. However, eternal honor belongs to those who gave their lives in order to secure a free homeland for us, those who died on the scaffold of the gallows, in battlefields and ambushes, and as a result of tortures wherever the colonial dynasty tried to subdue the militant spirit of our people and stifle their aspirations. To these heroic martyrs, our people, our country, turn their thoughts with gratitude. By their example they have become models of virtue, a yardstick for human and national values. The places of their sacrifice have become places of national pilgrimage and their example inspires and guides us.

And this is not a mere figure of speech. For, only a few years after the declaration of Cyprus' independence, our people were once again called to new struggles in defense of their fatherland, which was in the throes of foreign-inspired internal rebellion and facing continuous threats of invasion by Turkey. And the period of unrest, abnormality and threats by Turkey, which were accompanied by the bombing of heroic Tilliria, lasted several years until insane people, the treacherous junta and their criminal collaborators, by their antinational coup of 15 July 1974, opened the gates to the hordes of barbaric Attila. A premeditated treachery and an organized crime were perpetrated against Cyprus, the very grave consequences of which our martyred people are still experiencing. I have often said and I repeat that the exclusive responsibility for this treachery against Cyprus rests only with the junta and their agents and not with the democratic Greek people.

On the contrary, Greece is, and always has been, our mainstay in all our struggles, particularly the critical moments we are passing through today. And today I once again express Cyprus' gratitude to the Greek Government, particularly to Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, the Greek political world and the Greek people, as well as Greeks everywhere, for all they have done and continue to do for Cyprus. Their support and solidarity gives us strength in our hard and difficult struggle for termination of the occupation and restoration of our rights.

Eight years have gone by since the perpetration of that terrible crime which caused thousands of dead, wounded and missing persons, 200,000 uprooted refugees and a truly biblical catastrophe in the areas swept by the Attila hordes, murders, rapes, humiliations and violation of all human rights. Eight years have elapsed and we are still looking for our missing persons, while one-third of our people continue to be refugees in their own country. Despite their hardships and the continuing drama, our people have not succumbed and are not prepared to abandon the struggle for freedom, for their rights. Reactivation and progress in the free areas and the endurance and militant spirit of our people, in their struggle to get what they are entitled to, have won universal admiration, and international support is continually growing. And in this direction, the government will continue to intensify its efforts until the necessary conditions are created to force Turkey to abandon her sinister plans against Cyprus and her unacceptable stand. Of course, it is not easy for humanity, which is plagued by so many international problems, to concentrate its attention solely on the injustice being done to Cyprus. However, I am confident that we shall bring this about.

In the 8 years that have gone by many efforts have been made through the intercommunal dialogue to achieve progress for a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem. The framework for such a solution is there and this is the decision of the UN Security Council the General Assembly and the summit agreements. Nevertheless, all efforts have come up against the negative attitude of the Turkish side and its arrogant policy.

We, for our part, have always shown good will, but, unfortunately, there has been no response. We shall continue our efforts for a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem that would ensure complete freedom for Cyprus and the inalienable rights of our people. We are not going to capitulate under any circumstances. We are not going to accept, directly or indirectly, the results of the crime. We are not going to accept partitionist solutions of any kind, or any settlement that would lead our people to new adventures and endanger their survival.

Any solution to the Cyprus problem is inconceivable without the withdrawal of the occupation troops, without the termination of foreign interventions, without the safeguarding of the rights of the refugees to return to their ancestral homes and without ensuring all human rights and fundamental freedoms of citizens. Our aim is to ensure all prerequisites for a free, democratic and prosperous Cyprus. We are not inspired by chauvinism or intolerance.

I firmly believe that in a truly independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, united, demilitarized and non-aligned Cyprus, all its citizens, without exception, can live in harmony, understanding and friendship, and can work together creatively for a happy future. Dissension brings separation and catastrophe. Unity brings peace and prosperity. Our people have gone through terrible experiences. It is time for security, peace, justice and prosperity to come permanently to this tragic country.

On this occasion I address a message of good will to the Turkish Cypriots who are now living under the occupation of Turkish troops and I assure them once again that we cherish feelings of understanding and friendship for them and that it is our conviction that cooperation with them is the foundation for peace and common progress. I also address myself to Turkey and call upon her to show, at long last, respect for international law and the rights of a small, independent and peace-loving state. I finally address myself to the world community, particularly to those who can exert effective pressure on Turkey and who must realize that the protraction of the Cyprus problem and the continuing injustice serve no one's true interests. I call upon them to take, at long last, measures in the direction of Ankara and make it abandon its sinister designs against Cyprus so as to open the way for a peaceful and just solution to the Cyprus problem, for the good of the Cyprus people as a whole and for the cause of international peace and security.

I address greetings to the relatives of missing persons and wish to assure them that we shall not cease our efforts until the fate of their beloved is ascertained. I address greetings to our heroic enclaved brothers who have won our admiration for their endurance and patriotism. I address greetings to the relatives of the victims of our struggle and assure them that their sacrifices for the securing and defense of freedom and democracy will not be in vain.

I also address greetings to our refugees who are in the vanguards of the struggle and would like to assure them that we shall continue to care for them until the day of return comes.

Finally, I address myself to all the Cyprus people and reaffirm our faith in and dedication to the ideals of freedom, justice, democracy and peace.

KHARALAMBOPOULOS DISCUSSES ROLANDHIS MEETING

[Text] In a statement on his meeting yesterday with Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis in New York, Greek Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos said they discussed ways of promoting the Cyprus issue in view of the recourse to the United Nations next March, after the presidential elections in Cyprus.

Asked if they discussed the possibility of convening a conference of Cypriot party leaders in Athens, Mr Kharalambopoulos answered in the negative, adding that no decision has yet been made. He said: The idea has merely been expressed. The Greek foreign minister will address the UN General Assembly today and hold separate meetings with the UN secretary general and the General Assembly president.

ROLANDHIS MEETS WITH SFRY, UK, INDIAN MINISTERS

[Text] Within the framework of his contacts at UN headquarters, Foreign Minister Rolandhis met with his Yugoslav counterpart, Mr Mojsov. During the meeting, which was cordial and friendly, they discussed the Cyprus problem, questions connected with the Nonaligned Movement and international problems to be debated by the UN General Assembly. Mr Rolandhis also met with Irish Foreign Minister Collins. They discussed the Cyprus problem, questions connected with Cyprus-EEC relations as well as international problems and bilateral relations between Cyprus and Ireland.

Late in the evening the foreign minister met with his Indian counterpart, Mr Rao. During their meeting they reviewed the latest Cyprus developments and discussed questions connected with the Nonaligned Movement. As is well-known, the next nonaligned summit conference will take place in India in 1983.

Mr Rolandhis also met with British Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Pym and discussed with him the Cyprus problem at present. They also discussed the question of university fees for Cypriot students in Britain and the need for the British authorities' special streatment of them.

Denktas is expected to leave for New York next week to meet with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar.

PAPANDREOU ANNOUNCES JUDICIAL REFORM MEASURES

NC010939 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2200 GMT 30 Sep 82

About the cleansing of justice, the prime minister said that the process of investigating the charges, particularly those included in the Papakarias report [on the behavior of members of the Greek judiciary during the junta] is proceeding at a fast pace and that the Papakarias report will be released, with the pertinent findings. He also said that voluntary retirement of justices will be institutionalized and that the institution of arbitration is being reformed. Mr Papandreou also announced measures concerning the penitentiary system and the legal profession.

Mr Papandreou said that, with the measures which will be completed during the coming 3-year period, the government will have brought about a deep change in justice so that it may be independent, effective and crystal clear, a true bastion of democracy.

ALTERNATE ECONOMY MINISTER ON TRADE EXCHANGES

[Text] Alternate National Economy Minister Ioannis Pottakis has stated that, within the framework of the multidimensional foreign policy, our country's economic relations are being further promoted with Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Libya and Kuwait.

More speficially, an economic cooperation protocol will be signed with Czechoslovakia. The protocol, among other things, provides for a doubling of trade exchange, the building in Greece of a lignite gasification unit and the establishment of mixed units [as heard] in the sectors of manufacturing trolleys, tractors, bicyles, excavators and so forth.

Through its official in charge of foreign trade, Switzerland has shown interest in the establishment of technology units with their exports directed to the Arab countries.

At the same time, Libya is interested in supplying Greece with oil and in the establishment of a mixed canning enterprise whose production will be absorbed by the Libyan market.

On Saturday, Mr Pottakis will leave for Sofia at the head of a Greek delegation. In Bulgaria, among other things, Mr Pottakis will discuss the use of Nestos River waters, the building in Greece of a unit for the processing of fruits and matters pertaining to the exchange of electric energy.

Finally, a Greek delegation will leave for Kuwait on Monday to prepare the discussions which Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou will hold there.

FOREIGN MINISTRY ON TURKMEN-SHULTZ MEETING

TA301115 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in New York to attend the UN General Assembly meetings, met with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz yesterday. In a statement after the meeting, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Nazmi Akiman said that relations between the two countries were reviewed at the meeting and that views were exchanged on the Middle East problem. Noting that the defense cooperation issue within the framework of relations between the two countries was dwelt upon, Akiman said that the United States recognized Turkey's importance for the defense of the West and that it wanted to assure Turkey on the issue. Akiman added that the two ministers expressed the view that the cooperation between their countries is based on mutual trust.

Akiman said that the Cyprus issue is on the agenda of the UN General Assembly this year but that no preparations have yet been made for its discussion by any committee. Akiman concluded by saying that during the NATO foreign ministers meeting to be held in Montreal on 2 and 3 October, Turkmen will meet with Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs Ionnis Kharalambopoulos. Turkmen met yesterday with Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs Emilio Colombo and Syrian Minister of Foreign Affairs 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam.

A Turkish radio and television correspondent in Washington reports that Turkmen will address the UN General Assembly tomorrow.

COMMERCE MINISTER LEAVES FOR TALKS IN TUNISIA

TA301113 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk has left for Tunisia to participate in the Turkish-Tunisian joint economic committee meetings there. In a statement at Yesilkov Airport before his departure, Canturk said that a protocol on the economic cooperation between the two countries will be signed at the end of the committee meetings. Noting that beneficial talks will be held, aimed at further developing the economic relations between Turkey and Tunisia, Canturk added that an agreement on the export of some 100,000 tons of wheat or flour will probably also be signed. Stating that he will also hold contacts concerning various investments by the private sector during his visit, Canturk added that work is continuing to establish, jointly with Tunisia, a compressor factory and a marketing firm.

Canturk will return to Turkey on 7 October.

INVESTIGATION INTO DEATH OF TURKS IN LEBANON

NC300930 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 26 Sep 82 pp 1, 11

[Text] Tel Aviv, (HURRIYET) -- We are going to obtain information from the 6th Fleet on the developments in Lebanon, and particularly in Beirut.

U.S. intelligence officers landing in Beirut will provide Turkey with information on such matters as "have Turks been killed?" and "what happened to the Turkish Embassy?"

Communications between Ankara and our embassy in Beirut have been disrupted. However, our Beirut Ambassador Gokce [name as published] will be coming to Ankara either tomorrow or on Tuesday to brief the Turkish Government.

The code box and important documents at our embassy in West Beirut have been destroyed. We do not keep any important documents at our temporary embassy in East Beirut.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen told HURRIYET that the Turkish Embassy in West Beirut has been partially destroyed by fire and that it is in a ruined condition. Turkmen further stated that investigations are continuing regarding the Turks said to have been killed in Lebanon. The Foreign Ministry has made representations to the Lebanese authorities and special inquiries have been instigated.

Foreign Ministry Spokesman Ambassador Akiman made this statement: "Our embassy in Lebanon has been abandoned. Our embassy officials found a temporary place for themselves in East Beirut. People may have gone in and out of our abandoned embassy during the incidents. The reports carried by our press regarding the condition of our fellow citizens in Beirut have been communicated to our embassy officials through Damascus. For obvious reasons, the Beirut authorities have been unable to investigate the death incidents in Beirut. The initiative of our diplomats has gone unanswered. We will undoubtedly make all the necessary representations to the Lebanese authorities when the incidents are truly verified."

From now on, Turkey will obtain information from the new security forces in which U.S. troops are also participating. The UN observers and U.S. intelligence officers will communicate their information to the United States, NATO and the UN General Secretariat. It is through these channels that Turkey will obtain information regarding happenings in Beirut. It is rumored that the United States has instructed its intelligence officers to find out whether Turks in Beirut were killed or not. If this is confirmed, Turkey will be able to bring home the corpses through the Office of the Special Representative.

UNIVERSITY LECTURER MURDERED IN ZONGULDAK

[Text] Assistant Professor Argun Saylam, of the Hacettepe Medical School of Ankara University, has been killed in an armed attack in the vicinity of Zonguldak's Saframbolu District.

According to information received by a Turkish radio and television correspondent, Saylam left his car to remove tree branches on the road in Alabas, in Saframbolu's Ovacuma Quarter, as he was driving from Ankara to Amasra Quarter in Zonguldak's Bartun district. As Saylam left his car, pistol shots were fired at him by one or more unidentified persons. Saylam was wounded and attempted to leave the scene of the incident in his car, but he lost control of the car within 10 meters and it rolled down the sides of the road. Saylam died as his wife and daughter, who were with him in the car, were taking him to a hospital in Karabuk. Officials reported that an extensive investigation into the incident is underway.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY MEETS WITH LEBANON'S JUNBLATT

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GB"]

[Text] On Thursday evening in Vienna, Chancellor Kreisky met with Druze leader Walid Junblatt, chief of the Progressive Socialist Party of Lebanon, for a talk on the Lebanon crisis. Junblatt is currently making a 2-week information trip through West Europe within the framework of the Socialist International. Junblatt is chairman of the Lebanese "national movement," a pool of several leftist parties including, among others, his "Socialist Party."

A chancellery source has described reports that Kreisky would meet with PLO chief 'Arafat during his visit to Tunisia in October as speculation for the time being. The source does not, however, exclude the possibility of such a meeting. Kreisky will pay an official visit to Tunisia 9-11 October, which will primarily be devoted to economic talks. The visit had originally been scheduled for March 1981, but had to be called off because Kreisky fell ill. A few weeks ago, a planned meeting between 'Arafat and Kreisky in Vienna was called off.

PRC EMBASSY GIVES RECEPTION ON ANNIVERSARY

[Text] On the occasion of the 33d anniversary of the proclamation of the PRC (on 1 October), Ambassador ex-Minister Wang Shu and Mrs Yuan Jie gave a reception yesterday which was attended by Science Minister Hertha Firnberg and Justice Minister Christian Broda, former Ministers Ingrid Leodolter, Erich Bielka and Georg Prader, Austrian Socialist Party International Secretary Walter Hacker, National Bank Chairman Stephan Koren, General Wilhelm Kuntner, Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Yefremov and other prominent figures of political, diplomatic, cultural and economic life. Attention was drawn to the positive development of mutual relations since the opening of diplomatic relations between Vienna and Beijing 11 years ago.

NETHERLANDS

VAN AGT REBUTS ANTILLES 'COLONIALISM' CLAIM

PM011417 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 29 Sep 82 p 3

[ANP dispatch: "Van Agt Dismisses Venezuelan Criticism"]

[Text] New York -- Prime Minister van Agt reacted "somewhat peremptorily" to a statement by the Venezuelan foreign minister in New York on Monday [27 September]. The latter said that the situation in the Antilles must be ended.

Without mentioning any area specifically, Venezuelean Foreign Minister Zambrano said that there are "no valid arguments for any European nation to have territory, authorities or troops in America." "Colonialism and neocolonialism have had catastrophic results for peace. We take the view that the colonialist bridgeheads which still exist in our part of the world must be evacuated as quickly as possible," Zambrano said.

Referring to the statement, Van Agt said that he had spoken briefly with Zambrano about the future. He said that ties between the Netherlands and the Antilles will continue to exist as long as the population wants them and that there will be immediate changes as soon as the population indicates a desire for them.

D'66 LEADER SETS TERMS FOR CABINET ROLE

[Unnamed "own correspondent" report: "Democrats '66 Will Only Join Cabinet With 'Active Security Policy'"]

[Text] The Hague -- Democrats '66 [D'66] parliamentary group chairman Brinkhorst takes the view that his party could only take part in a cabinet which could pursue an "active security policy." For D'66, this means the most effective way of preventing the deployment of the cruise missiles. It also means that careful account must be taken of progress in U.S.-Soviet negotiations.

Brinkhorst made this announcement after calling on government formation negotiations leader Van Kemenade. The D'66 parliamentary group leader added that he had no illusions that his party would be able to play a mediating role between the Labor Party [PvdA] and the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA]. Today the role of D'66 is a most modest one.

Brinkhorst showed understanding of the PvdA's stance of rejection, [of the deployment of cruise missiles in the Netherlands] but said that the stance was inappropriate since it did not take into consideration the progress of the negotiations in Geneva. He said that he expected the Labor Party to show the same understanding of the D'66 standpoint, which he said was very different from those of the CDA and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy, which are actually in favor of deployment.

The D'66 parliamentary group chairman said that he had little interest in hairsplitting between passive and active preparations for possible future deployment. "Town and country planning is not the same as a security policy," Brinkhorst said.

In the meantime, negotiations leader Van Kemenade has arranged detailed briefings by Ministry of Defense experts on the nature of these preparations. On the peace and security issues, negotiations leader Van Kemenade intends to present a "discussion paper" to the three negotiators of the PvdA, CDA and D'66 -- Den Uyl, Lubbers and Brinkhorst. He will hold further talks with them on the basis of this document.

Van Kemenade is using the same procedure in connection with socioeconomic problems. He then transforms the remarks and objections of the negotiators into "definitive documents." The government formation negotiations leader will probably publish these documents on Wednesday [29 September]. The parliamentary parties will then have to announce their views on these documents. This will probably happen on Friday [1 October].

KOHL MAKES STATEMENT ON ELECTION, POLICY GOALS

[Text] Bonn, 1 Oct (DPA) -- The new federal chancellor, Helmut Kohl, who was congratulated in front of the television cameras by his wife Hannelore with a kiss, described his election in the Bundestag as head of government of the Federal Republic as a "moving moment for me personally." Kohl said that the first and most important task now is to restore the awareness of the people of the Federal Republic of their own strength. This means boosting the economy, halting unemployment and "normalizing conditions" in general. Kohl stressed that this is, above all, an intellectual and moral challenge. "If we concentrate on it, we can do it."

Kohl gave the assurance once again that the intention is to have the new elections take place on 6 March which was agreed upon by the CDU/CSU and the FDP. He sticks to his intention, in view of the difficult economic situation, to fulfill important tasks immediately and then to submit himself to elections. "I have absolutely no fear of the voter," he said. At the same time, he emphasized once again that it had been completely legitimate, from a moral standpoint, to elect a new chancellor from the Bundestag and to form a new government. "But I want the vote of the elector." He is convinced that a correct path, in accordance with the Constitution, will be found.

Kohl called the Bundestag debate on the vote of confidence a "great day in parliamentary history," in view of the manner in which people spoke with each other in spite of all contradictions. When living democracy presents itself in this way, it is something great for a free country. Referring to the FDP deputies who spoke against him, Kohl said that respect for those with other political opinions is a part of political culture.

Kohl further announced that as federal chancellor he will pursue policies of the middle line. He sees himself in the line of CDU Chancellors Konrad Adenauer, Ludwig Erhard and Kurt Georg Kiesinger. Policies of the middle mean no new hostile entrenchment of positions. He wants to fight for political forces acting together and not against each other. The future of the Federal Republic is not to be found in extremes but in the middle.

Frau Kohl, who followed the debate from the diplomats gallery, said in answer to reporters' questions that they had been hours of enormous tension for her. However, she had not doubted for a second that there would be a positive result. One of Kohl's sons said he was "madly" delighted that his father had become federal chancellor. "But first of all, he is my father, then comes his job."

Interview on Major Issues

[Excerpts] Bonn, 3 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl wants fresh elections next spring, not only on a national level, but also on a regional level in Hesse and Hamburg. There would also be fresh elections in Schleswig-Holstein and Rhineland-Palatinate, which are already planned in any case. "I think this is an offer which should be accepted enthusiastically by many who are now on the streets demanding new elections," Kohl said in an interview on Second German Television on Sunday.

It is scandalous that demands for fresh general elections are being made in Hamburg of all places. "We have a government capable of acting there with a clear majority in the assembly," Kohl said. There is no reason to fear fresh elections if the Hesse results are applicable on a national level.

In the interview, Kohl regarded foreigners as the most important legal and domestic problem, whereby he supports a reduction in the "excessive" number of Turkish citizens in the FRG. This has to be carried out in a humane way.

His savings measures are based on sacrifices by a broad section of society. There is no other choice. On the question of why there are no heavier cuts in subsidies, Kohl again referred to social reasons. He would be indicating medium- and long-term solutions in his government statement. "At present, the revival of the performance motive is of paramount importance." He does not believe that people's happiness in the FRG depends on whether they work 40 hours or less.

Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl sees "clear differences" compared with the policy pursued hitherto in relations with the GDR. He wants to bring together as many people as possible, and not conduct a policy of separation. "But we want to conduct an honest policy, and having an honest policy means that those who really want peace cannot deny that orders to shoot on sight and the Wall are a continuing reproach against peace."

Kohl gave assurances that he wants to talk to SED General Secretary Erich Honecker "at the earliest favorable opportunity," but would discuss issues as a patriotic German. This means bringing concessions and reciprocal concessions into a more sensible relationship. The federal chancellor avoided the question of dates. He would first have to brief himself on the facts, since at present he only has as much knowledge as newspaper readers.

Kohl stated that paramount foreign policy tasks are first, to provide a new impetus for European unity, and second, the reestablishment of friendly and partner-like relations with the United States. They have been subjected to much friction. Contradictory interests are only natural and had arisen repeatedly since Adenauer's period, but the SPD, as the major element in the former government, had regarded Washington and Moscow as equally distant partners. He stood firmly in the Western alliance, but both East and West had to recognize that the Germans are reliable partners.

Referring to the dispute over the gas pipeline, Kohl spoke in favor of adhering to concluded agreements, but also regretted that the Americans themselves had only said "yes/no." [as received] He would however do everything he could to find a mechanism for reliable consultations which could in the future, prevent a drifting apart of this nature. On the disarmament issue, Kohl said he fully supports the NATO dual decision.

CSU'S STRAUSS CONGRATULATES KOHL ON ELECTION

[Text] Munich, 1 Oct (DPA) -- Franz-Josef Strauss, CSU chairman and Bavarian minister-president, congratulated by telegram newly-elected Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl immediately following the counting of votes in the Bundestag. "With your election as federal chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, the way is at last clear for a new political beginning, which our people need in order to be led out of the deepest domestic and foreign policy crisis of the country's history since the war."

"The chance of a new political beginning is for the CDU/CSU an enormous challenge and a responsibility to which we must fully dedicate ourselves," Strauss continued in his telegram, which was published by the CSU land executive and began with the words "Dear Helmut" and ended with "your Franz-Josef." "Together we have fought for the turning, now we must realize it in close cooperation," the CSU head wrote. He wished Kohl "from my heart and in friendly solidarity," strength, health and "God's blessings."

During the debate and voting on the constructive vote of no confidence against Helmut Schmidt, Strauss was on a visit to Oberfranken.

CDU'S GEISSLER VIEWS BUNDESTAG DISSOLUTION

[Text] Frankfurt, 3 Oct (DPA) -- According to CDU Secretary General Heiner Geissler, the new CDU/CSU and FDP coalition will be preparing the constitutional conditions necessary to dissolve the Bundestag in time for fresh elections on 6 March. His party regards this date as suitable. "However, we cannot dictate to the federal president with regard to the date, Geissler said on Sunday in the "Frankfurt Talks" program on Hesse radio. The new government under Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl can "only do what is most necessary in the next few weeks." In view of the dissolution of the Bundestag planned for the beginning of next year, the CDU/CSU and FDP government will have to concentrate on the most important tasks, Geissler asked for a "fair chance" in this connection. Never before has a government had to "take over such a difficult legacy," and there is therefore no reason for being euphoric.

The talk was made available to DPA in an edited version.

NEW FINANCE MINISTER ON ECONOMIC PROSPECTS

[Text] Stuttgart, 2 Oct (DPA) -- The future federal minister of finance, Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU), expects that the finance and economic policy decisions of the new government will show the first positive results in 1983.

In an interview with South German Radio, Stoltenberg said on Saturday that the burdens inherited by the Kohl-Genscher government are indeed catastrophic and the short term prospects depressing. The change of government cannot prevent unemployment continuing to rise during the winter, nor can it prevent unemployment reaching 2 million in February/March. "But," Stoltenberg said, "if we act swiftly and correctly, we can expect that later in 1983 the first positive effects on growth and employment will become visible and this development can be continued into 1984."

Stoltenberg described the finance and economic agreements of the new coalition as an immediate program. Moreover, Kohl's government statement will open up more long-term prospects. Thus, the entire revenue from the planned increase in the value-added tax is to be used for measures to stimulate the economy and to combat unemployment. At the same time, the future finance minister did not exclude the possibility that in this connection, other legal assets [gesetzliche besitzstaende] might have to be looked at.

An edited version of the interview was made avaiable to DPA in advance.

HAMBURG FDP DEMANDS GENSCHER RESIGNATION

LD020758 Hamburg DPA in German 0503 GMT 2 Oct 82

[Text] Hamburg, 2 Oct (DPA) -- The Hamburg FDP organization has demanded the resignation of FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher. In a motion passed on Friday night by 50 votes to 44, the party organization expressed its disapproval of the way in which the FDP left the coalition with the SPD and formed a new government with the CDU/CSU.

SCHMIDT 'PERSONAL STATEMENT' TO BUNDESTAG 1 OCT

DW011245 Cologne Westedeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0801 GMT 1 Oct 82

["Personal statement" by FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the Bundestag in Bonn -- live]

[Text] Mr President, Ladies and Gentlemen: The social-liberal coalition whose elected federal chancellor today is to be overthrown by a vote of no confidence, was convincingly confirmed in 1980 and given a mandate by the electorate for another 4 years. [applause]

The majority of the voters did not want to call Dr Kohl in 1976 or Mr Strauss in 1980 to the post of federal chancellor. [applause] At his party's election congress on 6 June 1980, the FDP chairman said, those who vote for the FDP guarantee that Schmidt will remain federal chancellor; the voters must know where they stand, without if's and but's: A decision for us and the FDP is a decision for the continuation of the coalition.

With my name also on their election posters, in October 1980 the FDP achieved a ve good election result, and in a joint statement immediately following the elections, the SPD and FDP chairmen expressly endorsed the desire for cooperation and joint responsibility for peace and social progress for the coming 4 years.

Since August last year, the FDP chairman gradually and systematically disassociated himself from all earlier statements. On 9 September this year, I asked him from this rostrum to give a clear answer. This answer would have required just one sentence. However, this sentence -- we firmly stand by the social-liberal coalition -- was intentionally avoided. Instead, 8 days later -- in the Bundestag session on Friday, 17 September -- the FDP made very thin statements to this house and the German people. Colleague Genscher, the people will not forget this behavior for many years. [applause]

Last Sunday, the voters in Hesse had the opportunity to express their opinion on this. Everyone is aware that the disastrous defeat of the FDP in Hesse was the voter's response to the FDP leadership's behavior here in Bonn. [applause] More than three-quarters of our citizens support new Bundestag elections. They consider the way the change is to be brought about by you today -- by secret ballot -- as a breach of confidence. [applause] They are bitter about having to view previous statements as deceit. [applause] The citizens know know that the Basic Law allows you to act this way, it is true, your actions are legal, but they lack inner moral justification. [applause]

Because all of you on the right side of this house sense this, the CDU, CSU and FDP announced publicly that they wanted to hold new elections in March 1983. I have doubts about the honesty of this announcement. [applause] After all, only 3 weeks ago many leading CDU and CSU figures were urgently demanding new elections now, but then in fact carefully dodged a dissolution of the Bundestag which was offered to you. [applause]

This also holds especially true for the CSU chairman. He also withdrew his demand for immediate new elections after the Hesse elections and the unexpectedly poor outcome for the CDU. [applause] Therefore, I address the opposition leader: Dr. Kohl, you know of the letter which the federal president sent to our colleague Binding, which was published on 29 September, the day before yesterday. The federal president says in this letter that at present, he cannot make a final assessment of the procedure you envisage regarding new Bundestag elections in early March 1983. He says that the discretionary decision he was to make in conformity with his duty and in consideration of all relevant circumstances can be made only if a federal chancellor brings the federal president into the game. With due reserve, the federal president has thus expressed his doubts about the constitutionality of the agreement reached by you, Dr Kohl, and Mr Genscher.

Therefore, I think it is very unlikely that you will really bring about a dissolution of the Bundestag in January so as to allow elections on 6 March, because I didn't find one single word on this in the written results of your coalition talks with the FDP, which were recently published by the German newspapers. I didn't see a word about this in the 22 pages.

Dr. Kohl, you want another federal government, and because such a federal government cannot come from a newly elected Bundestag, your earlier announcement of new elections in at least 6 months was very illogical. It was also intented to soothe angry voters, and your untrue slogan about a national emergency is intended to divert attention from the fact that immediate new elections are undesirable for you. However, a government must not be built on vagueness. [applause]

I understand your colleague, Dr Barzel, will speak after me. [applause]. I approve of your applause at this point -- Mr Barzel sometimes has my applause -- but please, Dr Barzel, on behalf of the CDU/CSU, explain without if's and but's to the Bundestag today and thus to all the people, that we will elect a new Bundestag on 6 March and explain how Dr Kohl will bring about the dissolution of the Bundestag to this end. [applause] If the CDU/CSU fails to make such a statement today, this may reassure the FDP chairman. However, you would thus jeopardize the credibility of the CDU, the CSU and the FDP as a whole. [applause] You would thus strengthen the impression that these three parties here in the Bundestag, far removed from the mood in the country, agree on a maneuver which is disapproved of by a large majority of our citizens. [applause]

This change of government you are aiming for affects the credibility of our democratic institutions. [applause] However, other values could also be jeopardized. I want to express my views on this in 12 points:

First, the credibility of institutions and responsible persons is one of the indispensable prerequisites for the viability of a democratic society and a democratic state. If the citizens cannot believe in the honest intentions of the persons acting at the top of the state, they will find it very difficult to believe in democracy at all. [applause] The greater the credibility gaps are, the smaller the ability of the parliament and government to act is. [shouts, applause] However, on the other hand, it is also true that the clearer the moral legitimation of a government is, the greater its ability is to open the citizens' minds and gain their support for government actions even in critical situations. [applause]

I add that the significant word dignity [wuerde] is contained in the word credibility [glaubwuerdigkeit]. [shouts] Our democracy needs dignity. [applause]

A large segment of our younger generation considers the credibility of significant institutions as being strongly endangered. [shouts, applause] Many of us older people find it difficult to understand these critical young people. Some of us, like myself, have learned something in the meantime. But it is important for both sides to learn, and for both sides to really take each other seriously, we must take each other's sorrows and fears as well as hopes seriously and try to understand each other. Without the idealism of the citizens there would be no moral state; without the balance of reason, blind idealism can lead to political romanticism and thus to danger. [applause]

Changes of governments belong to the credibility of democracy. I don't complain, therefore, if the social-liberal government will have to yield its responsibility. I do complain, however, about the lack of credibility surrounding this change and involving this kind of government change. [prolonged applause] The style, the hustle and bustle, and the haste and rush in which insufficient principles of a new government have been put down disclose disregard for the voters. [applause]

Second, the nation understands that its vital interests call for a policy of good neighborliness in central Europe. The experiences of World War II and the division of Germany have created a strong longing in us Germans for lasting peace. German policy must be and remain characterized by the spirit of preparedness for peace and peacefulness.

I add that even peaceful people cannot rely on their own longing for peace being sufficient to preserve peace. Peace must be renewed over and over again. This must be done particularly between those states which mistrust and threaten each other. They must particualry talk to and listen to each other. Partnership is absolutely necessary, particularly between states with contradictory basic systems, interests and ideologies.

Third, we stand by the European Community and NATO. Only together can we preserve our freedom and increase our economic prosperity. These organizations are and want to be organizations made up of liberal and constitutional state democracies; they are characterized by common values. This is and remains, in my mind, the joint approach of all parties of this Bundestag. [applause]

I would like to add that the North Atlantic alliance corresponds to the common interests of the Europeans and the North Americans in the United States and Canada. Only together can they all preserve their security, freedom and peace.

At the same time, the alliance is one of the most important links in German-American friendhsip. We Germans have taken over the individual's right to freedom from the great American Revolution. We are connected with each other through basic values regardless of how different we might be from each other. In such a friendship, mutual criticism is necessary and helpful. The one who suppresses criticism of a friend cannot remain a good friend in the long run. [applause] Whoever doesn't represent his own interests to his friend, can thus lose respect and friendship. [applause] For the very reason that I have been a critical partner of four American presidents and administrations, I profess my support for German-American friendship once more at this time. [applause]

German-French cooperation -- initiated 20 years ago by Adenauer and De Gaulle through the Elysee treaty and their embrace in the Cathedral of Reims -- must remain a main pillar in the policies of both states. [applause] This must be continued no matter who the government chief may be in Paris or Bonn. The extraordinary close cooperation with French Presidents Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand has filled me with great political and human satisfaction. We Social Democrats will continue to act unwaveringly in the future to expand German-French cooperation. [applause]

Fourth, German policy must further strengthen reconciliation with our neighbors in the East. Despite all ideological and foreign-policy differences of opinion, we need good-neighborly relations. The treaties with the East must not only be adhered to, they must also be practically applied and further developed. [applause] I would like to add that this also includes the 25-year economic cooperation agreement with the Soviet Union. [applause] However, the peoples of the Soviet Union, the peoples of Eastern Europe and we in the West have more to offer to each other than natural gas, pipes, etc: [applause] We can offer each other the common experience of the most horrible war ever and -- this is one of the conciliatory elements -- we can offer each mutual contributions to the culture of Europe. [applause]

Also our deep depression over the martial law in the Polish People's Republic must not, and will not impair our will regarding reconciliation with the Polish nation. [applause] Considering the heights and horrible depths of 10 centuries of German-Polish history, my predecessor Willy Bradt and later myself, have initiated a new beginning in German-Polish relations. Honest and continuous efforts will be needed for these relations in the future.

Yesterday, I explained to the foreign ambassadors the continuity of German foreign policy. Dr Kohl, the Social Democrats will most carefully watch that the basic lines will not be bent under the cloak of alleged continuity and alleged reliability. [applause] Yesterday in New York -- the papers here are concentrating on domestic political events and no one is aware of this yet -- at the United Nations where Minister of State Wischnewski pointed out the foreign policy of our state, the FRG experienced an enormous demonstration of confidence by all representatives from all states regarding our foreign policy. I cordially ask you to maintain this capital. [applause]

Fifth, the meaning of our German policy and its innermost core is the preservation of our nation's unity. Both German states are aware of their responsibility for peace. The FRG must not let the dialogue with the GDR become disrupted. We must use every opportunity to strengthen the solidarity of all Germans and to make it a practical experience. We must not disappoint the hopes of the Germans in the GDR. The GDR citizens must be able to feel daily that we do not merely call them fellow citizens, but that we face them daily as their fellow citizens and that we belong to them. The fact that they are citizens of another state must not adversely affect our attitude.

Dr Kohl, I would like to add that your coalition agreement which was published in all the papers contains only an empty page on German policy -- only an empty page. I urgently ask you to fill in this empty page and not to restrict yourself to repeating old formulas.

You criticized my visit with the SED general secretary, but I know that this visit has encouraged millions of Germans to resist the ideology of delimitation of their functionaries. [applause] I will not forget the visit to the Guestrow cathedral surrounded by all the security officials. A church where Bishop Rathke talked to Mr Honecker and myself about the Christian's duty toward peace. It is true that we have to give nothing away to the GDR. Tough negotiations will be necessary in the future also. However, in the future, German policy must continue making the proverbial little steps, so that Germans will be able to meet each other and talk to each other, [prolonged applause] and so that they will experience in practice, belonging to a single people.

Sixth, through the Bundeswher we make our contribution to common Western defense. It carries weight in the sphere of power between the East and the West. It is an element in safeguarding peace that cannot be ignored. So long as no agreement on a reduced balance of armed forces has been achieved, there must be a common Western deterrence strategy. In other words, our Bundeswehr must be able to fight so that it never really has to fight. [applause]

I would like to add that the Bundeswehr meets with broad approval in our country. The obligation to serve in the armed forces, which Theodor Heuss rightly called the legitimate child of democracy, is the necessary link between the army and the people. We are satisfied to see that trade unions and the Bundeswehr have found an understanding for each other. The quality of our armed forces and our soldiers demonstrates that the main thing is not a high military budget, but rather the men, their motivation and their training are most important. [applause]

For the first time in more than 100 years, the German Armed Forces are not a factor in domestic politics. Those who can think along historic lines must view this as inestimable progress. We Social Democrats are proud of having made decisive contributions to this. [applause]

Those who, in contrast to conscientious objectors, accept alternate service, deserve the same respect as soldiers who are obligated to serve in the armed forces. In the interests of young men, it is high time Dr Kohl and Mr Strauss, for the CSU and the CDU, to finally end their internal quarrel, which has prevented the necessary amendment to the conscientious objection bill. [applause]

Seventh, the international arms race is threatening peace. No reasonable peace policy alternative exists to the policy of agreed gradual disarmament and an agreed balance on a lower level. [applause] Neither the West alone nor the East alone can guarantee peace for themselves. A secure peace requires the security partnership of both sides -- partnership with regard to peace.

I would like to add that as a country that has committed itself to neither possessing nor striving to gain its own nuclear weapons, the Federal Government must unwaveringly insist on our contractual claim that the superpowers reduce their nuclear weapons arsenals. [applause]

As a country where nuclear weapons are deployed, we Germans have a particularly vital interest in the Geneva INF negotiations on medium-range weapons. We must follow these negotiations critically and with great interest. If the negotiations should remain unsuccessful despite the greatest efforts by our American friends, we need an appropriate counterweight to the Soviet SS-20 missiles threatening us. [applause]

Negotiations and treaties on arms limitation and disarmament have today become a part of comprehensive strategic concept. Accordingly, the public discussions on strategy which have begun in North America and Europe must not be broken off, rather they must be strengthened.

All governments in the East and the West must deal with the urgent question from their citizens and the question from the peace movements in all these countries as to how the governments want to contain the dangers of the arms race, and when they will finally break out of the vicious circle. The answer cannot lie in unilateral disarmament because it would make us vulnerable to military and political blackmail. The answer also cannot be sought in unilateral arming. [applause]

Eighth, all economies are, at present, in a very critical process of adaptation. We give priority to the fight against unemployment. That is, the fight for new economic growth. Because of its own interest in jobs and growth, the Federal Republic must continue to use its international weight against protectionism which is spreading throughout the world today. For domestic political reasons, neither the Federal Government, nor land governments or municipalities must pursue a deflationary budget policy which would thus contribute to declining demand. [applause] Declining demand will not stimulate investment activities. The Federal Bank must finally make a decisive contribution to reducing interest rates. It has by far not exploited all the means at its disposal. [shouts, applause]

I would like to add that the leading position of our economy can only be maintained if the desire for achievements and the responsibility of workers and their trade unions is strengthened. They must not be weakened; social consensus and the maintenance of a stable social security network as the expression of a unified society are inevitable prerequisites in this respect.

We chose a middle road between two extreme economic theories which are actually being tried out in some Western states. We neither pursued an inflationary extension of state credits nor a deflationary policy of reduction. This has paid off: Our balance of payments is solid; our currency is stable; price increases in the Federal Republic are the lowest in the European Community, while our real income is the highest. [applause] I warn against the consequences of a deflationary policy.

According to their published agreements, the CDU/CSU and FDP want to cut budgets and thus decrease or lower general demand. They want to cut taxes for the economy, although the tax situation for enterprises today is the most favorable since the currency reform. [applause] The supply-side policy is to be copied. It will -- as in America, where it was attempted 2 years earlier -- lead to further unemployment. [applause] The situation will not be improved by the plan of the CDU/CSU and FDP to offset tax advantages through a turnover tax increase to which everybody will be subjected -- an increase, Ladies and Gentlemen of the CDU, which you denied us early this year with the justification that it was allegedly harmful to the economy. [applause]

The monster of a compulsory loan increases absolutely unnecessarily national indebtedness, something about which you have complained so loudly. [applause] Economically, the compulsory loan doesn't make sense; it is a structure which has as its only aim, helping save the face of the former economics minister. [applause] The general aim of your publicly outlined finance and economic policies is wrong. At best, it can touch off a short, false boom which will be followed in a few months by increased unemployment. [shouts] Yes, I understand that you already want to take precautions against such a case by holding the Social Democrats responsible for this, against your better knowledge. The critical citizens, however, will see through your intention to create evil myths. [shouts, applause]

Ninth, we all sense that millions of people in the West, in the communist countries and in the Third World are becoming increasingly concerned about their natural environment. Every politician and manager of an enterprise must develop a justifiable balance between economic and ecological interests in each individual case. Even if this is disagreeable, those who want secure jobs in the future must consider their effects on the environment. [applause] Those who defend the right to a viable environment must at the same time provide jobs which are also viable. [applause]

I would like to add that environmental protection is one of the essential areas of social-liberal agreement. In the CDU/CSU-FDP coalition paper, I have seen almost nothing about this. Does the FDP leadership intend to totally forget its environmental policy program? The protection of the natural environment requires international efforts. Treaties are necessary if the extermination of the fish resources in the world's oceans, the increase of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and the spread of sulphuric acid rain are truly to be prevented. [applause]

Tenth, throughout the world, economic stagnation or too-small growth is jeopardizing the financing of social security systems. Therefore, the dynamic activity of these systems must be limited. However, this must not go so far that the risks in life are shifted back to the individual and the principle of unity with those who are weak must not be cancelled. [applause] I would like to add that we have the highest real pensions and almost the highest social security benefits in Europe. They should not and must not be curtailed more than is indispensable for financial reasons. A curtailment for ideological reasons is in no way justified. [applause] We Social Democrats warn about a redistribution from below to above. [applause]

You want to create burdens for tenants to the advantage of the landlords and homeowners. At the same time, you want to cut housing allowances [wohngeld] and at the same time, educational opportunities are to be reduced and curtailed. Social welfare recipients will have to make more sacrifices than solvent wage earners. The protest by the trade unions against this is very understandable. [applause]

We Social Democrats consider the supplementary levy to be an appropriate instrument of social justice. However, if those who are better off financially are at a later date to get back the compulsory loan which you invested -- by the way, Graf Lambsdorff, what an extremely market-economic instrument this compulsory loan [shouts, applause] -- if this loan from those who are better off is to be repaid at a later date; whereas ultimately the sacrifices of students and apprenticies, of social welfare recipients, the sacrifices of pensioners and housing allowance recipients as well as of family allowance recipients will never be repaid, then this has nothing to do with social equality. [applause] What is more, you even want to retain -- and not even reduce at least -- the advantage for married couples with high incomes which results from tax splitting and amounts to up to DM15,000 every year.

Eleventh, the Basic Law binds our state to ensure justice. Necessary sacrifices are morally and politically justified only if they are fairly distributed, that is, if everyone is affected in accordance with his economic ability. We Social Democrats will oppose all attempts to curtail social justice and replace it with the principle of elbowing one's way through. [applause]

Twelfth, human society needs to have internal liberties. The quality of our democracy is decided, first of all, by the respect for the freedom and dignity of others. That is, by the degree of internal freedoms we really practice and preserve; without, freedom experienced in life there can be no political culture. [applause]

I want to add that I was recently asked to describe the feelings I had during the extended kidnapping Hans-Martin Schleyer and the crimes connected with it.

The person who asked me this question seemed to find it necessary to ask me whether at the time we had been guided by the raison d'etat -- I suppose I also answered on behalf of the CDU/CSU and the FDP colleagues who cooperated in the matter. In reality, our actions were not guided by the raison d'etat, but by our basic values and by the necessity to defend the internal freedom of our body politic, which we can only defend through firmness toward its enemies and those who despise it. [applause] The free society, the open society has millions of advocates and defenders.

I quote from the Freiburg theses of the FDP. This new phase was written and agreed on a good 10 years ago. This new phase of democratization and liberalization -- in the original sense of these words and not in the sense which today is often misused -- originates from a changed understanding of freedom which opens up to modern liberalism the new political dimension of liberalism which is no longer only democratic, but also social. What is important is not only formal guarantees but social changes in everyday reality. We Social Democrats still agree with that. [applause]

However, the intended personnel changes in the office of the minister of the interior are bound to create concern, just as much as the almost total absence of a justice and interior policy in your coalition agreement. [applause] Most young people are aware of our state's liberal policy, although they by no means agree with everything that happens in our state -- we don't either, and you do even less. However, there are also groups which underrate the value of freedom.

We don't want to put the new group which now will move into the Hesse land diet in guarantee, but the spokesmen of the Greens must know that the free democratic order is not to be disposed of. [applause] It must become clear to them that democracy cannot tolerate violence as a means of enforcing a political goal, [applause] and that democracy must offer resistance to the use of force. Coming out for changes and reforms is a right that young citizens have by God, just like us here in the Bundestag. But they can only do this legitimately to the extent they avow, without if's and but's, parliamentary democratic responsibility. [applause]

In conclusion, Ladies and Gentlemen, with the growing economic and social difficulties throughout the world, we Social Democrats over many years have persistently and continuously pursued our course of balance between the contrasting interests. Some 8 1/2 years ago I introduced the theses I read to you today into the coalition negotiations in similar words, just as the coalition partners at the time introduced their ideas, and on this basis a joint course was shaped. These theses which held true at the time also hold true for the present as well as for the foreseeable future. [applause]

I know that many loyal liberals inwardly say yes to our, to my, course. In recent days thousands have written me and sent me telegrams to express this. I have reason to feel political and personal ties with many men, and above all, women in the FDP -- my respect for the brave women of the FDP faction [applause] -- I have reason to feel political and personal ties with many men and women in the FDP with whom I have worked since 1969 together with Willy Brandt and Herbert Wehner. Our common political and human interests which have developed here cannot be eliminated through technical maneuvers. [applause] They will continue to exist and we will certainly also experience them again. [applause]

I have served the social-liberal coalition for 13 years. I have done so out of my conviction and with inner satisfaction because I knew that this was a necessary service for our country and the divided nation. [applause]

I have served our country, our state in various offices. I have thus gained a lot of political experience and experience of life. I am grateful to those who called me to these offices and to those who helped me in my service.

Today, however, we Social Democrats look forward. We know that millions of workers base their hopes on the SPD as the force which will unwaveringly fight for social justice. [applause] We know that hundreds of thousands of people in the teaching and writing professions, artisans, independent entrepreneurs, people in helping and healing professions, in artistic professions have given their confidence to our liberalism. [applause] We know that not only millions of young people but also millions of old people have achieved more equal opportunities thanks to us; and that they continue, therefore, to count on us Social Democrats. [applause]

A final word: I know that this hour is being watched with concern on TV by the Germans in the GDR and also here in the Federal Republic. They all have confidence in our policy of good neighborliness -- and in our peace policy. [applause] We Social Democrats are grateful for this confidence. We will also not disappoint them in the future. Everybody can and must count on our continuity. Thank you very much.

Schmidt Schedule, Activities

[Text] Bonn, 1 Oct (DPA) -- Deputy SPD Chairman Helmut Schmidt, who was voted out as federal chancellor on Friday, is now to turn to work in the SPD. Schmidt is spending the first weekend after his fall in his house in Hamburg. On Saturday evening, party friends want to organize a torch procession to his home.

On Monday, Schmidt returns to Bonn. That afternoon, in the federal capital, he will formally hand over the chancellorship to his successor, Helmut Kohl. He will also discharge his minister of state, Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, as well as the secretaries of state, Klaus Boelling (press office) and Gerhard Konow (chancellor's office). In the evening, Schmidt will take part in a meeting of the SPD Presidium, which is to discuss the work of the party in its new opposition role. On Thursday, Schmidt is expected to play a part in the Bavarian election campaign.

[Excerpts] Bonn, 30 Sep (DPA) -- At the end of his 5-year term of office in the Federal Republic, Chinese Ambasador Zhang Tong spoke in Bonn today of "very great" prospects for economic cooperation. At a farewell luncheon in the Foreign Ministry's visitors house, which was attended by leading industrialists involved in trade with China, the 62-year-old diplomat, who formerly held a high military rank in China, spoke in favor of a strong Germany and urged a joint struggle against "hegemony and expansionism." This is the usual Chinese way of referring to Soviet policy.

State Secretary Hans Werner Lautenschlager, who at the moment is the highest ranking Foreign Ministry official present in Bonn, gave an assurance of Bonn's determination to further expand cooperation with the People's Republic of China. Zhang Tong's departure follows by almost 10 years to the day the beginning of diplomatic relations between the two countries. The development of friendly relations in this 10-year period were illustrated by both the ambassador and the host with references to the presence of 1,000 Chinese students and academics in the Federal Republic.

For the time being, the embassy will be headed by Minister Counsellor (Qi Huaiyuan) who at the end of the year is to take over the Foreign Ministry press department in Beijing.

MITTERRAND SENDS MESSAGES TO KOHL, SCHMIDT

LD021444 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 2 Oct 82

[Text] President Mitterrand has sent messages to two West German politicians -- one to yesterday's victor, the new chancellor, Helmut Kohl, and the other to yesterday's loser, the toppled Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

To Mr Kohl, Francois Mitterrand sent his wishes for success and his heartiest congratulations, noting the deepening of French-German relations and looking forward to the personal contacts which will be established, particularly at the next summit at the end of the month.

In his message to Helmut Schmidt, Francois Mitterrand stated that he is convinced that the development of relations between the two countries will not be affected by political changes brought about by the normal course of democratic life in Germany. He also told the former chancellor that he appreciated the close and trusting cooperation which had been established between them, both on the political and personal levels.

KOHL, GENSCHER TO VISIT FOR TALKS 4 OCT

LD031538 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] It is now official. New Federal German German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's first visit abroad as chancellor will be to France. He is coming to Paris tomorrow evening, the very day of the swearing-in of the new government in Bonn. Helmut Kohl will be accompanied by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who keeps his portfolio in the new cabinet. Helmut Kohl will be received at the Elysee by President Francois Mitterrand for a meeting in preparation for the next French-German summit, due to be held in Bonn on 22 October. The chancellor will return to Bonn the same evening.

PS AIDE ON POLICY TOWARD ISRAEL, PALESTINIANS

[Unattributed report: "Jospin: We Have Not Sided With the Palestinians"]

[Text] In an interview published by the French Jewish monthly L'ARCHE, PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin disputes the feeling in some parts of the Jewish community that his party has changed its attitude toward Israel.

He states in particular: "If the Israeli army had reached the gates of Beirut before 10 May 1981, when we were in opposition, and if it had carried out bombing on a massive scale, we would have condemned it in the same way. I am anxious to say that that is probably because we have a different image of Israel in our hearts and minds....

"We have not 'swung' over to support for the Palestinians. For many years, we have thought that there is a Palestinian problem and have accepted that there is 'the Palestinian national fact.' For many years, we have had contacts with the PLO, but those contacts have also been limited for a long time. For example, they have never had an official character before or after 10 May. And that is because the PLO has not removed from its charter the articles which, even now, make provision for Israel's destruction. As for the document produced by the Fes summit, it is interesting but must be examined with caution. What does 'implicit recognition' mean? In my view, when you recognize somebody, you name him.

"We still disagree with the PLO on many aspects of its political methods, but the violent crushing of the Palestinians in Beirut of which some people were dreaming could not be accepted. We supported the French Government in its efforts to exert as much pressure as possible to achieve a political solution to the Beirut crisis and we do not regret that, not even as regards Israel.

"We think it would have been a major political mistake and a reprehensible human action to crush that movement by military means at the cost of even greater losses in the Lebanese population."

MARCHAIS INTERVIEWED BY YUGOSLAVIA'S KOMUNIST

LD011520 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1300 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Belgrade, Oct. 1 (TANJUG) -- "The class struggle in France has not stopped with the coming of the left in power. On the contrary, reforms carried out in favor of low-income workers and citizens heighten the vigour of the struggle to the extent to which "they are aimed against privileges and inequalities in French society."

This is how secretary-general of the Communist Party of France, Georges Marchais assessed, in his interview to KOMUNIST, the organ of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, first experiences of the left government in France [words indistinct] Communists participate together with Socialists.

Marchais underlined that the [word indistinct] government has "taken a number of measures which have already given initial results. The rate at which unemployment grew has decreased, and inflation, although still very high, has remained below the level reached in the previous seven-year period."

Having pointed to the crisis in capitalist countries, which affects France too, Marchais said the measures which the left government is taking in France meet with "significant obstacles and resistance," and especially pointed to economic and political pressures by the United States.

The Communist Party of France, Marchais said, has declared itself for socialism which will be democratic self-management and harmonized with the needs and taste of the French.

The leader of the French Communists stated that now, 15 months after the victory of the left, it can be said that the public opinion favourably assessed the presence of Communist ministers in the government.

Marchais demanded that the U.N. play a more significant more active role on the international scene.

Marchais pointed to the significant role of the Non-Aligned Movement in world affairs. He gave as example, the recent ministerial meeting of the Coordination Bureau of the Non-Aligned in Havana, which submitted highly constructive proposals "the realization of which would be in the interest of all peoples."

Responsibility for the massacre of the Palestinian people in Beirut, in Marchais' opinion, falls on the Begin government.

The Israeli aggression against Lebanon, according to Marchais' assessment, is a fresh proof of the need to find a way out of the Middle East crisis, "Nothing can be solved unless the right to self-determination, to its own independent state, is recognized to the Palestinian people, unless the PLO, as the sole legal representative of the Palestinian people takes part in negotiations," Marchais states.

Referring to relations between the Communist Party of France and the LCY, as well as to the presence at the 12th congress of the LCY (late in June), Marchais underlined that "the two parties base relations on mutual respect, independence and non-interference in internal affairs."

In his interview to KOMUNIST, the secretary-general of the Communist Party of France stated there are the wish and possibility for the promotion of cooperation between the parties of Yugoslav and French Communists.

GROMYKO GIVES EXTENSION ON GAS LINE DECISION

AU010835 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) New York, October 1 -- Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko assured his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo here Thursday that the USSR is ready to grant Italy another period of time to decide whether to go ahead and formalize the initialed contract for natural gas supplies to reach Italy through the Siberian-West Europe pipeline now under construction.

Gromyko and Colombo met on the margins of the United Nations General Assembly under way here for almost two hours.

The Italian Government decided to postpone a final decision on the contract after the military crackdown in Poland last December. It first had until March 30. The Soviets then extended the period to June 20 and then granted another extension which expired yesterday.

In reference to East-West relations as a whole, Gromyko said that they may deteriorate further because the Reagan administration continues to show a strong desire for supremacy which the Soviets will not second.

Speaking with newsmen after the meeting, Colombo said the encounter confirmed his impression of substantial immobility in Soviet policy. According to the Italian diplomatic chief, Gromyko rejected criticism of Soviet policy in Afghanistan ("we went there because they called us"), in Poland ("Polish events are internal affairs which do not concern us") and on disarmament, accusing the West and the United States in particular for the cooling of the detente process.

For his part, Colombo warned that if only lip service is given to detente, no progress in East-West relations will be possible.

Colombo and Gromyko did agree that the beginning of negotiations on theater nuclear forces in Europe (TNF) on strategic weapons (START) and talk of resuming negotiations on conventional arms (MBFR) are a sign of a thaw in an otherwise tense East-West relationship.

But Gromyko did not reply to Colombo's urging that the Soviet Union pursue a less aggressive policy. Colombo summed up Gromyko saying he is a man of stone, immobile in his views.

COLOMBO MEETS ISRAELI, ARAB COUNTERPARTS AT UN

[Excerpts] (ANSA) New York, October 2 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo gathered signs in his talks with Middle Eastern diplomats in New York this week that the time was ripe to try a new approach to settling the Middle East conflict, but peace moves have to be made quickly.

While in New York, Colombo conferred with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir, Egyptian Foreign Minister Butrus Ghali, Syria's 'Abd al-Halim Kaddam and Jordan's Marwan al-Qasim and the PLO's Faruq Qaddumi.

The main concern of the Arabs, Colombo was able to confirm, was that Israel withdraw from Lebanon. The Israeli diplomat showed some "willingness" but gave no assurances.

Israel's hostility to U.N. troops in Lebanon, the Italian foreign minister indicated, will probably make it necessary for the Italian, French and U.S. troops of the multinational peacekeeping force to say on for an extended period.

TROOP INVOLVEMENT IN LEBANON ARRESTS DENIED

[Text] (ANSA) Beirut, October 2 -- An official spokesman today confirmed that about one thousand people have been arrested thus far by the Lebanese Army in West Beirut, for the most part in the Burj al-Barajinah refugee camp.

According to the official account, the army has the task of tracking down foreigners who do not have residence permits. "We do not arrest Palestinians as such, but every Arab or foreigner who is in Lebanon illegally", the spokesman said.

The Burgj al-Barajinah camp was sixty percent destroyed by Israeli bombings in the last few months. It is located in the area under the supervision of the Italian contingent in the multinational peacekeeping force.

Contingent Commander Col. Angioni said "we do not take part in the arrests. Our soldiers have orders to report to headquarters any abuse of authority they are aware of."

TECHNICAL SPECIALISTS TO HELP REBUILD BEIRUT

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 1 -- An undisclosed number of Italian civilian technicians, specialists in fields ranging from engineering to telecommunications and medicine, are preparing to depart for Lebanon to contribute their expertise to the rebuilding of the devastated capital in efforts to be coordinated by the minister without portfolio for civil protection, Giuseppe Zamberletti.

An announcement released today by the Foreign Ministry reported that a senior official from the ministry Department for Development Cooperation will leave for Beirut to confer with Lebanese authorities and study a series of the most urgent rebuilding projects. The mission was ordered by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo in the context of Italian Government initiatives for the people of Lebanon, according to the statement.

The minister for civil protection, in an interview published in today's edition of the Rome daily IL GLOBO said that he was now awaiting a green light from the Lebanese Government before sending in the first contingent of Italian technicians.

"We can be of considerable help to the Lebanese and leave behind tangible evidence of our effort", Zamberletti said and went on to mention the need to rebuild the capital's electrical supply system, the telephone system, roads, sewers and the waterworks. "Rebuilding the fabric of the city's services is better, far better, than sending boxes of medicine or clothing", the minister affirmed.

Many of the technicians were sent to the Italian south in the winter of 1980-81 following the earthquake which devastated many regions and left 2,000 dead.

FIVE THOUSAND MARCH IN ROME PALESTINIAN RALLY

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 2 -- Signs calling on the Italian Government to recognize the Palestinian Liberation Organization and break off relations with Israel were carried through the streets of Rome today in a demonstration marking "national solidarity day" for the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples. A PLO delegation marched with the estimated five thousand Italian students taking part in the demonstration. Its placard read, "'Arafat, we're with you all the way to victory".

Among the speakers at rally in Rome's picturesque [word indistinct] where the march wound up were a Palestinian students representative and a spokesman for the Lebanese left. The Palestinian speaker took pains to stress his peoples' contempt for the wave of assaults on synogogues in Europe. "Ours is not a religious war", he stressed. "We want to live with the Jews in [a] democratic and secular state where everyone has the right to exist".

DC WELCOMES ELECTION OF FRG'S HELMUT KOHL

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 2 -- The ITALIAN Christian Democrat Party (DC) has greeted the election of Helmut Kohl as West German chancellor with enthusiasm, branding the election "a sensational event". According to DC Chairman Flaminio Piccoli, the development was as sensational as it was predictable. "The German DC" Piccoli said, "has the historic merit... of leading the nation from the Hitlerian debacle to a position of extraordinary political and economic weight in the heart of Europe".

The West German Christian Democrats achieved all this, Piccoli said, "with the strength of their popular support and the commitment of Konrad Adenauer, an historic figure in the new Germany".

In his congratulatory message to Kohl, DC Secretary Ciriaco de Mita said he was "sure that the coalition you are heading will forcefully work to better the democratic and social progress of the friendly German population, which you will surely make more secure and firmer in its alliance allegiances and in the process of European unity".

RUMORS OF NEW GOVERNMENT CRISIS CIRCULATING

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 1 -- Fears of another government crisis are creeping through the Italian political world again. The Christian Democrat Party faction which finds inspiration in Senator Carco Donat Cattin has indicated that the tensions between the Christian Democrats and Socialists, the two major partners in the five-way coalition which also includes the Republicans, Social Democrats and Liberals, over economic policy have reached the threshold of a crisis.

A statement released by the faction's wire service Thursday said that Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini "is thinking of closing Parliament by February".

The statement went on to say that the government "has lost control of the economy and can barely.... understand what is happening".

LAW INDUCING TERRORISTS TO COLLABORATE EXTENDED

[Excerpt[(ANSA) -- Rome, October 2 -- Italian terrorist suspects who want to repent for their actions and take advantage of legislation offering lightened sentences in exchange for collaboration with the law have 120 days to do so, according to the terms of a measure just approved by the Rome government.

The government measure extends the term of legislation governing the treatment of so-called "repentent" terrorists for another four month period. The law originally went into effect on May 29 and expired on Thursday.

PRIME MINISTER ADDRESSES UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

LD021020 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1958 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Speech by Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao at UN General Assembly in New York -- live; intercepted in progress]

[Excerpts] Mr Chairman, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, which is so openly contradictory to the legal norms the United Nations is fundamentally committed to observing, and which has been repeatedly condemned in this forum, continues to arouse strong condemnation of the Soviet Union's hegemonistic motivations. The Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea is also a factor of tension. My government associates itself with all the diplomatic demarches advocated or undertaken with a view to the peaceful resolution of these conflicts.

Mr Chairman, it follows from what I have said that the implications of the exercise of the peoples' right to self-determination are of obvious significance in the context of international relations. It therefore behooves the United Nations to impose respect for such a principle, which its member states have so firmly upheld and to which the great majority of the countries represented here directly subscribe. The question of East Timor should be viewed in this context. In effect, within the framework of the peoples' rights that this organization is dutybound to defend, the problem of East Timor and the need for the international community to ensure the exercise of the rights of the population of that territory have, as far as my country is concerned, a continuing importance of the first magnitude.

Portugal, which for the last 7 years has been unable to discharge its responsibilites as the administrative power, has repeatedly stated that it has no claims to the Timorese land, to which it is linked by history in a mutual relationship of human solidarity with its people, a relationship that has continued to this day and is reflected in the acute concern with which the Portuguese nation is following developments and looking forward to a solution in keeping with the international values of ethics and justice.

The Portuguese state has repeatedly stated: Our sole motivation is the exercise of a moral and national duty. Aware of the justice of our case and certain of speaking for the unanimous feelings of the Portuguese state and people, I wish to clearly reiterate Portugal's committed interest in actively cooperating with the United Nations, with recourse to all the mechanisms envisaged in its charter, so that through open dialogue we may endeavor to find a solution that will truly respect the interests and cultural identity of the people of Timor and will enable them to define their collective destiny.

North-South relations are usually reduced to a formal, limited differentiation between developed and developing countries. This dichotomy, however, does not reflect current reality. We have repeatedly upheld the need to recognize the various real levels of development and the benefits that can be derived from this recognition. Portugal, in the North's south, is at an intermediate stage of economic and technological development. Despite being a provider of aid within the measure of its possibilities, it is also a recipient of assistance, which is essential to the process of national development in which we are engaged. Portugal is an Atlantic country, an active member of NATO, a European country and a candidate for EEC membership. Because of its situation, Portugal can feel and understand not only the needs of the developing countries but also the difficulties experienced by more developed economies. Portugal's entrance into the European Economic Communities, which is one of the priorities of our foreign policy, will, we are certain, stregthen our ability to understand both sides of the problem and to cooperate actively in resolving it.

Continued economic growth depends to a large extent on intensifying productive investment, increasing productivity and preserving an open trade system.

Although it should be recognized that the grave world economic situation has not led to a radical increase in protectionism, I would like to express here the Portuguese Government's concern at certain protectionist measures that affect the exports of the developing countries and of the countries in an intermediate stage of development, like Portugal. We hope that the next ministerial meeting of GATT may formulate important decisions contributing decisively to the promotion of free international trade among all countries and groups of countries.

Policies that disregard basic human rights still exist and we continue to witness violations of such rights as a result of local conflicts or situations of instability or intolerance. The system of apartheid is a typical example. Our condemnation stems from the certainty that any form of discrimination, besides being unacceptable from the ethical and human standpoints, is also a negation of progress and culture.

If international stability is to be achieved, states must respect the rights of other nations and those of their own citizens. The United Nations has created a system and institutions to promote and supervise respect for human rights throughout the world. However, the number of cases that weigh on the moral conscience of the nations is increasing. In this context we are profoundly concerned at the dire conditions to which the people of Timor are being subjected and the violations of their cultural identity and rights, caused by the current state of affairs in the territory of East Timor. The pattern that can be discerned in the eyewitness accounts and reports from East Timor is conclusive proof of the moral and physical sufferings endured by the Timorese. Quite recently the problem of East Timor was highlighted in Geneva in a resolution approved by the Subcommittee for the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, which recognized Portugal's diplomatic efforts to rectify the prevailing situation and called for international cooperation in the defense of the rights of the Timorese. Also in such a significant area of international ethics and justice, I reiterate Portugal's wish to contribute to the resolution of the many problems caused by the situation in East Timor, particularly in the broad framework of questions of a humanitarian nature.

I wish to reiterate, Mr Chairman, that with regard to both principles and human rights, Portugal's stand is very clear and amounts to the fulfillment of an ethical and political duty that we cannot shirk lest we jeopardize the values that guide our conduct. Likewise, I wish to reiterate Portugal's firm stand of wishing to see the search for a comprehensive solution to this problem in the context of an open and frank dialogue within this organization.

The Portuguese Government sincerely believes that this organization is equipped to provide a framework for the solution of conflicts, channelling them through dialogue and ensuring indispensable impartiality as a context for the meeting of minds. If the United Nations suffers from deficiencies, it is not to blame. Such deficiencies, so wisely analyzed in the secretary general's report, are ascribable, rather, to those whose interests they suit. This is why when a common will exists the United Nations provides the adequate institutional framework for the search for multilateral solutions. It is for the reaffirmation of this common will that all of us gathered here must fight relentlessly and without prejudice, demogogy or procrastination. The moral force of those who are in the right will always prevail. Thank you very much.

ARMED FORCES COULD ASSUME NEW ROLE IN AFRICA

[Excerpt] Lisbon, 1 Oct (EFE) -- In the near future, the Portuguese Armed Forces could return to assume a new role in former Portuguese colonies in Africa. This return would occur 7 years after Portugal's definitive departure from Africa.

Flavio Ponca, Guinea-Bissau's secretary of state for fisheries, said last night in Lisbon that he hopes that soon the Portuguese military "will be able to defend" the exclusive economic zone of that former West African colony.

He said: "We must have some guarantees that our waters are being controlled, because our wealth belongs to the people of Guinea-Bissau." The important official said that Portugal was "completely openminded" on the subject of "favorable" cooperation with his country.

Ponca came to Lisbon to sign a fisheries agreement with the Portuguese Government. The agreement calls for the creation of mixed enterprises and for bilateral cooperation in the economic, technical, scientific, and professional formation fields as well as in fishery control.

The secretary of state for fisheries was received by the chiefs of staff of the Portuguese Air Force and Navy, General Lemos Ferreira and Admiral Sousa Leitao, respectively, with whom he discussed an eventual participation of the Portuguese Air Force and Navy in patrol functions in the territorial waters and exclusive economic zone of the African country.

BANK GOVERNOR STRESSES NEED FOR ECONOMIC 'JOLT'

LD020912 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portugese 2300 GMT 1 Oct 82

Jacinto Nunes said that stopgap policies must be urgently abandoned. The governor of the Bank of Portugal takes the view that the public must be told the truth, must be given a jolt, as he put it. We must give up our seafood and our cigars, he said metaphorically, adding that the government must present a package of restrictive measures even before the local government elections or we shall be in trouble.

AUTHORITIES ARREST SENIOR MILITARY OFFICERS

[Text] The Ministry of Defense Information Office issued the following official note this evening:

As a result of investigations carried out by the Ministry of Defense and the Ministry of the Interior, military officers, accompanied by members of the state security forces, today arrested the following persons: Col Luis Munoz Gutierrez, Col Jesus Crespo Cuspinera, and Lt Col Jose Crespo Cuspinera. Various documents were obtained suggesting that those arrested were involved in activities against the security of the state.

Investigation of these activities is being vigorously pursued by the Ministry of Defense through appropriate senior officers and in cooperation with officials of the Ministry of the Interior.

We have also learned that several of the military officers who underwent prosecution for the 23 February events [1981 coup attempt] and who are presently being held in preventive detention at military barracks were placed incommunicado this afternoon, according to their lawyers. Among those placed incommunicado, these sources said, were Lt Gen Milans del Bosch, Gen Torres Rojas, Lieutenant Colonel Tejero and Maj Pardo Zancada.

The lawyers told EUROPA PRESS that they had not been given any official notification that their clients were being placed incommunicado and that they had learned of it from the relatives of the military officers. It is not known whether this event is in any way connected with the arrests today of two colonels and a lieutenant colonel.

Further Details

[Excerpts] The arrests, according to the wife of Col Munoz Gutierrez, at least in her husband's case, were made on the grounds of an accusation of the suspected offense of conspiracy to rebellion. The arrests were followed by exhaustive searches of the suspects' homes.

Completely reliable military sources have said that the operation is the culmination of an investigation conducted jointly by the Defense and Interior Ministries, on the basis of initial information from the military intelligence service.

Military sources consulted by EFE have said that the arrests produced a large quantity of documents concerning what might have been preparations for a military conspiracy, the extent of which is not yet known.

Though there appears to be some kind of connection between today's arrests and one or more of those tried for the 23 February 1981 coup attempt, the sources consulted declined to comment on the possibility of the two matters being linked.

Statement Issued

["Official statement" issued by Defense Ministry 3 Oct]

[Text] In the early hours of yesterday morning, 2 October, on the suspicion that some members of the armed forces could be connected with a criminal operation aimed against state security, the following were placed under arrest: Artillery Col Luis Munoz Gutierrez, Artillery Col Jesus Crespo Cuspinera, and Lt Col Jose Crespo Cuspinera.

The military officers who conducted the arrests had precise instructions, which were scrupulously carried out, to advise the detainees of the reasons for their arrest, that they had the right to voluntarily remain silent and the right to a defense lawyer to assist them when they make a statement.

The detainees were taken to military establishments in the Plaza de Madrid and were immediately handed over to the proper judicial authority, which in this case was the captain general of the 1st Military Region, who ordered the opening of legal proceedings and appointed an investigating judge to the case, Colonel-Advocate Jose Munez Sanchez. It was not considered necessary to apply the special antiterrorist legislation to the detainees. It was only considered necessary to take the precaution of preventing them from communicating among themselves before they make statements in order to prevent them from coming to agreements which could hinder the subsequent development of the investigations.

At the time of the arrests a search was made of their homes, where documents were found containing the organization and plans for a possible action in the city of Madrid. This action aimed to control all access routes to the city and to occupy military centers. An attempt was also to be made to neutralize several ministerial departments and isolate and neutralize other centers and communications media.

The documents which were found have been handed over to the judicial authorities along with the detainees and are being analyzed and assessed in order to determine the true extent of the plot and the means the plotters had at their disposal. The military authorities have adopted the necessary preventive measures in instances such as this. The judicial steps taken so far have consisted of an initial statement by the detainees, which they made to the instructing judge today, and the procedures he lays down will be followed.

An investigation is being carried out by the appropriate services in order, naturally, to better clarify the facts. It is still too early to give precise details on the people involved and the developments, but as a basic security measure, and following authorization from the Supreme Council of Military Justice, one of the people convicted in the February 81 [coup attempt] trial, has been transferred from the Plaza de Madrid and the normal visiting regime was suspended yesterday for him and several others.

The Ministry of Defense and the military command will adopt the necessary measures in view of the facts and on the basis of an analysis and assessment of the documents obtained, whether they be administrative or disciplinary, without prejudice to those measures which are exclusively judicial and which will stem from open proceedings.

Defense Minister Comments

[Text] Defense Minister Alberto Oliart has made a statement in connection with the arrest of three military officers yesterday in Madrid. This, in brief, is what he said:

[Begin recording] Documentation has been found in [words indistinct] of the first two which reveals a plan for a coup to take place on 27 October. For security reasons Lt General Milans del Bosch has been transferred to the 2nd Military Region. The circumstances are thoroughly known to the Ministry of Defense and the military command and also, as I said earlier, to the Ministry of the Interior as far as it is involved, and therefore everything is under control.

In addition, I want to insist in this case, as I have on other occasions, that among the military, which is made up of tens of thousands in the case of the army, there is the greatest security and control. The people implicated, just as on 23 February [1981], are a tiny minority. The majority of the military establishment is loyal to the institutions and I am convinced it is loyal to the democratic institutions of the king. [end recording]

Party Leaders React

[Text] The Defense and Interior Ministries are investigating the true extent of the coup attempt which was aborted yesterday. The government learned of the plot on Friday night. In the early hours of Saturday morning, according to confirmation obtained by Spanish National Radio, the prime minister and the ministers of defense and interior were studying the situation, confirming that at that stage the coup had no possibility of succeeding.

It is understood that the three military officers who were arrested and placed incommunicado initiated the operation 3 months ago. Their aim was to take over a number of state centers and broadcasting networks on 27 October. Another significant piece of evidence arising from the joint activity of Defense and Interior Ministry officials who aborted the operation, is the capture of important documents on the coup conspirators' plans. Official circles are particularly insistent that the attempt is now completely under control and it is now impossible for it to be carried out.

The three arrested officers, two colonels and a lieutenant colonel, are being questioned now by the military investigating judge appointed to the case. The military judge has to decide within 5 days whether to prosecute, place in preventive custody or release them.

Meanwhile, the unanimous reaction of political leaders to the coup attempt is to describe it as an isolated incident which does not reflect the general attitude of the armed forces, according to Francisco Fernandez Ordonez [leader of Democratic Action Party]. Landelino Lavilla, president of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] also says that the arrest of the suspected coup conspirators is a guarantee of the stability of the democratic system. According to Socialist Javier Solana, the UCD is also responsible for not dealing forcefully enough with the issue. Santiago Carrillo [PCE leader] confesses to not having been surprised by the plot, while another Communist, Antonio Gutierrez Diaz, says that the spectre of fear is once again coming over the elections.

HONDURAN FOREIGN MINISTER OUTLINES PEACE PLAN

PAPER REGRETFULLY RECALLS 1972 EEC VOTE

PM300857 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Sep 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Norway and the EEC"]

[Text] The referendum 10 years ago on Norway's relationship to the European Economic Community made it clear that membership of the EEC is not current Norwegian policy, nor is it likely to be in the foreseeable future. The majority of politicians in our country accept and respect the people's "No", even though the premises on which this vote was based are now highly debatable. It must also be stressed that those of us who hold the conviction that Norway's interests are best served by committed joint cooperation with the Western democracies cannot of course support assertions that it was best that things went as they did. Statements to this effect from former promarketeers can only mean that they have not understood the prospects offered by Norway's participation as an equal member in broader European cooperation on issues which also affect our country.

On the 10th anniversary of Norway's "No" to EEC membership, it must be acknowledged that we are still a part of Europe, both economically and politically. The worst economic crisis since the early thirties is demonstrating how dependent we are on reaching broader solutions to fundamental problems affecting our own part of the world. The majority of people have probably gradually become aware that these problems have an influence on our own situation. If the international crisis turns out to be of a more permanent nature, it will be the major deciding factor for Norway's own development and prosperity.

This is why it cannot possibly be wise of people who ought to know better to say that at least economically it was best that things went as they did in the referendum on Norway's relationship to the EEC. In economic respects, membership is, if possible, even more important than in 1972, seen from the viewpoint of European cooperation. Our trade agreement with the EEC, which functions perfectly as far as it goes, allows us no opportunity to take part in the formation of a policy better able to secure the prosperity of the people of Europe.

The foreign policy cooperation between the EEC nations, the European political system, has recently been the basis for renewed debate in Norway on our European policy. Even though this debate has seemingly softened up the previously unshakable frontlines, we would like to declare that we agree in principle with Knut Frydenlund, who does not think it particularly heroic that certain individuals are now suddently starting to run after the EEC on foreign policy matters. In this field, which more than any other underlines Norway's need for cooperation in an insecure and changing world and which as a result, was a major reason for the Norwegian application for membership, the majority of the Norwegian people have decided that Norway must stand out in the corridor when the decisions are being made. We must remember this view -- and this is something that prominent representatives of the EEC have indicated to us. It is only through full membership that Norway could have full rights of participation in the cooperation on foreign policy among the EEC nations.

Nevertheless, the Norwegian Government will consider it an important task to further develop the contacts already established, which have obviously been of mutual benefit. Beginning this year, Norway has been admitted to regular briefings on the EEC's foreign policy cooperation, but that is all.

The limits which Norway's "No" 10 years ago imposes on real constructive cooperation with the EEC are, of course, something which we must accept and learn to live with. But claiming that it was best that things went as they did testifies to a frivolous treatment of political realities.

PALME PRESENTS SOME MEMBERS OF NEW GOVERNMENT

LD012308 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1700 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] The future premier of Sweden, Olof Palme, today presented some members of his new government. The greatest surprise was caused by the appointment of the famous municipal politician, Boerje Andersson, as new minister of defense. Palme is to be officially appointed new premier in a week's time. According to today's announcement, Kjell-Olof Feldt will be, as expected, the minister of finance in the new government. Ingvar Carlsson is to become deputy premier and minister of cooperation. Anna-Greta Leijon is to have the portfolio of the minister of labor. Most of the new ministers, including the foreign minister, have not yet been named.

PALME URGES POLISH LEADER TO RELEASE DETAINEES

[Text] The chairman of the Social Democratic Party, Olof Palme, appealed today in a telegram to the Polish premier, General Jaruzelski, for the release of the six imprisoned leaders of the democratic opposition group KOR [Social Self-Defense Committee]. Olof Palme also called on Jaruzelski to release all other political prisoners in Poland and said in his telegram that such a measure would be a step toward national reconciliation in the country.

AIR FORCE COMMANDER ON COUNTRY'S DEFENSE

LD012304 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Interview with Sven Olof Olson, new commander in chief of the Swedish Air Force, by Lars Ramsten; date and place not given -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Olson] According to my experience during the years here [as commander of the southern military district of Sweden, called Milo 5] there is no doubt that we feel, I believe more than any other part of this country, both among the military and the inhabitants, the closeness of the rather alert watchfulness that the superpowers have in, on, over and on the other side of the Baltic.

They are extraordinarily large military forces that we see in our vicinity and also hear, figuratively speaking. We are fairly close to an area of Poland. In the days of the Polish crisis, we have experienced a number of submarine incidents; we have numerous violations and near-violations of our airspace in southern Sweden.

[Question] What are you most worried about when you move away from here, from the point of view of your profession?

[Answer] Yes, I understand. During the past 10-15 years we have not exactly strengthened our defense of the country in general, because our economic resources do not permit us to live up to our goals, in my opinion. It is clear that I feel that in the army we have reduced the number of qualified units, brigade units, which at least in southern Sweden, will have to meet an aggressor early when he makes his presence felt. With regard to the air force, I have today in southern Sweden relatively few divisions; 15 years ago there were as many divisions in southern Sweden as there are now in the whole country.

[Question] It is natural that the future commander in chief of the air force say so, but on the other hand, today's aircraft are much better.

[Answer] Yes, but unfortunately the attacking side, whoever he is, is also much better. Let me also add that even in the navy, there are clear reductions in the number of qualified units.

[Question] There was an article in ARBETET before the submarine incident in Blekinge last autumn that earlier you had submarine warning devices deployed along the coast in different parts, but that they were removed because they were too expensive. However, would you not have been glad to have had such devices to give you warning a little earlier before the submarine came so far in?

[Answer] Yes, we would be very glad if we could maintain a watertight defense, to put it a little jokingly, but these devices you are talking about do not have such efficiency in relation to their cost and it was more profitable to take them out. But naturally, we would like to be able to invest more in that area, just as in many other areas.

[Question] Sven Olof Olson, you will now be commander in chief of the air force. It must be a cherished dream for an air force officer.

[Answer] Well, I have been satisfied with all my jobs. I was extremely happy as commander of the military area. I am willing to admit that I had never even gone so far as to dream of becoming commander in chief of the air force, but it will certainly be interesting and enjoyable.

[Question] The biggest task for you will be with the arrival of the JAS aircraft, the new military aircraft.

[Answer] I do not quite share your view because I think that the biggest task, or one at least equally important, will be to see that people do a good job in the present, that they look after those aircraft we now have in the 80's.

[Question] Are the people more important than the equipment?

[Answer] I mean both the people and the equipment we have. We have no JAS planes in the 80's, and the best foundation for there being a good JAS plane is that we [word indistinct] a good job with what we have now. But I share the view that the realization of the JAS project is naturally of very great importance.

[Question] Are you now quite sure that there will be a JAS aircraft?

[Answer] That depends on whether we make those efforts that we have promised to make in all quarters, and I believe that people will make them. The industry wants it because a considerably greater enthusiasm has been created since the political decision was taken in this right direction.

[Question] So there will be a JAS aircraft?

[Answer] I am sure there will be.

[Question] If you had been unsure on this point, would you have taken this job as commander in chief of the air force?

[Answer] It is a hypotehtical question, but naturally it has had influence in that the decision was so easy to make when I was asked.

NAVY, AIR FORCE SEARCH FOR 'FOREIGN SUBMARINE'

LD031300 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] Navy and air force units have been searching since Friday for what is believed to be a foreign submarine in Stockholm's southern archipelago. The defence staff are very reticent about the search, but they confirm an earlier report that warning depth charges have been dropped.

Military exercises having no connection with the search and which have been taking place for a couple of weeks, are continuing.

'Spy Submarine' Found

OW030324 Hong Kong AFP in English 0310 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Stockholm, Oct 3 (AFP) -- A new alert against a foreign "spy submarine" in Swedish waters has been received here while Swedish naval units are carrying out anti-sub maneuvers, Defense Ministry sources said Saturday.

A report said an unidentified submarine was lurking near the entrance to the top-security Ousked naval base.

A defense spokesman refused to confirm a Swedish television report that depth-charges had been fired to drive off one or more intruders.

The Defense Ministry said last month that violation of Swedish territorial waters by foreign submarines had increased considerably during the summer. Five spy subs had been definitely detected in Swedish waters, along with three other "probables."

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU LEAVES FOR NEW YORK 2 OCT

[Text] President Kiprianou left this morning for New York via Frankfurt to address the UN General Assembly and to have a number of meetings. The president will meet with Mr Kolay, the new General Assembly president; with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar; with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz; with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko; with ministers of other countries; and with the members of the nonaligned contact group on Cyprus.

In a statement at Larnaca Airport, Mr Kiprianou said that in his address to the General Assembly he will strongly repeat Cyprus' demand that the UN resolutions be implemented. He stressed that this is an obligation for the international community.

Concerning his meeting with the UN secretary general, he said that they will exchange views on the Cyprus problem in view of the Cyprus debate at the UN General Assembly next March. He also said that they will also exchange views on the course of the inter-Cypriot talks and that he will listen to the secretary general's ideas on further efforts to promote a Cyprus solution.

The president expressed the belief that, in general, his New York contacts will be useful and he will be able to get a picture of the views prevailing today in the international arena, particularly within UN circles, with regard to the Cyprus problem. He added: This will help us determine our future actions in connection with the problem.

President Kiprianou was seen off at the airport by House President Ladhas, who will be his deputy during his absence; by the minister of health and the minister to the president; by an AKEL house member, on behalf of the AKEL parliamentary group; by the FRG ambassador; by the chief of the National Guard; by the Larnaca district officer; and by other officials. The president will return to Cyprus on 9 October.

KHARAVYI ALLEGES PLOT TO MURDER KIPRIANOU

[Text] In cooperation with foreign powers, unrepentant adovcates of deviation and instability are preparing plans for the assassination of President Kiprianou and other political leaders of democratic parties. We have been informed by an authoritative source that the president was advised by phone last week of a plot against his life.

The report was conveyed to the responsible services, which increased measures for the protection of President Kiprianou who, naturally, is aware of the entire situation.

This development verifies the repeated charges of AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou that unrepentant coupist elements now threaten openly that "there will be no presidential elections: and that "there will be another round." Furthermore, the charges attest to the need for increased vigilance so that any new attempt at deviation may be nipped in the bud.

Commenting on the above reports, authoritative AKEL circles also noted the recent discovery of another quantity of illegal arms in Larnaca and stressed that a circuit of illegality exists and operates in spite of those people who mock the warnings of the party's secretary general.

AKEL charges had been received in the past with ironic smiles and comments about "danger-mongering." Life, however, has confirmed in a tragic manner their correctness, authoritative AKEL circles stressed.

In view of the above -- the same authoritative circles concluded -- it is necessary to take additional measures to discover all illegal arms (which according to a statement by the minister of interior amount to 12 thousand pieces, combat every movement at illegality and intensify to the utmost state and popular vigilance.

Security Measures Taken

[Text] Minister of Interior Khristodhoulos Veniamin last night confirmed a report that there was a plan for the assassination of President Kiprianou.

Veniamin stated to our newspaper that such a report had been indeed received and that the security authorities had taken "certain measures" during the past week.

"Finally," Veniamin said, "until Saturday (the day before yesterday), when the president left, nothing had happened."

SENIOR DIKO OFFICIAL VIEWS AKEL COOPERATION

[Text of first of two-part exclusive interview granted to Andreas Kaouris by an unidentified senior Democratic Party official; second part to be published 5 October -- date and place of interview not given]

[Excerpts] Question: What do you believe would be the repercussions on the Cyprus issue of a victory for the Democratic Party (DIKO)-AKEL cooperation in the presidential elections?

Answer: We sincerely believe that Mr Kiprianou's reelection to the office of the president constitutes the best investment for the country's future. We base this firm conviction on the indisputable fact that President Kiprianou has all those qualifications and virtues which are vitally essential for the national, physical, political and economic survival of Cyprus. President Kiprianou is a responsible, consistent and honest patriot. He is distinguished by deep democratic consciousness, militant passion and wisdom.

Speaking, then, about the repercussions on the Cyprus issue of the victory for DIKO-AKEL, and consequently of President Kiprianou's reelection, we should stress from the beginning the aforementioned facts (the president's qualifications and virtues, democratic ruling, security and certainty, and economic stability) which we have experienced over the past 5 years.

These compose the foundation on which our people's physical and national survival, and in a wider sense our very national issue, are based.

So, the victory of the DIKO-AKEL cooperation and President Kiprianou's reelection will have as a first consequence the continued existence of this firm basis for our struggle. What the future development of the Cyprus issue would be is something we cannot accurately prescribe. What we can say now, and what we can at least prescribe, is that President Kiprianou will struggle with responsibility, wisdom, patriotism and consistency for a just and viable Cyprus solution under the UN auspices, on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. He will struggle by fully utilizing the Greek alignment within the framework of a sincere, unshakable and harmonious cooperation with Athens. He will seek unreservedly every international prop that is available, not only in the UN direction, but also any contribution and alignment of foreign countries, regardless of their ideological or political position. In addition to all this, however, probably the most significant guarantee which President Kiprianou offers the Cypriot people is that he will never lead the country to unacceptable solutions or adventures. The weighing of these facts by the Cypriot people, irrespective of political or partisan affiliation, would inevitably lead to the general realization that President Kiprianou's reelection to the office of the president constitutes a vital necessity for the country from every aspect.

Question: Your opponents are brandishing the danger of communism. They also maintain that there is a directorate saying that "Kiprianou is the president but the power is exercised by AKEL." What is your comment on this criticism?

Answer: Our opponents, blinded by their mania to assume power, have obviously forgotten where the true danger lies. They have forgotten -- a particularly important accusation made by them -- the Turkish occupation for which, moreover, they also bear responsibility and are looking for danger where it does not exist. The sloganeering about the alleged "communist threat" has turned into a really scientific method in Greece to spread rumors of danger.

They told us they wanted to "save Cyprus from the communists" and offered half of Cyprus to Atilla. Now they have again remembered the "communist danger" and the "salvation of Cyprus." This time, however, the people will not allow new treason nor will they, through their votes, build bridges for the legalization of the Turkish occupation.

Is there really any citizen who sincerely and seriously believes that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation is fraught with "dangers of Cyprus becoming communist?" It is enough for one to remember AKEL's long history, which is characterized by the wisdom and moderation of its leaders and members, to realize that its cooperation with DIKO is not of an ideological nature. Besides, this becomes crystal clear from a mere reading of the minimum program. The only case of "communist danger" would be if the extreme rightwing prevailed in the elections. In such an event, conditions of polarization and class confrontation would be created, a fact that might force AKEL to advance its ideological approaches.

The power is exercized -- and this must become absolutely clear in a responsible manner -- solely by the president of the republic and the government, as stipulated in the Constitution.

Question: There is the view that a government which ruled out any cooperation with AKEL would be more appropriate for positive intervention by the Western element to the benefit of the Cyprus issue. What is your comment on this position?

Answer: This view could convince only naive people. Even if an extreme rightwing government -- which would exclude not only AKEL but also DIKO and other center and rightwing forces -- were formed in Cyprus, the Western approach to the Cyprus issue would remain unchanged. This is so because, for the West, and the United States in particular -- as is obvious and has been repeatedly stated officially -- the decisive strategic point is Turkey and not Cyprus.

Besides, recent history leaves no doubt about the options of the West and, at the same time, rejects the silly argument that "if we belonged to NATO, the invasion would not have taken place." It is characteristic and we should not overlook it that the invasion was carried out exactly when the coup d'etat took place. Therefore, there was a possibility of Cyprus' joining NATO and ceding to the United States any military facilities it would request. Despite this significant possibility, the United States preferred to allow the development of the entire plan and the realization of the Turkish invasion by virtually making an option between Turkey on the one hand and the dependent juntist regimes of Nicosia and Athens on the other. Of course, since speaking about a "government acceptable by the West," certain circles clearly imply a government under Mr Kliridhis, we should also stress the following: The second phase of the Turkish invasion was carried out during the "presidency" of Mr Kliridhis who, it was rumored, even maintained special links with Mr Kissinger. So, if the matter was not included in the ultimate strategic plans of the NATO circles and Ankara, but was directly or indirectly related to the "ideological positioning of the Cyprus Government, why then, during Mr Kliridhis' "presidency," didn't the United States avert, when they had the power to do so, at least the second phase of the Turkish invasion?

To conclude this issue, we should also stress something else, which is indirectly linked with the approach of the "Western quarters." The options of the DIKO-AKEL cooperation, both in connection with the socioeconomic sector and foreign policy, are such that they are conducive to the positive activation of the Western element toward the Cyprus problem. We are in a position to know that, contrary to the allegations of certain rightwing newspapers, DIKO-AKEL cooperation and its program have not at all displeased the West.

UN TO PROMOTE NEW KIPRIANOU-DENKTAS MEETING

[Telephone report to I DHIMOKRATIKI]

[Excerpt] United Nations, October 3 -- UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar's goal is to hold a new summit meeting between President Kiprianou and Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas so that new approaches may be charted to overcome the deadlocks in the Cyprus problem directly endangering the intercommunal talks.

This is mentioned by well-informed sources of the UN Secretariat.

Cypriot circles preclude something of the kind, stressing that the Turkish side must respect what was agreed upon during the summit meeting between Kiprianou and Denktas.

In the first stage, the secretary general will have separate meetings with the president of Cyprus and with Denktas and after assessing the situation will suggest ideas and means for overcoming the deadlock.

TURKISH CYPRIOT ENVOY REACTS TO LETTER TO UN

TA291134 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Turkish Cypriot representative in New York Nail Atalay has pointed out that the Turkish Cypriot community has equal cofounder rights in Cyprus, adding that a government without the participation or consent of the Turkish Cypriot community can never be the legitimate Government of Cyprus.

Replying to a letter from the Greek Cypriot representative to the UN secretary general, Atalay noted that, through an agreement reached in 1960, the legal Republic of Cyprus was formed with the participation and consent of the Turkish Cypriot community; however, this partnership was destroyed by the Greek Cypriots in the name of Enosis. Atalay said that the arrival of Turkish soldiers in Cyprus prevented the island from being annexed to Greece, preserved the independence of the island and brought peace and freedom to the Turkish Cypriot people. In his letter, Atalay further stated that the imaginary and false allegations by the Greek Cypriot representatives do not change these facts.

TURKS THREATEN TO SUSPEND INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

[Text] According to UN sources, the Turkish side has warned that it would suspend [dhiakopsi] the intercommunal talks if some preliminary agreement is not reached by the middle of 1983.

According to the same sources, the Turkish side has officially conveyed this warning both to the United Nations and at the negotiating table.

The Turkish side has also informed diplomatic envoys of various countries of its plans to suspend the talks after the presidential elections implying that, after the suspension of talks, it would proceed with the declaration of an independent "state."

UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus Gobbi was aware of all this when he said in his recent interview with I SIMERINI that 1983 would be a critical year for Cyprus.

If the talks are eventually suspended after the presidential elections and the Turkish side proceeds with the official declaration of a "state," the Cyprus issue may, according to the UN forecasts, enter a new period of crisis and tension.

DENKTAS COMMENTS ON GREEK CYPRIOTS' ARMING

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that too much medicine is detrimental to the individual, must as too much armament is detrimental to a community. Denktas replied this morning to journalists' questions regarding the continuing armament of the Greek Cypriots. Denktas said that statements made and (?parades) held clearly revealed the intentions of the Greek Cypriots. He added: Everyone is well aware that the Greek Cypriots are arming themselves and that they will continue to do so. I will say one thing. Too much armament is as detrimental to a community as too much medication is to an individual. We will follow the developments.

DAILY REPORTS PAPANDREOU SPEECH TO PASOK CADRES

NC031841 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 3 Oct 82 p 12

[Report on speech by PASOK Chairman and Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou to the party's cadres at the Sporting Club on 2 Oct in Athens]

[Excerpts] Today's pan-Hellenic gathering of the movement's cadres has a special political significance. It is of a critical nature. This is because it coincides with the 8th anniversary of life, struggle and establishment of PASOK, and especially with the completion of 12 months of change with PASOK in the government.

With certainty and optimism, and without any arrogance, we ascertain that our movement -- with the consent and participation of our people -- influences, formulates and determines developments in this country. Our course is visible and dynamic. All the signs of the times show and all -- friend and foe -- recognize that PASOK has a history. It is writing history. It is promising history.

The socialist government of PASOK has completed 12 months of life. This time period allows us to make the first objective political evaluation of our task. The evaluation of our task is not merely for museum or reporting purposes. Government policy is not a straight course which includes the total of some measures.

We constitute a new, historic social alliance of power. We call on all Greeks to overcome their party dependencies and join us. We do not underestimate the other political forces. We do not ignore their role. But...some leaderships believe in an obsolete dogma: that without their presence there can be no change. For this reason, they put forth their own percentage [in the parliamentary elections] as a guarantee of the quality and the depth of the change. They are merely seeking in practice to control developments.

This tune was exhausted before the elections. Unfortunately, however, it has been brought back "in view" of the municipal elections. They have not learned anything.

They should learn that change is not "cut" and "sewed" around a table for summit meetings. On the contrary, it is defined through political action, initiative and the unity of the people inside social areas and institutions. We are following our own, third road, which is different from social democracy and existing socialism.

Our movement was born among the people. We are giving the democratic and progressive forces of the country their lost historical identity and new prospects. In our movement underprivileged Greeks are equally allied. Four generations walk abreast in our movement. We are the hope of a generation that wanted, that could, but was not successful. We constitute the faith of a generation that was taught and has now matured. We are implementing the dream of a generation that is fighting and demanding. We do not have the right to fail.

In the year that has passed, the government of change, the PASOK government, our government, has proceeded with the first great institutional changes which constituted the vision and hope of our people.

Our achievements are:

-- The recognition of national resistance.
-- The abolition of the festivals of hatred.
-- National reconciliation.
-- The law on public administration; combating bureaucracy; vertical decentralization; abolition of plurality in civil service; ceilings in salaries.
--Decentralization; public participation; acknowledgement of local self-government; decentralization of areas and jurisdictions; democratic planning.
-- The safeguarding of trade union freedoms; Law 330; democratic dialogue with the productive classes; first steps for the participation of workers in the administration of their enterprises (public sector).
-- Radical changes in education; new law framework for the higher education institutes; abolition of entrance examinations for lyceums; new method for selecting entrants to higher educational institutes.
-- Health: Central Health Council; the institution of the hospital doctor; socialized medicines.
-- Democratization of the trade union movement; revival of the countryside.
-- Determined battle against middlemen; effective measures for the sale of agricultural products at prices which cover the cost of production.
-- Incentives and purification of the credit system; elevation of the role of small- and medium-size businessmen, credits to productive investments.

We described 1982 as the year in which our economy will pass through "a defile." However, with regard to incomes policy, we have taken measures and essentially proceeded with a redistribution of incomes through: A) the automatic cost of living adjustment; B) the tax scale; C) the emphasis we have given to the low-salaried people; and D) social disbursements (pensions to Greek women, farmers and so forth).

In the 12 months of PASOK government, faithful to our program, we have voted for the civil marriage and the deletion of adultery from the Penal Code.

-- We have purged the judiciary.
-- We have promoted youth's demands: vote at the age of 18; a ministry for the new generation.
-- We are abolishing the cross of preference [in elections].
-- We have established the Ministry for Greeks Living Abroad.

The second year will determine the course of change. We shall proceed with new institutional changes and implement those for which we have voted thus far. The following will begin producing results with popular participation:

-- Orientations for development.
-- The purge of public enterprises.
-- Tackling companies facing problems.
-- Tackling unemployment.
-- Supervisory councils.
-- Participation of workers.
-- The 5-year plan.

PASOK has inaugurated a new, genuine, multidimensional Greek foreign policy. PASOK rejects the logic of Europe's division into spheres of influence by the two superpowers, that is the Yalta and Potsdam Agreements. It rejects the division of the world into two military-political blocs.

For us, these agreements are not valid as commitments. We merely take them into consideration in order to formulate our course through international bipolarity. From within the contradictions of bipolarity, we are trying to safeguard our country's independence and territorial integrity, and contribute to a new international order of things with relations of equality and independence among nations. We are actively contributing to the people's struggle for detente, peace, arms limitation and the establishment of a denuclearized zone in the Balkans, a prelude -- let us hope -- to the denuclearization of Europe. We support the national liberation movements of the peoples against neocolonialism and imperialism, regardless of the form they take.

We consistently follow the principle that Greece is a Mediterranean, Balkan and European country and that, consequently, our multidimensional foreign policy should express this.

Greece's self-centered and independent course should fall within the international, European, Balkan and Mediterranean juncture. We do not accept this juncture fatalistically and passively. On the contrary, we dictate our independence and -- whenever we can -- formulate new positive balances.

Within the framework of European political cooperation:

-- We disagreed with the enforcement of sanctions on Poland -- a position which was progressively accepted by many EEC countries.
-- We supported an opposite position to the composition and dispatch of a peace-keeping force to the Sinai under the Camp David agreements.
-- We called for convocation of the Foreign Minister's Council on Lebanon and the Palestinians with the resultant condemnation of Israel and the recognition of the need for PLO participation in the negotiations.
-- The Greek draft statement of the Ten on the Middle East was fundamentally accepted.
-- Under a Greek initiative, the Palestinian right for self-determination "with all that it presupposes" was accepted for the first time by the EEC summit conference.

In reference to the Middle East issue:

-- We invited 'Arafat to Athens and we diplomatically recognized the PLO.
-- We supported the establishment of a Palestinian state together with Israel's right of existence and security within the 1967 frontiers.
-- Our contribution to the withdrawal of the Palestinian fighters from Beirut was considerable.
-- In leaving Beirut, 'Arafat made his first stop in Athens as proof of friendship with the Greek people.
-- We expressed our full opposition to Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights and we supported all of the relevant UN resolutions.

In the Balkans:

-- We promoted peace, cooperation and friendship among the Balkan countries, with special emphasis on the proposal for denuclearization of the Balkans.
-- We visited Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, where we signed agreements for economic and technical cooperation.

In the Mediterranean:

-- Our policy consists of dedication to and promotion of the conversion of the Mediterranean into a sea of peace and cooperation.

Relations with the Arab world:

-- Development of relations with all Arab countries.
-- Development of economic relations with Algeria, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Libya.

Disarmament negotiations:

-- We promoted the Greek positions on achieving a balance downwards [and not upwards] and we expressed our opposition -- with special reservations in respect to NATO communiques -- to the installation of Euromissiles and generally to any additional nuclear weapons in Europe.
-- We supported the Geneva and Vienna talks and all of the proposals for a moratorium and on the first use of nuclear weapons.
-- Greece's presence in the special UN session on disarmament has been active.

Our strategic goals remain immutable. We are always consistent with our position that Greece should be liberated from the complex of dependence as this is expressed by our participation in NATO and the presence of foreign bases in our country. However, our national strategy dictates the selection of when and how in a way that will guarantee our fatherland's territorial integrity.

In no way do we have the right to mortgage or expose to danger our country's territorial integrity and democratic institutions. Thus, Greece's self-centered and independent course -- for victorious prospects -- falls within the international juncture and the correlation of forces in our area.

Thus, our resultant move demands: multilateral, nonaligned and multidimensional initiatives and an unwavering but realistic policy. We should bear in mind:

-- The revival of the cold war and the danger of a nuclear disaster.
-- The developing contrast between the United States and Europe.
-- The absence of the USSR from developments in the Middle East.
-- The USSR crisis of hegemony in the Eastern bloc.
-- The intense confrontation between North and South on an international scale.

More specifically, in reference to our national defense policy, we must take into consideration the NATO-Ankara-Athens triangle. Our policy on NATO of necessity passes through Ankara.

During the past year the Greek position differed from NATO policy on international issues such as Poland, the confrontation of the coalitions, and nuclear weapons in Europe, with the use -- for the first time in history -- of reservations and a separate paragraph in the communiques.

We are prepared to commence negotiations with the United States on the bases. The existing agreements have a clearly colonial character while, at the same time, they do not contribute toward strengthening our country's national defense. They serve the real U.S. interests in the area.

The negotiations will deal with:

-- The timetable for removing the bases.
-- The duration of their presence; guarantees on our national security; and the greatest possible control of activities on the bases.

The presence of nuclear weapons in Greece does not fall under the negotiations. The Greek Government maintains the full right to request their withdrawal whenever it thinks this feasible. We desire to incorporate withdrawal of nuclear weapons within the framework of a Balkan effort. Our decision, however, is final: to rid the Greek people of the danger incorporated in the presence of nuclear weapons here.

In reference to the great national issue of Cyprus:

-- The dossier of Cyprus will be opened within the framework of the Greek Chamber of Deputies.
-- Our government has repositioned the Cyprus issue with emphasis on the inability of the intercommunal talks to produce results under their current form (dialogue between Nicosia and Ankara) and on the necessity for withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops.
-- A proposal has been made for an increased peacekeeping force, with Greece undertaking to meet the expenditures in order provide guarantees for the Turkish minority.

In reference to the Aegean, I will limit myself to this statement: We claim nothing from Turkey -- a country with which we would like to develop relations of good neighborliness. At the same time, however, we are not going to cede a single handful of our fatherland's land, sea, subaquatic or airspace.

Strengthening the country's armed forces -- our defense potential -- is a prerequisite for both our territorial integrity and national independence as well as for peace in the area.

In conclusion, Papandreou referred to the [PASOK] congress and said, among other things:

The congress -- it has been scheduled for 1983 -- will be the culmination of 8 years of life, struggle and development. It will contribute to the crystallization of our strategy and to the revitalization and the readjustment of our movement's structure.

It will be the course for concentrating our experience, for unifying our strategy and our policy and for fruitfully amalgamating our ideas and our options.

KKE Reply

[Statement of the KKE Central Committee Press Bureau, issued 2 Oct in reply to Prime Minister Papandreou's address to PASOK cadres]

[Text] It is not the policy for unification which is outdated, as Papandreou alleges. What has become outdated and harmful for change are the dogmas about "lots" and "independence," which are now conscripted to serve the municipal elections. The question is not -- as Papandreou mentions -- who controls developments. The question is that developments and, more specifically, the government's policy, have left the course toward change for which the people voted.

Thus, instead of undertaking a specific government obligation to promote the basic goals of true change, the speech the prime minister made today repeats "in view of the municipal elections," the well-known and indefinite promises, and even at this late date looks for the "historic time limit" for promoting change.

The notorious "lot cast for change" was not cast to give a privilege or a monopoly to anyone. It has fallen to the Greek people, who with their unity and struggle will conquer true change. It has fallen to all the political forces which truly want to contribute to the cause of change which the country requires.

KARAMANLIS, PAPANDREOU NOTE CYPRUS ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Tomorrow the Republic of Cyprus celebrates the 22nd anniversary of its independence. On the occasion, President of the Republic Konstandinos Karamanlis sent to the president of the Cyprus Republic, Spiros Kiprianou, the following message:

On behalf of the Greek people and myself I address to you cordial wishes for the progress and prosperity of the brother Cypriot people. Through you I assure the Cypriot people that Greece will continue to give to Cyprus Hellenism its undivided support until their struggle has been fully vindicated.

In addition, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou mentions the following in his message to Kiprianou:

I address to the entire Cypriot people and to their political and religious leaderships the Greek Government's warmest wishes and my own personal wishes for the prosperity and progress of the Cypriots. Specifically, I wish that the Cyprus people's struggles for the maintenace of Cyprus' independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity be vindicated soon through the withdrawal of the foreign troops and the finding of a just solution that will be in agreement with the Cypriot people's desires.

KHARALAMBOPOULOS MEETS WITH SHULTZ IN NEW YORK

[Text] Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos met yesterday at the sidelines of the UN General Assembly with Mr Shultz, his U.S. counterpart, and talked for approximately 30 minutes with him. After the two foreign ministers met, Ambassador Karandreas read the following joint statement to newsmen:

The two ministers exchanged views on bilateral relations and reviewed the international situation. Mr Shultz expressed his appreciation for Greece's contribution to evacuating the Palestinians from Beirut, and in general for Greece's role in the Lebanese crisis.

With regard to bilateral relations, the two ministers agreed that the negotiations on the U.S. bases and the other facilities the U.S. is enjoying in Greece will begin at the end of October. They expressed the hope that the negotiations will be concluded quickly. The meeting has been useful and positive and was held in a friendly atmosphere. From the Greek side, the meeting was attended by Karandreas, Greece's ambassador in Washington, and by Batsikakis, the foreign minister's adviser. Present from the U.S. side were Mr Bartholomew, senior State Department official in charge of the Cyprus problem, and State Department Director for Southern European Affairs (Kleisting).

The joint statement also says that Mr Bartholomew has been appointed special adviser to Mr Shultz and special U.S. negotiator for the negotiations on the U.S. bases in Greece. Mr Kharalambopoulos later stated that the negotiations on the bases will open in Athens.

[Text] A 3-member Soviet delegation, headed by deputy Minister of the Ministry of the Maritime Fleet Beletskiy, arrived in Athens at noon. The delegation was welcomed at the airport by Secretary General of the Merchant Marine Ministry Vasilis Saranditis and Ministry officials.

Conferences will be held at the Merchant Marine Ministry on Monday and Tuesday on shipping issues of mutual interest.

AUTOMOBILE IMPORTS FROM JAPAN SUSPENDED

[Text] The import of Japanese cars will stop following the discontinuation of the issue of relevant permits. According to reports 10 days ago, the responsible committee of the Athens Chamber of Commerce and Industry stopped issuing licences to importers. Japanese cars, however, continue to clear customs because there are still old licences.

Cars from the EEC and other countries are being imported without any difficulty. The suspension took place because the balance of trade between Greece and Japan continues to be unfavorable for Greece.

GENERAL EVREN DELIVERS SPEECH IN BURDUR 1 OCT

TA011134 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has visited Burdur and Egridir. In a statement to the public in Burdur, General Evren said that the administration has no personal enmity toward anyone and that it is taking the necessary steps for the prosperity, tranquillity and development of the nation. General Evren said that all those living in this homeland should view one another with friendship and that disputes and anger should be forgotten.

Turkish radio and television correspondents Muhsin Cifteler and Mehmet Akscy report that General Evren left Antalya for Burdur this morning. General Evren, who was received by Governor Ali Ihsan Utku and military and civilian officials with a ceremony in Burdur, inspected the military units there. Evren later went to the governor's office and was briefed on the problems of the city. Burdur Mayor Ozdemir Bahar presented Evren with the key to the city and an honorary citizenship certificate. The mayor also presented him with a carpet bearing the portrait of Ataturk. Evren later addressed the public at the Burdur Republic Square. He said:

[Begin Evren recording] In my sacrifice Bairam message I said that the Bairam is a day in which disputes and anger are forgotten, peace is welcome and all friction and disputes are forgiven. Therefore, I expressed the wish that an end could be put to disputes among citizens. This is valid not only for the Bairam, but also after the Bairam. We hope that these disputes will not be resumed after the Bairam. We, all of us living in this homeland, are brothers. We are members of the same nation. We have the same blood. Therefore, we should view one another not as enemies but as friends. We personally carry no enmity against anyone. We consider everyone our friend. Our problem is the problem of the nation. It is not our personal problem. We are taking the measures necessary for the prosperity, tranquillity and development of this nation. We seek no personal gains.

Dear Citizens of Burdur, there is a point I always refer to in speeches in various cities and districts. We have to work hard. Here also, I would like to speak on the issue, even if only briefly. We have to work hard and produce a lot. It is evident from information I have obtained in regions I visited that our citizens have really expanded their areas of cultivation. They have increased their production and factories are now operating in an 80 to 100 percent capacity as compared with 30 to 35 percent previously. This is a great achievement. We are very happy because of it. However, we do not think this is sufficient, because in order to stand upright and to liberate ourselves from the pressures certain foreign countries plan to exert on us, we should not be dependent on them. Unfortunately, until now we needed their financial support. We have to produce a lot and export some of it if we wish to free ourselves from this dependence.

My dear Citizens, it is not enough to simply produce. We should also increase the nation's cultural level -- in other words, the education level. When we say citizens, we cannot distinguish between men and women. Our religion is not the dividing line either. Many of the Koran messages address both women and men. Then there is no such thing as men and women. Everyone should be more educated. If the civilized nations are currently more advanced than we are, it is because they have educated themselves. Today we acquire most of our technology from them and we are continuing to do so. If our cultural level increases, we can manage many technical areas on our own. Therefore, I will repeat what I say everywhere I go: You will educate your children. You will not differentiate between girls and boys. [end recording]

Evren went on to request that citizens work hard to overcome ignorance. He said it is the duty of every Turk to overcome ignorance through education. Noting that he had expressed this request to the Afghan refugees who settleed in Turkey, General Evren said that he had told the Afghan refugees that those who did not educate their daughters would be sent back.

Noting that there is no place for blind fanaticism in Islam, Evren said that those who behaved contrary to this principle put the Islamic world in a difficult situation at different periods. Giving examples of ignorant people who fell prey to blind fanaticism, Evren explained that this hindered the development of the Islamic world. Recalling that religious lessons were introduced into primary and secondary schools to enable the youth to learn the requirements of religion from educated teachers, Evren said: If children learn religion from enlightened teachers, they can struggle against those trying to force false information on them. They can then say: No, that is not so; we have studied the issue and it is this way. The lessons of religion introduced to schools are not against laicism. Our understanding of laicism is a separation of state and religious affairs and the noninterference of religious officials in state affairs. We will teach religion in our schools so our children will not be influenced by false myths and information.

On the constitution, Evren said: [Begin Evren recording] Even before the constitution was prepared, while debates were about to begin in the Assembly, many circles were against whatever would be prepared, because they were opposed to the 12 September operation. They knew that the constitution prepared would be different from the 1961 Constitution. That is why they were opposed to it. They are opposed to every single article. Watch carefully who they are. I will not tell you. A person who writes 28 articles -- 28 times -- is opposed to almost every word in the constitution. One would doubt his sincerity. The constitution has not yet assumed its final form. We are working on it. We hope to conclude our work around 20 October. We will submit it to a referendum on 7 November. Now, as you know, a census was taken for the constitution on 5 September in order to determine the voting lists. They went around to all the houses. Now these lists have been posted. I ask my citizens, all of you, to go and find your names on the lists. You have time before the 7th. Find your names or apply to have your names written. There have been many errors. I was told so in Antalya. Officials came, on census day, to an apartment building with 36 flats and wrote down everyone's names. However, when the lists were posted, only the names of three families appeared on the list. Thirty-three were missing. This may have been an error or it may have been done on purpose. It is your duty to correct these errors. Let everyone look for his name on the lists and have it written if it does not appear. There is a law, as you know, that says if a person appears on the list and does not vote, he cannot vote for the next 5 years.

We have also been informed that certain negative persons are writing slogans on the back of the Bairam greeting cards, urging people to say No to the constitution. Send these cards to us so that we can struggle against them as we have struggled against the anarchists. We will deal with such people through struggle. We will maintain for a long time the tranquillity and security the country needs. This is our duty. We need your help. [end recording]

After addressing the public at the Burdur Republic Square, Evren went to the mountain commando school and training center in Egridir. Evren is still visiting there. He will later leave for Isparta. During his visit to Isparta, Evren will also address the public. Members of the National Security Council, Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahkinkaya and Gendarme Forces Commander Gen Sedat Celasun, are accompanying Evren on his visit to Burdur and Egridir.

TA021609 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Isparta, southwestern Turkey, 1 Oct (AA) -- Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and other members of the National Security Council, with the exception of the naval forces commander, arrived in Isparta Friday from nearby Burdur and Gen Evren told a gathering of inhabitants: "If you trust us. you will say Yes to the constitution we have elaborated. If you do not, you will say No."

Calling on the citizens "not to be affected by negative propaganda against the draft, to use their common sense," Gen Evren said: "There will come a time when we will counter with bombardment those who now are bombarding this constitution."

"We do not want politics to enter the schools, mosques and barracks," Gen Evren said. "The mentality which once praised the Fatsa (Ordu Province) mayor naturally opposes the constitution now," he added. Referring to the press, he said, in brief: "We are introducing restrictions to the press which wants to divide the country through illegal means. We do not introduce anything for the other press. Members of the other press, my friends, must not take offense."

Some of the persons released from prisons after completing their sentences were "maintaining their old habits," Gen Evren said, adding: "Therefore, the struggle (against them) will be continuous. We will fight with those released from prison altogether so that we will not be driven to the Sep 12 climate once more."

Gen Evren especially criticized certain dailies without actually naming them for their publications before the Sep 12 takeover saying that one of them went so far as disclosing the names of the secret agents of the national intelligence organization "who were later shot" and criticizing a military unit for "counterguerrilla activities."

Returns to Ankara

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in Montreal to attend the NATO foreign ministers meeting, has met with Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs Ioannis Kharalambopoulos.

According to information obtained by a Turkish radio and television correspondent, measures to be taken to improve the level of relations between the two countries were discussed at the meeting, which lasted for about 40 minutes. Turkmen, who returned from Montreal to New York, will address the UN General Assembly today. He will express Turkey's views regarding various international problems.

To Meet Again in December

[Text] It has been announced that the Turkish and Greek foreign ministers will meet again in Brussels in December. During the NATO foreign ministers conference held in Montreal, Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen held a meeting of some 40 minutes with Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs Ioannis Kharalambopoulos.

A statement issued by the Foreign Ministry on the meeting said the following: The Turkish and Greek foreign ministers, Ilter Turkmen and Ioannis Kharalambopoulos, met in Montreal on 3 October 1982. The two ministers reviewed Turkish-Greek relations and expressed their governments' determination to exert efforts toward developing relations between two countries. They have reached an agreement to take up the method and procedures of the talks concerning the problems between the two countries in their next meeting and to submit their recommendations to their governments. Furthermore, the two ministers have also reached an agreement to meet again in Brussels in December 1982.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU LEAVES FOR TUNISIA

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has left for Tunisia as the guest of Tunisian Prime Minister Mohamed Mzalia. In a statement at Esenboga Airport, Ulusu expressed the belief that his visit to Tunisia will contribute to securing peace and stability in the region and will further develop the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries. Ulusu noted that Tunisia has a distinguished role in the international arena due to its stand favoring peace and stability in the region. Noting that the traditional relations between Turkey and Tunisia are based on profound and strong ties, Ulusu added that a common culture, mutual understanding and respect have established friendly relations between the two countries.

In reply to a question by a journalists on whether he will hold talks in Tunisia on the Palestinian problem, Ulusu said that he might meet with PLO leader 'Arafat if he happens to be in Tunisia. The development of economic relations between the two countries will especially be discussed during Ulusu's visit to Tunisia. The establishment of air and maritime transport between the two countries of various industrial installations by Turkey in Tunisia will be discussed during the official talks. A joint economic protocol regulating trade between Turkey and Tunisia and an agreement on the implementation of legal decisions will be signed at the end of Ulusu's visit.

Minister of Culture and Tourism Ilhan Evliyaoglu is accompanying Ulusu in his visit to Tunisia. At Esenboga Airport, Ulusu was seen off by Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara, Foreign Ministry Undersecretary Ambassador Ercument Yavuzalp, Ankara Mayor Suleyman Onder and the Tunisia charge d'affaires, Mahmound (Ayazi).

STATE MINISTER PASIN RETURNS FROM BRUSSELS

[Text] Minister of State Sermet Refik Pasin has said that the Beypazari and Tuncbilek thermal power station projects were discussed at meetings he held with EEC officials. Pasin, who held talks with officials from the EEC and the European Investment Bank in Brussels and Luxembourg, has returned home. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Pasin said that the textile issue was also discussed at the meetings he held with the EEC officials, and that an agreement was reached on the export of ready-to-wear clothing and on consultations regarding cotton yarn. Noting that positive decisions were made on cooperation in the field of education, Pasin added that he held beneficial talks with the president of the European Investment Bank in Luxembourg in connection with investments to be financed. He concluded by saying that work in connection with the projects to be financed by the bank will begin in 1983.

TURKISH AMBASSADOR TO BEIRUT ARRIVES IN ANKARA

[Text] Ankara, 1 Oct (AA) -- Our ambassador to Beirut, Yunus Gucel, has arrived in Ankara. According to information obtained by an ANATOLIA agency correspondent, Turkish Ambassador to Beirut Yunus Gucel arrived in Ankara with information on the recent developments in Lebanon.

The Turkish Embassy in Beirut was destroyed during the bloody clashes that occurred in Beirut. Officials said that embassy officials are continuing their work at a private building in a quiet section of the city, because the embassy building is uninhabitable.

Officials noted that communication with the Beirut Embassy is very difficult, but that contact is established through the Turkish Embassy in Damascus.

GENERAL STAFF ISSUES STATEMENT ON NATO EXERCISES

[Text] Ankara, Oct 2 (AA) -- NATO's "Display Determination-82" exercise, part of the alliance's autumn exercises series, started on Sep 20, will be completed Oct 13 with the participation of military units from Turkey, Greece, United States, Britain, Italy, France and Portugal, according to a statement from the office of the chief of General Staff Saturday.

Turkey will participate in the exercises of Oct 3. According to the statement, the exercise is aimed at reinforcement and support by the ground, naval and air forces of participating countries of NATO's southern region and displaying NATO solidarity. The exercise will be jointly executed on the Mediterranean, Aegean Sea and eastern Thrace. Part of the participating airforce units will be transported to other airports of other participating countries, including Turkey, in order to develop joint training.

JOUNRALISM UNION CANCELS SEMINAR ON CONSTITUTION

[Text] Istanbul, Oct 2 (AA) -- The Turkish Journalists Union [TGS] based in Istanbul had to cancel a seminar for discussions on the draft constitution when a permit required to stage such a meeting failed to arrive from the martial law officials until yesterday. The union announced it was cancelling the seminar in order not to provoke a serious situation.

SECURITY CAPTURES 15 LEFTISTS, SEPARATISTS

[Text] It has been announced that during operations conducted in Ankara, security forces captured another 15 militants belonging to the illegal separatist Rizgari organization. A statement issued by the Ankara Security Directorate notes that the captured militants established secret committees in Ankara and engaged in activities in a bid to reorganize their organization that collapsed after the 12 September operation. The statement added that the militants said their aim was to enlighten the toiling classes in the Marxist-Leninist line and overthrow the existing order through the use of arms and replace it with communist rule.

According to the statement, the militants robbed five jewelry stores in Adana, Ankara and Istanbul on various dates. Searches conducted in the residences of the organization where the militants were staying revealed 2 pistols, 2 magazines, 36 rounds of ammunition, banned publications and statements, false identity cards and the general archives of the organization. The Ankara Security Directorate statement also notes that the killing of a bank official in Ankara's Kecioren quarter on 20 January 1982 and the subsequent robbery of 4 million Turkish lira was perpetrated by the illegal Rizgari organization militants. One of the suspects of the bank robbery has been captured and the other identified suspects are being sought.

Three Suspects Captured

[Text] Three brothers suspected of killing Assistant Prof Argun Saylam from the Hacettepe University, who was murdered near the Ovacuma subdistrict of Zonguldak's Safranbolu district after the road he was driving on was barricaded, have been captured. According to information obtained by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent from security forces officials, the three brothers, in possession of a shotgun, were captured. A ballistic examination confirmed that the shotfun was used during the incident. It has been determined that the murder was committed for the purpose of robbery. The three brothers have been detained. Saylam was shot while he was trying to remove the tree branches placed on the road.

VOTCP: JUSTICE MINISTER CALLS FOR MORE PRISONS

[Text] The justice minister of the junta, Mentes, has said that the prisons in Turkey are not sufficient and that another 40 prisons are necessary. At a recent news conference, Mentes said that currently there are 77,736 persons in civilian prisons in the country. He added that of this number, 46,017 are convicts and the remaining 31,719 are detainees. Noting that those in military prisons are not included in this figure, Mentes noted that the capacity of the civilian prisons in Turkey is 64,500 persons. He said: The existing civilian prisons in Turkey no longer meet the ever-increasing need. Of the prisons we planned to establish and open in 1982, only nine have been opened to service. We are exerting the necessary effort to commission a few other prisons by the end of the year. Some 40 prisons should be commissioned. The necessary allocation has been made in the 1983 fiscal budget on the issue.

KOHL COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH MITTERRAND

[Text] Paris, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl and French President Francois Mitterrand are aiming for the further development of German-French cooperation. They reaffirmed this in Paris this evening following Kohl's visit to the Elysee Palace.

Kohl told newsmen that French-German friendship is the "central element" in Europe. He stressed the "functioning" of relations between the Federal Republic and France, which he believes is necessary. He said that his first foreign trip to Paris as chancellor is also of a symbolic nature.

President Mitterrand said he hoped that "relations between our two countries will continue as before and will become more profound." This applies to both friendly bilateral relations and joint work within the European Community and the alliance. He said this during a 1-hour talk and dinner, in which Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and French Premier Pierre Mauroy and Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson also took part. The framework of the political plans of the two state leaderships was discussed. European questions and security problems were also discussed. These topics will be discussed further at the next planned French-German summit meeting in Bonn on 21 and 22 October.

In reply to newsmen's questions, Kohl said that the different political tendencies of the French state leadership and the new Federal Government will not hamper relations between the two countries. He also spoke in favor of coordinating the Eastern policy of the Western countries.

The chancellor stressed that he is the Federal Republic's first head of government to come from the "political post-war generation." At the end of the war he was 15 years old and still too young to be involved in "guilt and atonement." At that time, the aim of all policy had been "overcoming the old national state and opening up towards Europe." To him today, this still means "above all, French-German friendship."

With his visit to Paris, he wanted to demonstrate his personal recognition of the close link between German and French history, which is also particularly personified by his Palatine homeland. [as received] He wanted to show how important the continuity and predictability of German policy is to him. Kohl recalled the German-French friendship treaty, signed by the then-federal chancellor, Konrad Adenauer.

He said that this treaty is the basis for his government's policy. Despite changed problems and times, the friendship that has grown up between the two countries over the decades is "the most important achievement of the post-war period." Europe can "only flourish when its cornerstone, Germany and France, functions." He is flying back to Bonn very encouraged after the meeting with Mitterrand, and hopes for many further talks of this kind.

Further Remarks

[Text] Bonn/Paris, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl is optimistic about future cooperation with French President Francois Mitterrand. In an interview with French television before leaving for Paris for his first meeting with Mitterrand, Kohl said that, like Mitterrand, he is a political realist. He will try hard, he said, and added: "I am thoroughly optimistic." The interview was published in Bonn today.

The chancellor is convinced that a common basis will be found for continued cooperation with France in the European Monetary System. Kohl described his trip to France as a matter of course, as the German-French friendship treaty is a cardinal aspect of German policy: above all, that of the CDU.

Returns to Bonn

[Text] Paris, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl flew back from Paris to Bonn late this evening following his lightning visit with French President Francois Mitterrand. Tomorrow the chancellor will travel to Brussels. Immediately following the Paris talks, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is flying to the UN General Assembly in New York.

Visits Belgium

[Excerpt] Brussels, 5 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl arrived in Brussels on Tuesday for a lightning visit to meet with Belgian External Affairs Minister Leo Tindemans. The purpose of the meeting with the Belgian politician, who is also president of the European People's Party (EPP), is to prepare for the EPP congress, according to Christian-Democrat circles in Brussels, which is to take place in Paris on 7 and 8 December. (The EPP is the party organization of all Christian-Democrat parties in the EC countries -- DPA).

CHANCELLOR KOHL HOLDS FIRST PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl has announced a 5 percent cut in the salaries of ministers and parliamentary state secretaries. At his first press conference as chancellor in Bonn this evening, he said that these cuts will apply from 1 November 1982 through 31 December 1984. A review will be made in 1984.

In his government statement on 13 October, he will point out that sacrifices will be demanded of German citizens. "I think it is a good thing that the new cabinet at its first meeting is showing by its example what it thinks to be right in the current situation.

Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher attended the press conference, which took place shortly after the first meeting of the new cabinet.

Kohl said that the timetable for international meetings set by his predecessor Helmut Schmidt will be adhered to. The German-French summit meeting in Bonn will take place on 21 and 22 October. The German-British summit meeting in Bonn will take place on 28 and 29 October and the German-Italian summit meeting will take place in Florence on 26 and 27 November.

The next cabinet meeting will be held on Thursday. Kohl will have talks this week with representatives of the trade unions, industry and employers federations to prepare for his policy statement.

The new chancellor made it clear that he wants to meet with the press regularly. He wants his contact with the press to be as frank and direct as possible. It is much better to "canvass for our policy" by frequent talks than to hold back in this field, he said.

[Text] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl will make a government statement to the Bundestag next Wednesday (October 13). The ensuing debate is expected to last 2 days. This was announced today by the CDU/CSU Bundestag parliamentary group, to whom Kohl introduced his new cabinet. Kohl stated several times that he regards the coalition he leads as a government of the center which will pursue a corresponding policy.

Kohl's cabinet list corresponds with names previously announced for the individual ministries. It was additionally learned that CDU Deputy Hans Hugo Klein will be parliamentary state secretary in the Federal Justice Ministry, which will be headed by FDP Deputy Hans A. Engelhardt.

The newly elected CDU/CSU parliamentary group chairman, Alfred Dregger, announced that the CDU/CSU will assist the government through helpful criticism.

KOHL MAKES STATEMENT AT APPOINTMENT CEREMONY

[Text] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) -- The 16 ministers of the Kohl/Genscher cabinet received their documents of appointment today from the hands of Federal President Karl Carstens. The federal president received the ministers together with Helmut Kohl -- who was appointed federal chancellor on Friday -- in Villa Hammerschmidt. He wished them happiness in their future offices. The federal president at the same time handed them the appointment documents of their parliamentary state secretaries.

In a brief address, Federal President Karl Carstens pointed out the difficult tasks the new Federal Government faces, particularly with regard to the economic situation and the high rate of unemployment. He spoke out strongly in favor of contact with the younger generation, among whom unrest and fear are widespread, but who are ready, for the most part, for a dialgoue. Carstens stressed the "dignified forms" in which the transition to the new government took place. He thanked Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Vice Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher for their intention of ensuring continuity of policy toward West and East.

Kohl thanked the federal president for his good wishes for his cabinet and gave his assurance that the government will work in the spirit of the Constitution and will be ready to engage in responsible cooperation. He stressed the special responsibility arising from the dominating economic problems and promised that the government would place itself at the service of world and domestic peace. It regards the preamble of the Basic Law, which called for German unity to be established, as a legacy. The country's younger generation provides grounds for every hope; any resignation in this respect is out of place. The government will set a good example through its dealings with its political opponents.

After the documents were presented, the federal president invited the members of the new government to have a drink.

CDU'S BARZEL DEFENDS NO CONFIDENCE MOTION

DW041009 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0858 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Speech by CDU Deputy Dr Rainer Barzel in the Bundestag in Bonn -- live]

[Excerpts] Ladies and gentlemen, Mr Federal Chancellor: In well-chosen words you have again expressed the guiding principles of your policy. You have every right to do this. However, since we have known these principles for many years, it is striking for us to notice that you failed to point to two of your principles and promises -- full employment and stability. [applause] You say nothing about them for reasons I will discuss later. To begin with, I only want to state that at this moment, Mr Federal Chancellor, it would have been better, more honest and -- to use your words -- more dignified for the chancellor of the Federal Republic to give an account [applause] of debits and credits, of promises given and promises kept. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the people whom we serve and who elected us to act on their behalf; these people have the right to a government which has a majority and does a good job. The former majority broke apart.

The CDU/CSU and the FDP have formed a new majority through joint answers to existing questions. Accordingly, we submitted the motion in due time, which was submitted to you as Document 9/2004. It reads: Motion by the CDU/CSU and FDP factions under Article 67 of the Basic Law. May the Bundestag resolve: The Bundestag expresses no confidence in Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and elects Deputy Dr Helmut Kohl to be his successor as FRG chancellor. The federal president is requested to dismiss Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. This is the motion. [applause] The majority of this house is asked to accept this motion and thus clear the way for a new beginning.

When you talk about elections, Mr Federal Chancellor, you are aware of our written agreement, and you also know the Basic Law and the law on the parties as well as the necessary term of 60 days. We consider it necessary to signal the change in advance so as to make it clear that this is the beginning of a new policy which does not demand further interference by the state, but calls for more freedom for the citizens and more real social justice. [applause, shouts] Ladies and gentlemen, by this motion we are returning to normalcy with the largest faction providing the chancellor. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, nobody can fail to notice -- and we already stated this in previous debates -- that the SPD has become unable to govern. Nevertheless, you have the auducity to abuse us -- just think of the leaflet of yesterday — to abuse us, who now have to bring order to what you have left us. You have left behind empty coffers, mass unemployment and young people defrauded of a better future, ladies and gentlemen. [applause] But you defame us. You are responsible for the evils. You came to build a modern Germany -- this was your loud promise, don't you remember, Colleague Brandt? Now you are leaving because you turned the flourishing state which you took over into a crisis-ridden country. That's the state of affairs. [applause]

I say, no matter how you will react now — because this is my opinion — I state from this rostrum: Hats off to Mr Genscher, who acted to prevent matters from becoming even worse and going further downhill, ladies and gentlemen. [applause] If you, Mr Federal Chancellor, had tried to promote the agreed policy with equal consistency and toughness in your party, then you would not have seen the day that you are going through today. [applause]

I of course appreciate what the chancellor said in Bonn yesterday and what Mr Wischnewski said in New York yesterday about the future reliability of German policy. However, I also cannot ignore what the SPD simultaneously staged in Bonn. Those who heard and saw the news yesterday evening easily realized that the former coalition also broke apart for foreign policy reasons. Brandt and Eppler here, Schmidt and Wischnewski there. Germany can hardly be governed that way. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, since World War II, since 1945, there have been 100 so-called local wars around the world with 35 million people killed. There has been no war here in Europe because under Adenauer a European peace order was created in its free part -- a peace order which has made war in free Europe among or against one another not only unthinkable, but also impossible. [applause] And because -- and this is the second thing also under Adenauer -- deterrence based on the U.S. military presence here ensures peace. Ladies and gentlemen, so long as we have no controlled disarmament -- which we want to have — we need peace through deterrence. Those who harm this deterrence jeopardize peace. [applause]

I spoke about these problems in previous debates and don't want to reiterate what I said. However, let me make this personal statement. In our internal deliberations, which led to this majority and this motion, I stated as my most important argument my concern, based on foreign policy considerations about the future of peace and freedom. It seems to me that I didn't differ much from Mr Genscher.

Our place is not between the East and West. It is only through the West and in the West that we can work for a reconciliation of interests. Standing with both feet in the West, we want to extend our hand to the East -- our hand but not the legs we stand on. [applause] This must be and remain clear if peace and freedom are to last here.

Peace will remain. It is ensured best of all if it is secured by the freedom of movement for people as well as by the freedom of information and opinion between the East and West. Much remains to be done between the two states in Germany. The treaties with the East are valid. We will use them as instruments of an active, realistic, peace-loving policy. As I said, we will have our feet firmly in the West and extend our hand to the East. There is no doubt that we will do that, and I believe it goes without saying that we will stand by the EC and the alliance as well as by German-French friendship.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are today farther away from social justice, the most important value beside peace and freedom, than we were in 1969. [applause, shouts] I will not forget that large numbers of trade unionists in Bonn came to celebrate the results of Socialist successes. Those who came, ladies and gentlemen, are not available as a reserve army for a policy which was also a failure in the social field. They were proof of the crisis. This must be stated here. [applause] Ladies and gentlemen, it is no secret that in addition to the political disaster, we are also experiencing financial collapse.

In this situation, it is urgently necessary for a new majority with a new government to submit a new program and then face the electorate. At a time when it is not easy to take over the responsibility -- I will elaborate on the situation later, Colleague Brandt -- we deliberately state that we, this new majority, are confident that we will clear up the mess. A better reality is necessary and better possibilities are also necessary. Our people face the alternative of either undertaking efforts like those after 1945 and in the fifties -- then we will make headway again -- or become second-class. That's the problem we face. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the yardstick of the new majority will not be the lame excuse that elsewhere matters are worse, but the claim that here it is better. Therefore, we choose a more ambitious goal. Namely, a change for the better, ladies and gentlemen.

Strictly speaking, I had expected more from the first FRG chancellor who, like me, belongs to the war generation -- I had expected a word about the intellectual tensions of our time, about our experience, about what must be said to young people here and in the GDR on the priority of humanity over every other policy.

If you resign from office, Mr Federal Chancellor, nothing is more to blame for this than your own party and, I am sorry to say, also its chairman. It certainly would have done our country good if you had always acted as unanimously when the FRG chancellor tried to pursue his policy as you did in rising just now, ladies and gentlemen. [applause] Your own fellow party members, Colleague Brandt, hampered your energy policy be changing necessities into options; undermined your security policy by turning firm consent into an open question; hindered you in pursuing an economic policy in accordance with the annual economic report by adopting a resolution at the party congress contrary to the demands which were rightly put forward in that report; refused to accept coalition agreements on the budget; and courted the so-called peace movement, which was clearly directly against your policy.

Ladies and gentlemen, when people in the countryask us -- and we have the same feeling as you, Mr Federal Chancellor, when you read your statement just now -- when people in the country ask us: Are you confident you can make a new start for more freedom through social justice as well as for secure peace, we conscientiously answer: Yes, we are confident we can do that. [applause]

FDP'S MISCHNICK JUSTIFIES COALITION CHANGE

DW041059 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in Geramn 1028 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Speech by FDP Bundestag floorleader Wolfgang Mischnick prior to no confidence vote against Chancellor Helmut Schmidt -- live]

[Excerpts] Mr President, esteemed ladies and gentlemen: This is a difficult hour. In my opinion, it is a difficult hour for the state because we are aware -- no matter where we stand -- that the FRG's stability, which has been a foregone conclusion for over 35 years, is not so obvious today. This has been proved by land diet elections.

This is a difficult hour for the Bunestag because I know that many deputies, including myself, from the various Bundestag factions are torn between what had been considered the basis of the 1980 decision during the election campaign and what the Constitution instructs the deputy to do once he has been elected. It is a difficult hour for my party because it is the one which best reflects this discrepancy, this tension and the resulting relationship of tension. I admit quite frankly that it is a difficult hour for me. I helped quite purposefully bring about this coalition 13 years ago and I backed it to the last minute. [applause] Some people say that I did so for too long. These critics may be right.

Mr Chancellor, in a conversation before your statement to the Bundestag on 17 September, you made it clear that this coalition was nearing an end. I asked you whether this was contained in your speech, and you said that it was. I asked you whether you expected the FDP ministers to resign and you answered yes. I asked you if that did not happen, would you then dismiss them? You replied in the affirmative.

From your viewpoint, this is the message of your speech. It is no longer possible to cooperate. However, I would like to add, Mr Chancellor, that if you allow this to be called treason, it will disappoint me very much. [applause]

To prevent any misinterpretation, let me add that an agreement had been made in the coalition, and I have learned to respect majorities. I expect my friends to respect majorities, just as I respect majorities when they are set forth in a coalition agreement for the future. This is why I request that my basic views, which I continue to advocate, not be considered a kind of attempt to wriggle out of an agreement. It is necessary for me to expound my basic position again at this time with the same clarity with which I did so a few days ago, because this is part of the credibility which has been mentioned several times. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, this duty to act is not contrary to the views which have already been advanced in this parliament. Mr Chancellor, as the SPD floor leader, you said in reply to the speech I had to give in connection with the grand coalition's government statement -- and I quote: It was the parliament which has created a new government out of its own ranks. This is proof of the German Bundestag's ability to act. I fully agree with you. [commotion, applause] We don't have the same circumstances today, but they are silimar.

At the time, Helmut Schmidt also said that a government must be formed in keeping with the possibilities of a majority that is capable of working. This is what we intend to do.

Even at this time, I will not fail to assess the 13 years of governmental responsibility -- the subject of very much criticism -- in the same way as I have always judged it. Decisive new steps were taken in foreign policy and in Ostpolitik; decisive steps were taken in the domestic and social spheres and I continue to favorably assess the basic policies as I did then. [applause]

I will not deny that mistakes have been made in the process. Wherever human beings are active, mistakes will be made. This was true for the CDU-FDP government coalition, this was true for the grand coalition, this was true in the present coalition and it will be true for a future coalition.

What matters alone is that once one has realized that a mistake has been made someplace, one must have the courage to learn from this mistake. If in such a case, one is not burdened by ideology, but makes decisions based on commonsense, then it is easier to do so. We are trying to make decisions on the basis of commonsense. [applause]

It has been mentioned here several times -- and I am sure that colleagues from my own faction who will present a divergent view here will define their position on this -- that many actions now envisaged could have been handled as well in the old coalition while others could not. I say -- and this is not an accusation but a simple statement of fact -- that both the first reaction -- that it could have been done in the old coalition -- and the second reaction -- that something like this can never be done -- demonstrate exactly what the problem was in this coalition during the past 6 months: that divergent views exist in the SPD concerning these questions of economic and social policies and that the preconditions for further joint work have thus been lost to a constantly increasing degree. [applause]

In the past, we endeavored to create more room for action, and we will continue to do this in the future through our policy. We managed to achieve this in many fields. I am perfectly aware of the difficulty of this task in the fields of legal and domestic policies which we will be facing in a new coalition. I am aware of this.

We were able to set quite a few things in motion in foreign policy and in Germany policy which had been considered immobile 15 years ago. We will preserve what has been achieved; we will stay with this policy in the future as well, because there is no other way. [applause] However, we also realize that the need for more individual responsibility and for more individual readiness to solve these problems is now greater than the call for more state action.

Ladies and gentlemen, what emotionalism has brought us in some fields has become quite plain through the statement made after the Hesse elections by Dieter Burgmann, member of the Federal Executive Board of the Greens. He said that the Greesns would welcome conditions in Bonn that would be similar to those in Hesse. Ladies and gentlemen, this undermines the existence of our democracy. All members of this parliament must be agreed in the defense against this. [applause] We should not forget this at a moment when some decisions are painful.

Esteemed ladies and gentlemen, the paralysis of our country in the past few weeks and months must be overcome at long last. The agony that has been suffered for weeks and months must come to an end. We will attempt to do this. I add that this will be an attempt. I do not claim that once a decision has been made today that all problems will have been solved. Just the same, it is necessary to begin with this attempt, to risk this attempt and thus to provide the proof that just as Helmut Schmidt said at one time in the Bundestag, majorities are capable of taking action. I have said earlier -- and this will become evident here in later speeches -- that regarding the readiness to embark now on this new course, I am speaking on behalf of only one, the major part of my faction. Naturally I would have been happy if unity had been attained. Let me add, though, that this would have surprised me because I was aware of the hard debate on these points within our own ranks. I understand that there are colleagues today who fail to see the necessity of what we are facing. On various occasions in this parliament, I have most expressly supported the right of every individual from other factions to express his own opinion. It goes without saying that this applies to the colleagues of my own faction as well.

It naturally cannot be expected that all the areas we have planned for this short period of time can be negotiated in the thoroughness I would desire. However, you may rest assured that we will make every effort to put into practice what we have planned. We simply have to make these decisions on material issues. This is why it is wrong to say now that the Bundestag ought to be dissolved. To me, this would be tantamount to avoiding necessary decisions.

Ladies and gentlemen, allow me to make two very personal remarks in conclusion. Mr Chancellor, we have cooperated quite closely over many years. I appreciate this work and I respect your achievements. I stand by this cooperation and I am grateful to you for it. It is a function of democracy that our ways must part now. There is one thing I would like to ask of you: Do not forget that you and I, that all members of this parliament, wish to serve the state and the people, and that for this reason, acts that will be carried out one way or another must be viewed in this way and no other. Many thanks for this cooperation. [applause]

Colleague Wehner, for more than 13 years we had to make very difficult decisions. Sometimes we faced decisions from entirely divergent positions. I think of the codetermination issue or the treaties where we had a common basis but different viewpoints. Yet there has always been a personally fair attitude. I thank you for this. In the most serious clashes of interests, we found solutions and jointly implemented them in compromises which proved their durability later as well. I came to know you as a fair partner, as a man who has often been misrepresented in public. It is painful to me that we have to part that way, Colleage Wehner. My esteem for you remains. [applause]

Colleague Kohl, if the vote turns out the way we expect it to -- and I am convinced that it will — you will have a fair partner because I regard fair partnership as an essential component of this democracy's credibility. [applause]

FDP DEMANDS 'MORE LOYALITY' FROM CSU'S STRAUSS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) — The FDP Presidium today demanded more loyality of CSU Chairman Franz-Josef Strauss toward the new Federal Government. FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling announced after a meeting of the Presidium today that the FDP leadership under party leader Hans-Dietrich Genscher supports the call by Bavarian FDP Chairman Josef Ertl to Strauss and the CSU "to support the work of the Federal Government and not to constantly sow mistrust toward the new government in Bonn and toward Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl." The government needs the full support of the responsible parties.

Since the FDP's switch from the Social-Democrats to the Union, Strauss has several times attacked the CDU's and CSU's new coalition partner and, contrary to the CDU and FDP leaders, called for immediate fresh elections to the Bundestag.

GENSCHER EXPLAINS BREAKUP TO FDP OFFICIALS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) -- FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher has sent a letter to the members of the leadership bodies and party deputies explaining the reason for the coalition switch and calling on the Free Democrats to show solidarity and unity. In the letter, published today but dated last Friday, Genscher attributes blame for the breakup of the social-liberal coalition to the Social Democrats.

The "really tortuous process leading to the breakup of the coalition partners, which put a strain on the citizens and on all of us," resulted from the SPD's deviation from the agreed policies, he writes. Helmut Schmidt terminated the cooperation because he knew that the SPD would not withstand the test, as Genscher termed the final debate on the 1983 federal budget.

The SPD had become removed "at an increasing rate from the common foreign and security policy." In economic and finance policy, the SPD had also adopted positions "which deviated increasingly from common coalition policy." The FDP, on the other hand, had been been obliged "in view of the growing problems, which we did not foresee either, in the above-mentioned fields of economic, finance and social policy, to define and clarify our proposals for solving them in keeping with our own responsibility, making our own contribution and being entitled to do so."

In his letter, Genscher expresses his conviction that the FDP will continue to master the difficult problems ahead "if we now end the internal differences at our impending congress in a dignified manner and with a foreward-looking decision." What is important now, he writes, is to show solidarity. In elections, anyone who desires the success of other parties must ask himself whether the FDP is the right place for them.

SPD'S BRANDT REMARKS ON COALITION CHANGE

[Speech prior to no confidence vote by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt at the bundestag in Bonn -- live]

[Excerpts] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen: Colleague Mischnick has just solved a damned difficult task in a way which touched all of us -- everyone felt it. I give you my respect, although you will understand, Colleague Mischnick, that in responding to the questions you raised I will come to different results in more than one case. I will get to that right away.

Much less is involved than saving the fatherland, Colleague Mischnick, with all due respect, this is merely a matter of party and power interests. This is exactly how most citizens in the country see it. [applause] Dear Colleague Genscher, I'm sorry, but what has happened indicates that you have outsmarted yourself and your party, but I'm certain you didn't outsmart the voters. [applause] The Hesse elections have shown that the voters don't care for too much smartness; most of them want clarity, unambiguity and reliability, and this is why the Hesse elections turned out to be a judgement against super tactics [applause] and why the CDU/CSU didn't score a majority.

Nobody can seriously contest that during its 13 years of existence, the social-liberal coalition -- and since I was involved in a leading position in the first part of the coalition I dare say this -- has written one of the outstanding chapters in the book of European and German foreign policies. [applause] We Social Democrats back this policy at this hour as well as the necessity to continue it. Detente is not a state of being, it is a dynamic process. [applause] Pacta sunt servanda, treaties are there to be fulfilled. This is natural, Colleague Kohl. However, they must be filled with life and extended, or what has been achieved will deteriorate. [applause] The CDU/CSU and the FDP said in their agreements that they will continue the peace and detente policies we have jointly developed. This is a high demand. You can count on us watching whether you live up to this claim. This also involves -- I'm continuing what the chancellor said in his speech this morning -- the idea of a comprehensive security partnership, as he has outlined here and in the United Nations, to do everything to safeguard peace in this part of the world. I hope we all agree that this must be the highest aim of everybody bearing government responsibility in ths country. [applause]

Every member will have to consider in his secret ballot whether the replacement of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by Helmut Kohl would bring us closer to the aim I just mentioned. [applause]

Without an independent liberal party, German policy will probably be the poorer. There is no shortage of tacticians in Bonn. [applause] There cannot be enough truly Free Democrats, regardless in which party, in this house and this Federal Republic. [applause]

We have gone through crises together, but we Social Democrats never wanted -- I say this with a good conscience -- to weaken you, to humiliate you, to incapacitate you and certainly not to destroy you.

I'm telling you that the SPD gave, and gives priority to representing the working people. [applause] This results in the new duty to stand shoulder to shoulder with those representing the workers in the plants and trade unions. The SPD doesn't isolate itself; it never has. We always found the support of master craftsmen, scientists and artists; we are approachable partners of social-liberal citizens and we frankly face those forces which have emerged from new social movements. Why shouldn't we also concern ourselves with those things emerging from the peace movement and initiatives of citizens? Whether you like it or not, this is a new, not very convenient and not clearly recognizable factor of political life which has appeared. Let's not fool ourselves: If there were new elections, we wouldn't know which blocs would be represented in the Bundestag in addition to the two large ones.

My party doesn't consider this as something fateful. However, we will concern ourselves with the issues and the people and we will be prepared to accept what belongs to us -- this will not touch the identity of the SPD. [applause]

My criteria for encounters, wherever they may take place, are clear: First, the rejection of violence is the main thing for us. There will be no compromise in this respect. Second, respect for what is contained in our Constitution and for the institutions established to implement the Constitution. Third, preparedness to respect the rules of our parliamentary democracy and to make use of them. Fourth, the realization that our state is a member of the European Community on the basis of treaties approved by the majority of our people and that this community must be further developed. As a result of developments after World War II, our state is a member of the Atlantic alliance for its protection, and it must remain a member until a European peace order permits or even requires the dissolution of military blocs. [applause]

We Social Democrats are against the overthrow of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, we are for his further successful work and we are for facing the voters together with him. Thank you for your attention. [prolonged applause]

DKP CHAIRMAN MIES VIEWS COALITION SHIFT

LD032056 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1706 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] Duesseldorf, 3 Oct (ADN) -- The fifth meeting of the DKP Party Executive took place in Duesseldorf during the weekend. Herbert Mies, chairman of the DKP, spoke on the subject of "countering the coalition of rightwing forces with a democratic alliance opposed to missile siting, in favor of peace, employment and the defense of democratic rights."

According to a report by the PROGRESS PRESS AGENCY (PPA), Mies began by pointing out that the fall of SPD Federal Chancellor Schmidt and the election of CDU politician Kohl as the new federal chancellor means a serious change in the parliamentary constellation and in the FRG Government camp. The fact that the DKP was not content during these momentous days with verbal statements said much for its feelings of responsibility, for its involvement aimed at a development directed toward peace, freedom and progress.

After the break-up of the SPD/FDP coalition, the DKP started a major action of informing the masses and actively participated in a number of meetings and actions organized by Social Democrats, trade unions and other democratic forces.

Herbert Mies stated: "We did and are doing this in the knowledge that in such a situation, the development of the extraparliamentary struggle is of decisive importance, that in such a situation, to wait and see is always a mistake; for by waiting and seeing, the opposite side is always able to gain ground. We became involved in the knowledge that the future political course of our country is now at stake."

At all stages of the developments, the DKP has always made it clear that it is fighting for a Federal Republic which plays a positive role in international life, which supports the continued process of detente and the safeguarding of peace. The DKP chairman noted in this respect: "This is also our line for the next stage of the fight, for the new challenge which we now face. We will employ our entire force for the action unity of the working class, for the alliance of all democratic forces, for the strengthening of the peace movement in our country."

Herbert Mies stressed his high regard for all democratic forces which do not remain passive during this time, but grasp that the order of the hour is "that the rightwing forces must be opposed with the solidarity of all those who stand for peace, employment and more democracy."

Herbert Mies said: "The fall of Helmut Schmidt and the formation of a CDU/CSU government signal a further move to the right and the real danger of a possible serious right turn in all areas of political and social life. Certainly, the social-liberal coalition broke up at the instigation of such FDP politicians as Genscher and Lambsdorff, but the more fundamental reason which led to the collapse of the coalition is the escalation of the capitalist crisis: the crisis of a policy which alternates between detente and confrontation; between verbal support for peace and support for the NATO missile decision; between promises of social reform and practical social dismantlement; a policy which tries to unite the primary place of capital and weapons interests with the preservation of trust in an SPD-led government."

Speaking to the members of the DKP party executive, Herbert Mies said: "It is no secret that the political climate in the FRG will become rough in the wake of the government change. But it cannot be said that we were surprised by such a change. The coming storm has been in the cards for a long time. Everyone could see that the result of the Schmidt-Genscher policy of military armament and social dismantlement would lead to resistance in our country. The envisaged dismantlement of social services even provoked resistance among those trade union leaders who were prepared, for various reasons, to tolerate this up to a point. But the pillage in the social field only became fully visible through the publication of the Lambsdorff paper, which basically only contained proposals for policies detrimental to the workers: in which the FRG was to be directed according to the will of 'business.'

"Such a policy could not be supported either by the SPD ranks or by the trade unions. In this situation, it was obvious that big business saw the only way of implementing its antisocial machinations in changing a Schmidt-Genscher government for a Kohl-Genscher government.

He said further: "A change of scene in government responsibilty has made clear more than once in the history of our nation that monopoly capitalism only leaves a social-liberal coalition at the helm as long as it can guarantee its profits. As soon as this is no longer the case, it is prepared to take the risk of increased opposition from the masses in order to ensure, with a "strong hand," that the burdens of the crisis fall on the shoulders of the workers.

Expressed simply, one can state that, as in the United States and Great Britain, an attempt is now being made in the FRG to ensure the extensive arming envisaged by the NATO decision, which threatens world peace by dismantling social and democratic achievements. The present Kohl-Genscher government is a real reflection of this. The coalition document is an absolute confirmation of it although it does not contain the full extent of measures to be taken against the workers, both in the field of social cuts and in the removal of citizens' freedoms."

"It would, of course, be favorable if a broadly based alliance of all forces to the left of the CDU were achieved, as alluded to by the SPD chairman, Willy Brandt. There exist justified doubts, however, as to whether such an alliance could be created in a relatively short space of time since large sectors of the SPD leadership are still not prepared to accept the demands of the peace movement for overturning the Brussels missile decision and to use the money set aside for arms to create jobs." The DKP has no reason to refrain from testing the will of the SPD leadership to block the antisocial, peace-endangering policy of the Kohl-Genscher government.

Herbert Mies continued: "We shall, therefore, continue to focus our mass work on the task of developing the peace movement in the FRG on the widest possible basis with the goal of ensuring that no new U.S. missiles are cited in 1983: in other words, that the Federal Republic does not become a launching site for new U.S. missiles, and of establishing, on the basis of a concrete job procurement program, which forces are prepared to help carry out the main points of such a program."

Herbert Mies went on to stress: "In order to properly wage the struggle against the rightwing coalition and the threat of a sharp swing to the right, we must exert sufficient pressure on the CDU/CSU-led government that there will be a limit to what it can do. Even a CDU/CSU-led Federal Government will not be able to do what it likes then. It will have to take into consideration the real political constellation, the awareness of peace and democracy by a large majority of our people, the different interests of various factions of big capital, the international balance of power and the extraparliamentary movements which are also penetrating the CDU. All this will have an effect on the rightwing conservatives' ability to act.

The DKP chairman spoke of the favor shown to big business interests, the abandonment of promised reforms, the excessive arms spending, the dismantling of democratic and social rights by the SPD Federal Government, and continued: "But at this hour, the important thing is what we can tell the working population as regards the possibility and necessity of all democratic forces: above all of Social Democrats and Communists working together in the struggle against a rightwing coalition. It is with this in mind that we support every political step taken by the Social Democrats in the interest of a peaceful democratic and social development in the FRG, that is to say, in the interests of working people and democratic forces."

With the formation of a government led by the CDU/CSU, the danger of the Reagan administration's feeling encouraged to station new U.S. nuclear weapons in the FRG in 1983 has increased. This can only be prevented if the peace movement and the anti-imperialist movement increase their strength and activities. "The struggle to prevent the stationing of missiles can now be given a new impetus by the Social-Democrats and the trade unions, and this is the important struggle."

The DKP chairman stressed: "The coming year must not be the year when missiles are deployed. We are of the opinion that all forces of the peace movement should not spare any effort now to win the Social Democrats over to cooperation in the numerous peace initiatives and actions, to the Krefeld appeal."

The Federal Government headed by the CDU/CSU is now further escalating its course of shedding the load of the capitalist crisis by an even more stringent policy of cuts and by the rejection of all demands of the trade unions. Herbert Mies said on this topic: "It is important, above all, that there is pressure to reduce unemployment and to create new work and training establishments."

The stance of the DKP in the decisive struggle to preserve peace, to defend social and democratic rights, is clear. "Everyone who is against the deployment of missiles, whichever party he may belong to, whatever his ideology, is not our opponent but our partner. Everyone who opposes the destruction of jobs, opposes a policy of cuts, is our ally. And everyone who participates in the defense of democratic freedoms is an alliance partner in our eyes."

In connection with the discussion concerning new elections, Herbert Mies stressed that in the event of new elections, the "DKP will campaign and initiate all necessary steps. Undoubtedly, however, in the event of fresh elections, the best thing would be joint action by all democratic and leftwing forces, a democratic election alliance on the basis of a common election program. The DKP supports all steps in this direction. If a partner-like alliance of democratic and leftwing forces, in which the DKP can cooperate on an equal basis, is the result, then it is prepared to withdraw its own lists."

In the final part of his report, Herbert Mies notes that the new situation certainly contains fresh dangers, but at the same time opens up opportunities for uniting, more rapidly and comprehensively, all democratic and leftwing forces. "The chance to show ourselves now and in the coming period as an indispensable force of the working people in this Federal Republic, a uniting force, has become not smaller but greater. It is up to us not only to overcome the dangers but also to utilize the opportunities."

LATE REPORT: SCHMIDT ASKED TO BE CANDIDATE

[Excerpt] Bonn 5 Oct (DPA) -- The SPD leadership has demanded that the CDU/CSU and FDP government parties make clear publicly "how they intend to hold elections in March 1983." Meanwhile, the Social-Democratic Party Presidium, at its session on Monday evening, chaired by party Chairman Willy Brandt, unanimously requested that former Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt lead the SPD in new elections as candidate for chancellor, should the government coalition keep its promise of elections on 6 March.

Schmidt, who so far has only expressed his willingness to stand at the SPD's leading candidate if new elections are held this year, has reportedly not yet made known whether he is willing to stand as candidate for chancellor if elections are held in March.

KOHL ARRIVES FOR TALKS WITH MITTERRAND 4 OCT

[Text] Paris, Oct 4 (AFP) -- West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl arrived here today for talks with President Francois Mitterrand, making his first visit abroad since becoming head of the Bonn government on Friday.

Before leaving Bonn today, Mr Kohl described his lightning visit to Paris as a "gesture of courtesy and good will" marking a "friendship between governments, but especially between two peoples."

Speaking in Bonn at his first press conference since taking office, Mr Kohl, a conservative, acknowledged the existence of "differences of viewpoint" with the Socialist French president on social politics and elsewhere.

The two leaders were to meet briefly here this evening, with Mr Kohl returning to Bonn directly after their talks.

SOVIETS PURCHASE 800,000 TONS OF FRENCH GRAIN

LD042224 Paris Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] The USSR has just purchased 800,000 tons of French grain. The United States sold Moscow 1.3 million tons last week. The harvest was particularly bad this year in the USSR, with only 170 million tons of cereals harvested instead of the expected 238 million.

MITTERRAND INTERVIEWED ON FRENCH-AFRICAN SUMMIT

AB051220 Paris AFP in French 0841 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, 5 Oct (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand affirmed on Monday that the French-African summit scheduled to take place in Kinshasa (Zaire) on 8 and 9 October is "a method of dialogue," but that it should not serve as a substitute for regional and international organizations, particularly the OAU.

In an interview with Radio France International a day before his departure for Africa, the French head of state stressed the "informal" nature of this annual meeting, which allows Third World countries and industrialized nations faced with the world crisis to exchange experiences.

Mr Mitterrand, who is scheduled to visit Burundi, Rwanda and Congo, in addition to Zaire, also announced that he will visit Togo, Benin and Gabon in January. "I intend," he said, "to strengthen the ties between France and each of these states in the coming years."

Asked about the increasing participation of English and Portuguese-speaking countries in the French-African conference, he stressed that France was ready to accord its cooperation within its means while taking into account the "special debts" incurred through history to Africa's French-speaking countries.

Stressing many times that the Kinshasa meeting does not take the place of the abortive Tripoli OAU conference, Mr Mitterrand expressed satisfaction that some countries which could not attend that summit are going to Kinshasa. He felt that the French-African summit will afford the opportunity to "inform the world of the dramatic situation of a number of Third World countries and may hasten the awakening of certain industrialized nations." "France is proud to be present for this role," he added.

Concerning Chad, he stressed that France does not want to "be a sort of policeman who comes to the aid of one party or the other or a faction, in Chad or elsewhere."

Mr Mitterrand reaffirmed that France, putting aside all old imperialist or colonialist responses, hopes to cooperate with Africa in mutual respect.

He stated that Paris will continue to sign accords of cooperation and entente with African countries, and "alliances if necessary."

The French president also deplored the conflicts or threats of conflict in the Horn of Africa. "I believe," he said, "it would be unwise for imbalances to occur to the benefit of the superpowers."

Questioned on Namibia, President Mitterrand recalled that France plays a very important role within the Western contact group and that it makes initiatives "on the basis of the peoples' right of self-determination."

On the world economic situation and the deterioration of terms of trade, Mr Mitterrand termed this "one of the two or three most important problems of the world," stressing that it is "not only a question of solidarity but of interests well understood by all."

He deplored the fact that the idea of solidarity has been downgraded for some time, questioning in this regard the instability of the world monetary system and the deterioration of the prices of raw materials.

"It is a dramatic and unjust situation," he said. He recalled that France, since the leftist government came to power, has decided to increase its public assistance to development and to the less-developed countries. "But," he added, "we cannot through our own means alone substitute for the rest of the world."

Recalling France's position at the Ottawa and Versailles summits, he said that Paris intends to maintain and develop its aid to and in defense of the cause of the Third World.

Finally, questioned on human rights and in particular on the recent visit of Guinean President Sekou Toure to France, President Mitterrand affirmed that he "does not hide behind the reason of state." "Development is an indispensable factor in democracy," he said, adding: "Let us first of all apply the moral principles to ourselves."

President Mitterrand affirmed that in the past 16 months freedom has been broadened in France, and recalled that he had himself criticized unbearable regimes, like those in Chile and Argentina, and foreign interventions, as in Afghanistan.

He stated, however, that France cannot create "a regime to suit its convenience" and felt that a French presence assists the broadening of freedom.

LE MATIN ON 'FRAGILE' POSITION OF PCF'S MARCHAIS

PM010745 Paris LE MATIN in French 27 Sep 82 p 4

[Dominique Burg article: "Marchais: Rumors of Departure"]

[Text] At the first Central Committee meeting after the 1982 vacation period next Monday and Tuesday, it is Andre Lajoinie, chairman of the PCF National Assembly group and Central Committee secretary, who will present the report on the subject which predominates at present: "action for economic and national development, social progress and workers' rights." [PCF Central Committee Secretary] Maxime Gremetz will then present a report on international problems.

Andre Lajoinie has spoken in public over the past few days to present the report of the PCF parliamentary study meeting 16 September, which is his role, and to comment on the present situation in general on France-Inter 21 September. That would not be enough to make Andre Lajoinie the strongman of the PCF as the new political year starts if, at the same time, there was not a growing rumor not only among the journalists, but also in the ranks of the party itself about the fragility of Georges Marchais' present position. A series of statements made by the PCF secretary general himself have come to bolster the suspicions. At the L'HUMANITE Festival 11 September, Georges Marchais gave three pieces of information one after the other. First, he said that he does not take orders from anybody, "even from the Central Committee and the Politburo." And he added: "When I do not agree I say so, but I implement the majority decision." In addition, he announced the forthcoming publication of a "document" to which he "attaches a great deal of importance" but whose nature he did not reveal and which has been creating a great deal of expectancy in the party itself since then. Finally, 7 years after his heart attack, Georges Marchais revealed that he was going to have a medical checkup, the results of which he would publish. In addition to those hints, there are other elements: Georges Marchais remained silent throughout the summer, from his meeting in Ajaccio 22 June to his interview in L'HUMANITE DIMANCHE 5 September. That was 2 1/2 months, part of which time he spent in Bulgaria and part in France. Was that because of health problems or merely a desire to rest before starting a year which promises to be very busy in the political sphere?

Georges Marchais had already deliberately hinted at the idea that the PCF leadership was collective. He had never implicitly recognized that he was sometimes in a minority in the Politburo. The message which came through on French Television Channel 1 was that of a leader among others, and not that of the principal leader. There are more disturbing signs. All the indications are that the PCF number one no longer has all the means of ensuring that one single line is accepted by all party members and cadres, whereas until recently he was capable of defending and guiding all successive lines, even if they were inconsistent. Three examples illustrate that de facto situation: In Ajaccio on 22 June, Georges Marchais vehemently opposed the government decision to freeze wages and incomes. In the wake of that, the PCF printed 5,000 leaflets to support that idea. But at the same time, Andre Lajoinie toned down the criticism, not to mention Transport Minister Charles Fiterman who -- out of government solidarity? -- refused to join that battle. More recently, at the L'HUMANITE Festival, Politburo member Philippe Herzog launched a rousing appeal to the workers and party members to join the battle for national production, as [former PCF Secretary General] Maurice Thorez put it after the liberation. The following Wednesday, during the parliamentary study meeting, another tone was adopted: The deputies and senators, reflecting the state of mind of the grassroots in the constituencies, expressed their anxiety, one after the other, about possible "deviations" by the government under pressure from the employers or even from a "certain left." So much so that the final version of the declaration handed to the press the next day took account of that desire for a firm line.

The same vacillation can be observed in the foreign policy sphere. In the edition of the PCF weekly REVOLUTION dated 3 - 9 September, there is an unsigned editorial on Poland which reveals a marked change in the PCF on the subject. In particular, it mentions General Jaruzelski's "coup," an expression which the PCF has always refrained from using. There is no change of course, REVOLUTION editor Guy Hermier -- who was not in the newspaper offices when the editorial was published -- quickly stated. As a sign to party members to show that he was not involved, the day after the festival, L'HUMANITE published a photograph in which Guy Hermier is seen standing beside L'HUMANITE editor Roland Leroy and Jacques Estager, special envoy to Poland. It is rather unlikely that the journalist who wrote the editorial, who does not have any special position of responsibility, could have taken such an initiative alone. Two hypotheses can be envisaged: Either there are men in the party leadership who are in favor of a change in the PCF stance on Poland and are making it known, or REVOLUTION is deliberately adopting an open approach to a fringe group of intellectuals with whom the PCF is seeking reconciliation.

But the theory of doubletalk being used by the PCF, particularly in its attitude toward the government -- "one foot in and one foot out" -- is less and less credible. The successive adjustments which the party is making are more likely the result of a prfound difficulty in defining a strong line. That is especially true since Communist officials are aware of the disquiet which exists among the members and which is dangerously contributing to the party's passiveness. That is the significance of the many appeals for action by the workers, and of Paul Laurent's article in L'HUMANITE last Thursday calling on the party organiztions to "turn increasingly to the masses" and to "help them appreciate the present situation."

In these circumstances, it is possible that an increasingly persistent doubt might be appearing in some minds: Is George Marchais still capable of breathing new life into the PCF and restoring its unity? Without going so far as the theory of a plot, which has more to do with fiction than real practice in the PCF, there are grounds for wondering, for instance, about the reasons for Etienne Fajon's article devoted to deported workers, published on page 1 of L'HUMANITE on 7 September. The article mentioned the "volunteers" who want to work in Germany during the war, "whether they were seduced by fascist ideology, believed the propaganda lies that their attitude would enable prisoners of war to return, or hoped to earn some money." Those remarks seemed to be a dig at Georges Marchais since the circumstances of his departure for Germany have given rise to vehement arguments.

There are two possibilities: First, Georges Marchais is preparing to hand over control, under pressure from men who do not all think the same but who think it necessary to change the party leader. That would imply the start of self-criticism if the PCF wants to gain new dynamism when he leaves. That is not easy to achieve at present. Moreover, there is no obvious successor. Two very different men seem capable of assuming the position; Andre Lajoinie, the practical man, calm and serene, who could be a uniting force; or Transport Minister Charles Fiterman, who embodies the image of the competent, expert Communist and who undoubtedly has authority.

The second hypothesis is that Georges Marchais is preparing to restore control over the party in a way which would be particularly striking since the rumors about its destabilization would be abundantly proved.

BUDGET ESTIMATE ENDORSED; CONTROVERSY CONTINUES

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 2 -- Italy's economic troubles and the moves Premier Giovanni Spadolini's Rome government coalition are taking to tackle them have become the issue of a heated political debate in the country.

All five parties in the coalition -- the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals -- endorsed the budget and economic planning estimates the government submitted for the year 1983, but the bickering did not stop.

One point on which the government and the parties of the majority agree, Republican Party (PRI) floor leader Andolfo Battaglia remarked yesterday, "is that the economic and financial moves drafted by the government in July have to be approved by December".

But, Battaglia admitted, some political groups in Parliament have already taken steps to delay passage of the measures or to knock them down, "setting a maneuver that could come close to toppling the parliamentary system into motion".

And Senator Antonio Bisaglia, a Christian Democrat (DC), warned that the "differing stands that emerged when the 1983 economic estimates were approved showed once again that the problems will worsen if they are not tackled with the necessary force".

For DC floor leader Gerardo Bianco, the government could push its economic policy moves through "as long as it takes parliamentary requirements... into account".

The dire consequences of a failure on the part of the government to push its economic maneuver through were aired by Industry Minister Giovanni Marcora (DC) in an interview appearing in Rome's IL MESSAGGERO today.

"If for one reason or another the economic maneuver fails", Marcora warned, "the government will have to resign en bloc and each side will have to take responsibility before the nations' eyes". "Without the financial and tax measures," Marcora went on, "it will be impossible to run the economy... and you can't just leave a critical time like this to chance and improvisation."

The Liberal Party approved a document last night stressing "the necessity and urgency of acting quickly on public spending, on interest rates, on wage indexation and other automatic spending systems without neglecting an effective investments-support policy."

PCI'S BERLINGUER VIEWS PCI-PSI RELATIONS

PM041131 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 26 Sep 82 pp 1, 22

[Interview with PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer by local newspapers agency director Paolo Ojetti in Rome -- date not given]

[Excerpt] Rome -- The August crisis and the proposal, which is still valid, for a "different" government; relations with Craxi's PSI and De Mita's DC; the prospects for the democratic alternative; possible early elections; the normal current account which the PCI has with the Banco Ambrosiano; and the proposals for an Italian policy on the Lebanese question were the subjects of an interview Comrade Enrico Berlinguer granted to Paolo Ojetti, director of the local newspapers agency.

The interviewer began by reminding Berlinguer of the statement he made in Tirrenia [at the L'UNITA Festival[last Sunday about the present need for the greatest and most courageous, open approach to the PSI and the socialist area, the Catholic organizations and the democratic and popular forces. In view of the fact that Italian socialism today means Bettino Craxi and that the Catholic forces are not all leftwing, the question is whether the democratic alternative proposed by the PCI is really merely utopian.

Berlinguer replied that the need for agreement stems from the situation itself, even though that does not mean it must be expressed in a government "in which we are all together." However, he added, no party can pose as a condition that another party abandon its own identity, align with others or adopt another party's policy. The PCI is not asking the PSI to do that, and the PSI cannot ask the PCI to do so.

However, it is a mistake to think that the parties' present methods of organization and action are immutable, since the encounter of the various forces may lead them to reform.

Does that include the Communists? Ojetti asked. We Communists, too, was the reply. It is for that reason that the democratic alternative policy is also a policy of reforming the parties and the institutions and the relationship between the former and the latter.

When Berlinguer spoke about the "Socialist comrades" in Tirrenia there was more than one voice of dissent in the audience, and yet the Socialists are again talking about early elections and "restoring a balance" in votes between the PCI and PSI: Perhaps, it was asked, the PCI could afford to encourage that restoration of balance for the sake of the democratic alternative?

Berlinguer admitted that there was dissent among the crowd but said it was limited and quickly turned into general consensus when he recalled that if there is a real desire to help the Palestinian people then it is necessary to seek the broadest unity of forces, starting from unity with the Socialist comrades. As regards the "restoration of balance" in the votes, Berlinguer said that every party naturally fights an election campaign to capture more votes, not to lose them, and that is obviously also true of the PCI. On the other hand, the PSI, like any other party, has the right to increase support and votes for its own policy. What we oppose, the PCI secretary explained, is that the objective of "restoring a balance" as the PSI understands it is posed as a precondition for subsequently aiming at a democratic alternative. The latter is more important and urgent for the country than "restoring a balance."

The third question concerned the difference of opinion between the PCI and PSI on the subject of early elections: Why is the PCI opposed to them and the PSI so impatient to hold them? The reply was that when the PSI raised the question in August the Communists were opposed to elections both because they considered elections at that time harmful to the interests of the country and the workers and to the prestige of the institutions, and because the PSI was not putting forward any proposal for changing political lines and alliances after the elections.

The PSI's impatience to hold elections, Berlinguer added, can also be explained by the fact that the PSI is becoming increasingly aware of the untenability of the government experiment in which it has cooperated -- an experiment based on so-called "governability," which has been completely exhausted.

The next question concerned the PCI's proposal for a "different government, not only as a factor of public moralization but as a political and institutional innovation. In his reply Comrade Berlinguer recalled the phenomena of the government parties' occupation of the state, the resulting degeneration and the distribution of official positions.

Putting an end to that is the most important innovation, and that was the aim of the proposal for a "different" government. It would be a government no longer comprising "delegates" of the party secretaries and their factions but formed on the basis of a choice of ministers made autonomously by the prime minister both from within the parties and outside them, following the criteria of individual honesty and ability. And that method, Berlinguer added in reply to another question, should also be used at the local level.

Berlinguer was asked: Does a government of that type envisage the hypothesis of Craxi as prime minister? We are not ruling out or choosing anybody in advance, was the reply. The essential thing is that the person asked to form such a government should have and demonstrate the will to effect such a substanial change.

The conversation then turned to De Mita's DC: Have relations between the PCI and DC now changed? Berlinguer recalled that De Mita became secretary as a result of the defeat of the "preamble" majority [former DC faction] in the DC. De Mita now recognizes that there is no longer prejudice against the PCI and states that on the major subjects of the Constitution and state reform there can be areas of agreement between the majority and opposition, and that all represents "a new factor" which might pave the way for a "more correct and full democratic dialectic." De Mita has also made specific pledges on the moralization of public life and of the DC itself as regards the pollution caused in it by the mafia, camorra and hidden power centers. But in this extremely fundamental sphere there has as yet been no confirmation of that in the DC's specific actions and behavior. One particularaspect which the PCI regards as very negative is the DC's present full support for the economic and trade union policy line adopted by the General Confederation of Italian Industry. "It is strange, to say the least," Berlinguer remarked, "that such a stance should come from a secretary who was appointed with the decisive backing of the DC leftwing."

Ojetti asked Berlinquer: Is it true that there was a DC-PCI "lot" in August for a government without the Socialists? And he added: If a "different" government had emerged, how would the PCI's parliamentary readiness have been expressed?

A "different" government was not formed, Berlinguer replied, despite the fact that at first it seemed that it might be, judging from the first point of Spadolini's "10-point plan." We said that if that innovation had been made we could only have assessed its quality and scope in Parliament. It was therefore an abstract question -- and is even more so today -- to define how our possible readiness might have been expressed.

The conversation then turned to the forthcoming PCI congress, with a view to which "things seem calm" within the party, the interviewer said. It is true that our party's internal climate has improved, Berlinguer replied. But that is because the development of internal and international events has broadly supported the positions and initiatives which we adopted firmly and coherently in the recent period. However, there will be debate and it will be fairly interesting and lively, Berlinguer added, hoping that, as at other important points in the party's life and development, it might take place in a spirit which will consolidate the PCI's political unity.

PRC EMBASSY 'REGRETS' RECEPTION GIVEN DALAI LAMA

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 4 -- The Chinese Embassy in Rome issued a statement today voicing the Chinese Government's "regret" over the meeting Rome Mayor Ugo Vetere granted to Dalai Lama a week ago.

The spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists, in exile since China occupied Tibet in 1959, spent two days in Rome last week during which he was also received by Pope John Paul II at the Vatican.

The Chinese Embassy statement said, "The Dalai Lama is not only a religious figure but an exile who carries out political activities. His reception at the Rome City Hall does not help the friendly relations between the Italian and Chinese peoples and we express our regret."

The Dalai Lama is on a religious and cultural tour of several European countries. He is expected to return to Italy after visits to France and West Germany.

INTELLIGENCE SERVICES EXAMINE COUP DOCUMENTS

[Text] According to a first assessment of the documents seized, which are being examined by the intelligence services, the men involved in the attempted coup, who were arrested, planned to contact, or had already done so, senior officers in various operative units and military garrisons throughout the country. The aim was for these officers to take over the units and garrisons, mounting a coup d'etat neutralizing the decisionmaking centers, broadcasting centers, news services and so forth. It is understood that these contacts were not with the appointed commanding officers of the units and garrisons, but with people who, because of their positions or other circumstances, could take them over and remove their commanding officers.

PSOE LEADER ON FUTURE COUP ATTEMPTS LIKELIHOOD

[Text] The secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE], Felipe Gonzalez, has said in Seville, where he is paying a preelection visit, that a coup d'etat in Spain is not a viable possibility today.

As for whether there could be future coup attempts, Gonzalez said there could be one in November if there is a Socialist victory [in the general elections], and in view of the pope's visit. There could be other conspiracies in a years' time if a PSOE government fails.

The Socialist leader insisted that if his party wins the 28 October elections it will get right to the bottom of the whole network of coup conspirators.

GRAPO CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR RECENT BOMBS

[By Juan Avila]

[Text] Madrid, 1 Oct (EFE) -- The sequence of attacks initiated by terrorist groups in Spain on Wednesday [29 Sep] has continued with the explosion of eight bombs in banks and employment offices in the Basque region early today. The most recent attacks began on Wednesday with the explosion of some 20 weak bombs in public buildings and businesses in various cities throughout the country in the past 24 hours.

The "October 1 Antifascist Resistance Groups" (GRAPO) has claimed responsibility for most of the attacks, which resulted in the death of one person. "ETA Military" claimed responsibility for two of them.

Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson believes that the chain of explosions is linked to the 28 October legislative elections. "The reports obtained by our security organizations," he noted, "lead us to believe that these explosions are connected with the electoral process."

In view of the threat of a terrorist offensive, Roson met with top state security leaders to analyze the extent of this wave of attacks and to establish the police strategy, given the upcoming elections and the pope's trip to Spain.

As for the five weak bombs that exploded early today at banks in Guipuzcoa (Basque region) and Pamplona (northern Spain), it is likely that these are new actions by the ETA [Euzkadita Azkatasuna], although no group claimed responsibility for the attacks. Three additional bombs exploded early today in employment offices in Bilbao, Baracaldo and Sestao in the Basque region. However, there were no casualties. In addition, police deactivated a fourth bomb in another employment office in Bilbao.

This chain of explosions coincides with the self-dissolution of the "ETA Politico-Military Seventh Assembly" faction, which was announced yesterday and viewed with optimism by the primary political forces. The interior minister viewed this dissolution as positive, though it "must not be interpreted incorrectly."

"It is a hopeful step," he added, "because it represents political and social progress and a reduction of violent positions in the Basque Country and in Spain, but we must not forget that there are other terrorist groups there." For its part, the Socialist Workers' Party said in an official note that "any decision" that contributes to the pacification of the Basque Country and to a reduction in terrorism must be viewed with satisfaction by the democrats."

With the self-dissolution of the "ETA Politico-Military Seventh Assembly" faction, the number of terrorist groups in Spain is reduced to the "ETA Military," the "ETA Political-Military Eighth Assembly" and "GRAPO," which is responsible for the latest explosions in the country.

FURTHER REPORTS ON DISSOLUTION OF ETA FACTION

[Begin recording] [Alcorta Santos] We feel that the armed struggle, if it previously had a certain raison d'etre and a certain popular support among the masses, is now on the decline. We have an autonomy statute, we have an autonomous police force, we have a Basque parliament, etc. These things undoubtedly give substance to democracy. So we believe that our disbanding will be a step in the democratization of Euskadi, in the democratization of the Spanish state, and that we are making a large contribution to normalizing political life in Euskadi. So, in short, we feel that ETA now has no raison d'etre, that there is no raison d'etre for violence in Euskadi.

[Question] Do you think the step you have taken may oblige or encourage other organizations currently still keeping up the armed struggle -- ETA Military and ETA Politico-Military Eighth Assembly -- to follow the example of the Seventh Assembly?

[Answer] As I see it, the Socialist Workers' Party will win the upcoming election. They are a democratic force, and many things will have to be looked at afresh. In other words, democracy is being established, and so other armed organizations will have to look at things afresh.

[Question] Now that you are going to reintegrate yourselves as individuals, as people living according to law, will you be doing so as members of any particular political party?

[Answer] Well, we are no longer a collective organization, so each of us will be making his own political choices. Personally, I am going to apply for membership in Euskadiko Ezkerra, and many of my companions are going to do likewise. [end recording]

AFTENPOSTEN ON DETAILS OF STOCKPILING PLAN

[Unattributed report: "Contingency Stockpiling Details Clear"]

[Text] The detailed planning stage for contingency stockpiling in Trondelag for a brigade of U.S. Marines is now drawing to a close. The force's role has been defined and it has been stressed that the brigade must be able to be transported to Norway before hostilities break out, a report from the Defense Ministry states.

Joint Norwegian-U.S. planning has reached the stage where the main outline is clear on stockpiling, the composition of the force and how the brigade's operational capacity will be used in Norwegian defense plans.

The brigade will not bring tanks or amphibious armed vehicles with it. This is due to conditions in Norway and the defensive character of the force's role, the report states. Without giving the number of soldiers or support personnel, the ministry says that the brigade will be small and light by normal Marine Corps standards. It will bring its own antiaircraft defenses with it as well as 78 combat aircraft and 78 helicopters -- a force equal to the whole of the Norwegian Air Force.

The Defense Ministry Press Office pointed out that traditionally, Norwegian security policy has been a careful balance between deterrence and reassurance. In an assessment of the security policy consequences of contingency stockpiling, there is good reason to stress that the considerable airborne forces the brigade will bring with it are organized and trained for operations in direct collaboration with the ground forces. In other words, for defensive fighting on Norwegian soil. Measuring the aircraft's operational range into Soviet airspace, to assess whether they could be seen as a special threat by the Soviet Union, lies outside the operational guidelines of the Marine brigade. Modern airborne operations are very complicated and demanding. The operations rehearsed in peacetime reflect the plans drawn up for forces at war. Therefore, the Soviet Union's military analysts know very well that the Marine Corps aircraft will operate where the Marines are operating, the report states.

The ministry also stresses that the brigade's units are not organized or intended for any role in connection with nuclear arms.

As far as concerns the question of how much is saved by contingency stockpiling, it can be answered in terms of the number of transport aircraft which would be needed to airlift the force across the Atlantic. If the heavy equipment for a "normal brigade" is taken as the point of departure, the equipment which is not needed because of the Norwegian terrain and climate will mean a one-third reduction in the number of aircraft loads. To put it simply, you don't take desert equipment to Norway.

Taking remaining airlift requirements as the point of departure, contingency stockpiling turns out to reduce the need for air transport by an estimated two-thirds. The equipment and services Norway will contribute reduce this need by a little under 20 percent. The ministry's figures show, therefore, that the remaining need for the airlifting of men and equipment across the Atlantic is a little less than 20 percent of what the whole brigade would have required.

REPORT OF GREEK OPPOSITION TO KIPRIANOU DENIED

[Text] The government spokesman in Athens, Mr Maroudhas, stated last night that the reports in the magazine PROSANATOLISMOI [reportedly a pro-PASOK magazine] are unfounded. The magazine reported that Prime Minister Papandreou allegedly does not favor the reelection of President Kiprianou and that he will observe a harder stand toward the president of the Republic of Cyprus.

CAGATAY SAYS GREEK CYPRIOTS STALEMATING TALKS

[Text] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said that the contradictory stands adopted by the Greek Cypriot administration and the church are preventing the success of the intercommunal talks aimed at solving the Cyprus problem.

The TURKISH NEWS AGENCY in Cyprus reports that Cagatay, who is continuing his tour of villages, addressed the people on political and economic issues. Cagatay said that the inhuman embargo imposed by the Greek Cypriot administration and the impasse at the intercommunal talks as a result of the Greek Cypriot stand were among the most significant difficulties faced by the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

Cagatay said: The contradictory stands adopted by the Greek Cypriot administration and the church on whether or not the talks should be held in exchange for the good will and understanding we have shown at the intercommunal talks are among the issues we should take into consideration while we are strengthening our state. While Mr Kiprianou states that he favors the talks, Archbishop Khrisosthomos expresses the view that the talks should cease immediately. The fact that the Greek Cypriot side is, at this stage of the talks and after so many years, still undecided as to whether the talks should continue clearly shows that the Greek Cypriot side does not fulfill its duty for the success of the talks. All states involved in the Cyprus issue should take these realities into consideration. We maintain the hope that these states will make the necessary [words indistinct] to the Greek Cypriot side for a peaceful solution which will enable the functioning of two bizonal, bicommunal, separate administrations with equal say within a federal structure as proposed by the Turkish Cypriot side and adopted by the states concerned.

Cagatay said that the government has launched a campaign for the development of the Turkish Cypriot economy and added that success in this field can be achieved only if every individual in society fulfills his responsibilities to the best of his abilities. Calling on consumers to put an end to waste, Cagatay said that, through the production of quality goods, producers can compete in European markets. Cagatay said: No matter what the difficulties, it is the fundamental duty of every individual to [words indistinct] the state we have formed.

FORMER OFFICIAL ON CHANGED INDEPENDENCE DAY

TA041519 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] The former defense minister of the Cyprus Republic, Mr Osman Orek, has refuted a Greek Cypriot allegation that the changing of the republic's independence day from 16 August to 1 October was taken with the approval of the Turkish Cypriot vice president at [word indistinct] Council of Ministers meeting in July 1963. Mr Orek said the decision to change the date was taken at the meeting despite objections by the Turkish Cypriot side. He said he was one of the Turkish Cypriot ministers objecting to the decision on the grounds that it would not be realistic to change the actual date of independence to another date which had no meaning at all.

ENERGY COOPERATION DISCUSSED WITH SWISS

NC022228 Athens ATHENS NEWS in English 2 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] Minister of Energy and Natural Resources Evangelos Kouloumbis Thursday [30 Sep] received a Swiss delegation headed by Ambassador Cornelius Sommaruga and Etienne Vallaton, Swiss ambassador to Athens.

Ambassador Sommaruga informed the minister of the intense interest of his country in cooperation with Greece in the energy sector, particularly in the study and construction of major units for the production of electricity, as well as various other ventures in the electricity sector.

The minister reviewed government energy policy and underscored the interest of Greece in cooperating with Switzerland.

GREEK OPTIONS IN BASE NEGOTIATIONS VIEWED

NC300822 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 29 Sep 82 p 1

[Editorial by Alexandhros Velios]

[Text] Investments, investments, investments... It appears that Prime Minister Papandreou will now go to the Greek-U.S. negotiating table disguised as a businessman. The much-advertised "entirely new basis" for negotiations with the United States must be attributed to this. A start will be made by abandoning all traces of a set of political principles and the Greek requirements will now be centered mainly on the attraction of U.S. investments and much less on an increase (at least quantitative) of military aid or the attraction of economic aid from the United States.

This self-imposed restriction could logically be explained by the following:

-- A possible direct increase in military aid to Greece could disturb the ratio -- perhaps nominal but always desirable -- of 7 to 10 compared to Turkey.

-- A possible establishment of economic aid (e.g., in the form of rent for the bases) would clash with the unwillingness of the U.S. Congress in view of U.S. economic difficulties.

A sufficient amount of investments sought from the United States could be directly related to the requirements of the Greek war industry (as repeatedly stated by the Greek side) with the development of the armed forces and the national economy as a goal. An older line of thought expressed by the general staffs stressed: "There cannot be strong national forces without a stable and developed economy and, inversely, a stable and developed economy cannot be achieved without the feeling of security and effective defense guaranteed to the country's economic units by its own armed forces."

Official observers believe that there are prospects for cooperation between our war industry and the United States, particularly in the aeronautical construction and electronic equipment manufacturing sectors, in general, as well as in the development of production units for missile systems in Greece. Particularly in the vital electronics sector, the guidelines must be based on stated Turkish aspirations, with the aim of supplying our armed forces with the essential technology for the manufacture in Greece of all types of telecommunications equipment and, simultaneously, meeting all the requirements of our armed forces in the maintenance of the electronic portions of weapons systems.

Within this framework and based upon facts published from time to time, the Greek "schedule of requirements" (the shopping list according to the outmoded term) from the United States could, among other things, include the following:

-- Establishment of a unit for the partial manufacture and maintenance of superior-quality optical-electronic apparatus of modern technology in cooperation with the Hellenic Aerospace Industry and the Hellenic Arms Industry.

-- Purchase of multiple missile launchers, which are considered an ideal weapon in the defense of islands.

-- Utilization of the already existing possibilities within the Hellenic Aerospace Industry in order to guarantee manufacturing possibilities to meet industrial production of certain high-technology systems.

-- Greek undertaking of projects to meet NATO requirements in the telecommunications and electronics equipment sectors.

All these are a sample set of requirements which, by nature, must be aimed at a more distant goal: acquisition of a native ability to plan and produce weapons systems adjusted to the specific needs of the country, in parallel with the development of prospects for the export of Greek war materials.

The "accursed" governments of New Democracy, without a shadow of doubt, did lay down the foundations for this. In the lack of a national strategy Greece can, at least today, hope to develop a viable war industry, which is already national.

RIZOSPASTIS COMMENTS ON U.S. GENERAL'S VISIT

NC300015 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 29 Sep 82 p 2

[From the "Radical" column]:

[Text] The visit of Gen Edward Meyer, U.S. Army chief of staff and possible successor to Rogers in the NATO command, can be described as anything but a courtesy visit. Meyer's purpose is to inspect the U.S. bases in Greece at a time when their use in supporting the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, as well as in realizing the more general adventurous plans of the U.S. imperialists in the Middle East, is a very well-known fact. The aims of the U.S. imperialists here are also well known. They want the agreement [on the bases] to be signed as soon as possible, not only for the unimpeded operation of the bases, but also for the ceding of new "facilities" under the pretext of the aggravated situation in our neighboring area.

According to some reports, Meyer will ask the Greek Government for full military cooperation with the United States and NATO and, particularly, the holding of regular Greek-U.S. military maneuvers. The government's yielding to Washington's impertinent demands at various times has made the U.S.-NATO imperialists more audacious. They are not satisfied with participation only in the repeated NATO maneuvers, but seek our full alignment with the cold war policy of the Atlantic alliance. Therefore, once again, it proves to be self-illusion for the government to believe that it can follow an "independent and multidimensional foreign policy" by keeping the bases and remaining within the cold warlike NATO.

DELEGATION TO ROMANIA -- At the invitation of the Romanian Government, a Greek delegation headed by Minister for Energy and Natural Resources Evangelos Kouloumbis has departed for Bucharest. Representatives of the Public Oil Corporation, the Greek Oil refinery of Aspropirgos and advisers of the minister are among the delegation. TURKMEN ADDRESSES UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY 4 OCT

[Text] Ankara, 4 Oct (AA) -- Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen of Turkey condemned the massacres at Sabra, Shatila camps and held Israel responsible for the killings during a speech at the 37th meeting of the U.N. General Assembly today, according to a Foreign Ministry statement.

The Turkish public opinion was deeply grieved and worried over the expansion of the Israeli attacks and the inhuman acts against the Palestinian people, Turkmen said, stressing that Israeli acts were brutal and the human loss reached incredible dimensions. "Everybody should know that there will be no peace in the Middle East as long as Israel is not effectively dissuaded from her uncompromising stance, her readiness to resort every moment to force, disrespect for interests of the other countries in the region, disrespect for the U.N. principles and resolutions," he stressed.

"The direction Lebanese events will take in the future will be vitally important for the region. Lebanon must be able to survive as an independent country and maintain her territorial integrity and unity. Lebanon must not be under the influence of any other country in the region, Turkmen said, stressing the need for withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon and calling for "every effort to prevent any delaying tactics Israel may resort to."

"The situation in Lebanon has made the solution of the Middle East crisis even more urgent," Turkmen siad, calling for total withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied Arab lands, recognition of the Palestinian people's rights, including the right to establish an independent state, participation of PLO in peace talks as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, recognition of the right to live in fully secure and internationally recognized boundaries for all states in the region and preservation of the Arab and Islamic character of the Al Quds (Jerusalem) city. These are the prerequisites of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, he stressed.

Gulf War

The Gulf war was a cause of concern and instability in the region, Turkmen said, expressing regret that efforts to end the war proved unsuccessful up till now.

Afghanistan

Referring to the invasion of Afghanistan, the Turkish minister expressed regret that the right for self-determination was taken away from that heroic people and wished that the U.N. secretary general's efforts would bring about a solution and foreign troops withdrawal.

International Terror

On terror victimizing Turkish diplomats, Turkmen expressed his wish that more effective international measures would be taken to prevent such acts. Citing examples of Armenian attacks, the minister said these were based on a propaganda campaign distorting historical facts. The Ottoman Empire collapsed following the First World War and many new states were established on its territories and the young Turkish Republic could not possibly be held responsible for incidents of that era. Historical (?documents) prove very well that the campaign of lies concerning the so-called Armenian massacre had nothing to do with the facts, he stressed.

Turkmen then listed the massacres perpetrated by the militant Armenians victimizing Turkish civilians in the past. He also referred to the fact that figures given by Armenians themselves hold that one million and a half Armenians had been "massacred," though the actual number of Armenians living in the Ottoman Empire was in fact less than 1.2 million people.

Nearly one million Armenians were living in the northeastern provinces then and half of these went into the Soviet Union, with the other half deported. (Nearly 400,000 left Turkey for European countries and the U.S. and nearly 100,000 preferred to remain in Turkey.) Turkmen stressed that over two million Turkish citizens lost their lives during the same war.

Turkmen also deplored the attitude of certain European countries who provide asylum to terrorists and said those countries would not be able to shed responsibility originating from these terrorist acts.

Economy

Referring to the world economy, Turkmen deplored protectionist measures being put into effect by most of the industrialized countries. This attitude would undermine efforts of progress by developing countries, he added.

Comments on Cyprus

The island, which had been in the past a source of dangerous tensions, has been enjoying stability for 8 years, the minister said, noting the efforts of the U.N. secretary general to bring about constructive talks between the two communities on the island.

"The encouraging progress of the intercommunal talks have reinforced our belief in them as the means for resolution of the difference," noted Turkmen, suggesting that the two communities boost up their efforts to achieve a valid solution within the framework of a federal structure. He advised leaders of both communities not to believe suggestions from parties trying to exploit the difference for their own interests.

Turkey remains "committed to the aim of achieving a just and lasting solution and goes on encouraging intercommunal talks under the auspices of the U.N. secretary general," he added.

The minister also referred to the Cambodian, Nambimian and Korean issues during his speech.

VOTCP ANNOUNCES PLAN FOR IMPROVED BROADCASTS

Our radio has decided to prepare more qualitative broadcasts. To this end, we have made certain new arrangements in our broadcasts. As of now, our editors will engage in more intensive work to enrich our programs and news. Meanwhile, dear listeners, you will notice that our radio broadcasts will gradually change in form as well. In addition, we will broadcast listeners' letters and replies to them in a more organized manner. Developments regarding the working class abroad will be spread throughout the programs, rather than only once a week.

As of today, our listeners will also meet the editors who prepare our programs. The VOTCP editorial group is awaiting assessments and criticism of our broadcasts by all our listeners through all possible means.

EAST SCORES WESTERN PROPOSALS AT VIENNA TALKS

[Text] Yesterday at the Vienna negotiations on a reduction of forces in central Europe, the East again sharply criticized the Western draft agreement submitted on 8 July 1982. GDR chief delegate Andre Wieland expressed the opinion that the Western move "for all practical purposes amounts to a rejection of the offered understanding" and that it aims at achieving one-sided military advantages for NATO.

A Western press spokesman, on the other hand, stressed that the NATO countries have made essential concessions to Eastern ideas by adopting the concept of an organically-linked multiphase agreement and of a bindingly formulated reduction commitment by each individual signatory country.

AUSTRIA

INTERIOR MINISTER LANC ON NEOFASCIST ACTIVITIES

AU041110 Vienna WIENER ZIETUNG in German 2 Oct 82 p 2

[Excerpts] According to Interior Minister Lanc, the fascist scene in Austria has never been as numerically weak as it is today. Nevertheless, deep-rooted prejudices could provide starting points for a potentially broad fascist movement. This was stated by Interior Minister Erwin Lanc at the opening of the "Karl-Muenichreiter-Forum" [Muenichreiter was a leader of the Socialist uprising in Austria in 1934 who was executed on 15 February 1934] in Vienna [on 30 September]. This is why the active struggle against these deep-rooted attitudes such as xenophobia is all the more necessary. Commenting on the current discussion about a ban of neofascist groupings, the minister declared that should such a measure be taken, the constitutional law principles must be observed.

In the opinion of the interior minister, the neofascist camp has been reduced to about half of its original size in the past 30 years. This potential, he said, now consists of about 15,000-20,000 people, who have adopted all fascist principles. The main problem is, however, that widespread attitudes among the population such as hostility toward anything foreign or support of capital punishment under deteriorating economic conditions could serve as a starting point for a broader rightist-radical movement, Lanc said.

A potential amendment of the Austrian party law would primarily have to provide for clear-cut stipulations permitting, in the event of their violation, the banning of the party concerned, Lanc declared. He added that it was impossible to ban any neofascist group on the strength of the current party law, which has been in effect since 1977, because it is actually merely a formal party registration law. In the event of an amendment -- a question which the Austrian Socialist Party will have examined by a jurists commission -- it must also be taken into consideration, however, that the banning of a party might produce a solidarity effect with this party among the population, Lanc said.

PARTIES WELCOME NEW COALITION NEGOTIATOR

PM051527 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 2 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Unnamed "own correspondents" report: "People's Party For Freedom and Democracy and Christian Democratic Appeal Satisfied With W. Scholten as Government Formation Negotiations Leader"]

[Excerpt] The Hague --- People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] parliamentary group leader Nijpels in particular, has been enthusiastic in his reaction to the appointment of Mr W. Scholten, vice president of the Council of State, as government formation negotiations leader. The Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA], for whom the appointment of Scholten also came as a surprise, also reacted positive on Friday evening [1 October]. Scholten, who in the Van Agt/Wiegel cabinet -- CDA/VVD cabinet up to May 1981 -- was defense minister for a time, received a request from the queen "to investigate in the short term the prospects of forming a cabinet which will be able to count on fruitful cooperationwith the States General."

According to Nijpels, who had advised the queen to appoint a government formation negotiations leader from his own party, the appointment of Scholten offers a good prospect for the formation of a cabinet comprising the CDA and the VVD. Nijpels stressed that Scholten had worked in an earlier coalition of Christian Democrats and Liberals and, he added, it was thanks to the VVD that Scholten had reached the post of vice president of the Council of State.

With the appointment of Scholten, the queen, who is herself president of the Council of State, ignored the advice of the majority of parliament members. The fact that Scholten is a member of the CDA does not mean that advice from this party has been honored. Constitutionally, Scholten is the queen's highest adviser and because of this, is thought of as an official who is above party politics. In this respect, the fact that Scholten has been entrusted with the government formation attempt is of great importance.

Scholten's brief is very wide in the sense that indications of the size of the majority on whose support the future cabinet will have to be able to count are absent. In the light of Scholten's predecessor Van Kemenade's activities, however, it is clear that he will begin work on the formation of a center-right cabinet.

DPA REPORTS BREZHNEV MESSAGE TO CHANCELLOR KOHL

[Text] Bonn, 5 Oct (DPA) -- Soviet state and pary head Leonid Brezhnev has expressed the desire for good cooperation with the new Federal Government. The message was relayed by the Soviet ambassador in Bonn, Vladimir Semenov who, a government spokesman said, was received by Chancellor Helmut Kohl today for a half-hour talk. Semenov conveyed greetings from the Soviet leadership to the new chancellor.

GENSCHER, GROMYKO DISCUSS FRG-USSR RELATIONS

[Text] New York, 5 Oct (DPA) -- In New York today, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher invited Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko to visit Bonn. The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that Gromyko had responded positively to the invitation but that a date had not yet been set.

Following a meeting with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly, Genscher also had a meeting with Gromyko. The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that during the two-hour talk with Gromyko, Genscher had stressed that the new Federal Government was anxious to continue relations with the Soviet Union in the same spirit as before. He said that Bonn's policy in the sphere of arms control also remained unchanged.

According to the spokesman, the atmosphere during the talk was "just like before." Genscher said that they knew one another and behaved in a frank and friendly manner toward one another. Gromyko proposed a toast to the continuation of the dialogue between the Soviet Union and the Federal Republic.

Much time was devoted during the talk to a discussion of the state of preparations for the planned resumption of the CSCE follow-up meeting in Madrid on 9 November. Genscher was of the opinion that a liberalization of the situation in Poland would create a favorable climate in Europe for the progress of this conference.

The spokesman said that Genscher and Gromyko had agreed that the Madrid CSCE meeting must end with a specific result. He had also explained the [word indistinct] position on the Soviet-American negotiations on the limiting of strategic arms (START), and on the reduction of medium-range missiles in Europe. Here Genscher had spoken in favor of the maintenance of the balance at the lowest possible level.

In connection with German-Soviet relations, Genscher expressed concern about delays regarding the departure of Soviet citizens of German ethnic origin from the USSR. He also pointed out that the number of those granted exit visas had been decreasing over the past few months.

Genscher said that the further development of German-Soviet relations on the basis of the Eastern treaties was the long-term aim of all democratic parties in the Federal Republic. The new Federal Government (?would) develop and flesh out its relations with Moscow and the other East European states on the basis of Eastern treaties and the CSCE Final Act.

FOREIGN SECRETARY MEETS WITH POLAND'S OLSZOWSKI

[Text] UN - New York, 30 Sep (DPA) -- Berndt von Staden, state secretary in the Foreign Ministry, had an exchange of views with Polish Foreign Minister Stefan Olszowski today at the end of his political talks on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly.

According to a Foreign Ministry spokesman, Olszowski gave a comprehensive picture of developments in Poland. Von Staden stressed the continuity of Bonn's foreign policy and said that this also applies to relations with Poland.

Von Staden then noted that the three demands raised by the Western alliance with regard to Poland -- the lifting of martial law, the release of interness and the resumption of dialogue with the church and the trade union -- will continue to apply unchanged. For the Federal Republic, the Helsinki Final Act and the CSCE process resulting from it, continue to be the yardstick for all European cooperation.

WOERNER ON RELATIONS WITH U.S., USSR, FRANCE

DW051445 Bonn DIE WELT in German 5 Oct 82 p 4

[Interview with Defense Minister Manfred Woerner by editor Ruediger Moniac, date and place not given]

[Excerpt] WELT: Mr Minister, you are known to be Francophile aside from your excellent connections with the United States. How do you want to animate military and military-technical cooperation with Paris and other allies, particularly the United States?

Woerner: As far as I know, great preparedness exists in France to animate strategic and military cooperation. Consultations on this issue are in the immediate offing. I myself would like to point out that I attribute greatest significance to intensified cooperation with France. I hear that the French have prepared concrete proposals; we will be eager to listen to them.

WELT: How about your approach to the United States?

Woerner: Also, a Federal Government headed by the CU/CSU Union will naturally represent German interests. Differing interests must be expected. In contrast to earlier governments and to my predecessor, however, I would like to handle relations with Washington in the spirit of mutual understanding, that is, preparedness to make mutual compromises. We will discuss this in mutual trustfulness and only in a confidential manner.

WELT: The new Bundeswehr weapons, such as Tornado, Leopard 2, Roland and antitank helicopters, are extremely expensive. What will you do ensure that military technology won't become too expensive in the nineties?

Woerner: Naturally no patent prescription exists in this respect. I will have the entire planning examined. One thing is certain, however. We must exploit the opportunities of modern technology. The almost unbelievable neglect of research and development must be stopped.

WELT: Must the flexible response strategy be further developed?

Woerner: Every strategy must be constantly adapted to existing realities. I see no alternative to the flexible response strategy. However, existing credibility gaps must be closed. They were created due to a decrease of our defense substance. The defense flexibility has suffered from it. The credibility gap can be closed only by strengthening the conventional fighting power.

WELT: You and other representatives of the CDU/CSU union reject the term "security partnership" propagated by Egon Bahr. How would you describe NATO's relations with the Soviet Union?

Woerner: First of all I want to make it clear that the FRG doesn't threaten anybody, and in particular, not the Soviet Union. However, Soviet armament can have as its only aim, placing us politically under pressure. There is no other way to explain it.

It goes far beyond the legitimate security needs of the Soviet Union. My first answer: More security will be created if the Soviet Union will be prepared to respect our legitimate security interest and pursue controlled and mutual disarmament together with us. In addition, work must be carried on with regard to a policy aiming for the decrease of political tensions and antagonisms. Our basic approach to the Soviet Union is aimed at cooperation. On the other hand, however, it must be clear to the Soviets that they cannot have our support while continuing their armament against us.

WELT: Do you have an impressive word for this kind of policy?

Woerner: The policy of actively safeguarding peace.

WELT: How does the role of nuclear weapons fit into security policy?

Woerner: The main task of our defense efforts is to avoid war, every kind of war, nuclear as well as conventional war. As long as the Soviet Union has every kind of nuclear weapons and as long as it continues to strongly increase its potential in medium-range weapons, we cannot renounce having nuclear weapons on our territory. Without nuclear deterrence, peace cannot be safeguarded under existing conditions.

WELT: How does the position of inspector general fit in the ministry?

Woerner: His position doesn't seem satisfactory to me in many ways. Changes, however, must be preceded by examinations.

WELT: How should the Buneswehr maintain its personnel strength in the nineties? Extended basic military service? Will foreigners be drafted? More volunteers or more reservists?

Woerner: I can only say that you can only expect me to perform miracles the day after tomorrow. At the moment, I am about to familiarize myself with the work.

Views Bundeswehr, Disarmament

[Excerpts] Bonn, 5 Oct (DPA) -- The Bundeswehr will remain an instrument for the guarantee of peace, in the words of the new defense minister, Manfred Woerner (CDU). In taking up his office in the Defense Ministry, Woerner said on Tuesday that much more effort had to be made than previously to convince the population of the reason and necessity for defense and the Bundeswehr.

Woerner had made it quite clear to the forces that the FRG is not threatening anyone. "But everyone should know that we remain resolved to courageously defend the rights and the freedom of the German people." Only if the Bundeswehr is capable of fighting will it not need to fight.

Woerner emphasized that the majority of the population supported the Bundeswehr. But among some of the younger generation -- and not only among them -- indifference, doubts, even rejection of defense is growing. A people that is not resolved to defend its freedom is gambling away its freedom.

Woerner made clear that the Bundeswehr is under the obligation to be most thrifty and economical. Money is in short supply. The defense minister emphasized that he is not averse toward disarmament with security. A defense policy without a serious desire for arms control has no chance in the parliamentary democracy of the FRG. What is needed is a mutual, balanced and controlled disarmament.

TEXT OF CDU/CSU-FDP COALITION AGREEMENT

DW010933 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 29 Sep 88 pp 3, 4

["Text" of provisional coalition agreement drafted by the negotiating commissions of the CDU, CSU and FDP]

[Text] I. 1983 Federal Budget

The 1983 federal budget will be redrafted on the basis of the coalition negotiations and the resolutions of the new Federal Government.

It will be presented to the Bundestag at the earliest possible date by the Federal Government and the coalition parliamentary parties. At this time, the old draft budget will be withdrawn. The federal budget will be passed in December 1983 [as published].

Concomitant Laws:

On the basis of the coalition agreements and the resolutions of the new Federal Government, the necessary changes and amendments will be introduced by the coalition parliamentary parties in the Bundestag commissions. The concomitant laws will be integrated into one law.

II. Tax Changes

The arrangements envisaged in the old government resolutions on company retirement funds and joint tax filing for married couples will no longer be applicable. The joint tax filing for married couples will be changed into family joint filing without financial disadvantage [kostenneutral] as of 1 January 1984.

The value added tax will be increased by 1 percent as of 1 July 1983. As of 1 January 1983, the revenue (gross cash receipts of DM2.2 billion for the state in 1983) will be used for tax relief to improve the framework conditions for investments, especially for medium-size enterprises. In this connection, the amount of tax to be paid by farmers in advance will be raised from 7.5 to 8 percent.

The measures envisaged include:

1. The promotion of the construction of private homes by allowing the deduction of interest on loans for new buildings.

2. Tax relief when insolvent enterprises or enterprises threatened by insolvency are taken over.

3. The promotion of new individual businesses including advisory assistance.

4. The limitation of the addition of permament debt interest costs for operating profit taxes, as well as of the addition of permanent debts for operating capital taxes with a financial compensation for the communities (business tax apportionment or increase of their share of income taxes).

5. As of 1 January 1984, additional relief intended to stimulate investments will be financed from additional value added tax revenues.

6. Investment aid: In 1983 and 1984, those with a taxable income of more than DM50,000/100,000 will have to pay a mandatory loan of 5 percent of their tax liability. This does not apply to taxpayers who make investments worth five times the amount of the loan in their own interprises. The loan will yield no interest and will be repaid during 1987-89, but not earlier than 3 years after the initial payment.

The loans will be used to further social housing construction of apartments and private homes as follows: for building loans and intermediate financing programs; for a program to promote the construction of rental apartments in densely populated areas and for a program to promote private property being used by the owners.

7. The government statement will list the following medium-term tasks: a marked decrease in structural deficits; a further reorganization of the tax system to promote investments and employment and the reduction of the overall burden of taxes and levies on enterprises and working people.

III. Proposals for Handling Pending Legislation Procedures in the Housing Construction Policy:

1. The amendment on land to be used for construction will be withdrawn.

2. The bill on the purchase of real estate (Bundesrat draft) will be fully discussed without delay after coordination with the laender.

3. It is assumed that the comparative rent bill (mietspiegel-gesetz) will not pass the Bundesrat. The comparative rent bill will be done away with.

4. It is assumed that the 1981 rent bill amendment will not pass the Bundesrat. The coalition factions will immediately submit a new rent bill which will be based on an initial draft with the following changes:

A) The admission of graduated rents in existing housing inventories [bestand].

B) Regarding rental contracts for a specific term, an informal settlement will be adopted in line with the proposal of the mediation commission.

C) The extension of deadlines for serving notice on the grounds that the owner needs the space for his own purposes will not apply in cases of conversion [unwandlungsfaelle].

D) The legally envisaged right to preemption will not apply to cases of conversion.

E) Comparative apartment rents will be based on data from the past 3 years.

F) It is permissible for an owner to use comparable objects or property he owns to prove rent is comparable.

G) The tolerance regulation [duldungspflichtregelung] will be reviewed with the aim of making the acceptability examination [zumutbarkeitspruefung] more objective.

H) The process of giving notice in one and two family houses will be brought in line with rented lodgings (possibly to be postponed for later amendment).

5. It is assumed that the draft law on advancing the assessment of real estate units will fail in the Bundesrat. This bill will be done away with. Agreement exists that, as a whole, all real estate must be reassessed. Rental property will be assessed as before, on the basis of the profit it yields.

IV. Federal Budget Economizing

The 1983 federal budget will be reduced within the fiscal framework of the concomitant laws (DM8.5 billion) by at least DM5 billion by cutting legal commitments and subsidies. Moreover, alleviations for laender and communities should be decided upon. Since the planned additional yields through a new regulation of campaign retirement funds pensions and the law on joint tax returns for married couples will not occur, federal budget cuts of DM5.5 billion are necessary.

The following have been agreed on: direct subsidies: cuts of DM500 million based on individual proposals to be worked out; public service: 1983 salaries for government employees will be established in 1982 by federal law.

The framework for the following 2 years will be outlined in a policy statement. The total public service financial framework for 1983 envisages a 2 percent increase as of 1 July 1983 (in addition there will be an amount of about 1.5 percent resulting from legal or wage agreement settlements as of 1 January 1983). With a view to the intended equal treatment of civil servants, employees and workers, the 1982 civil service salaries law will be implemented 1 month earlier than planned. Expenditures beyond this framework in 1983 will lead to cuts in slots that become vacant on the salary table [tarifbereich].

In contrast to current efforts, at least DM700 million must be cut from the 1983 federal budget. In this connection, a socially graduated personal contribution by civil servants to the special support benefits they receive should be aimed for in accordance with the model practiced in several laender.

V. New Social Policy Principles

1. Contributions to the Federal Labor Office [Bundesanstalt fuer Arbeit] will be assessed: A) For pension insurance according to the level of the unemployment insurance rate; and B) for health insurance according to 100 percent of the gross income. This will result in no federal budget changes with regard to earlier calculations by the Federal Government.

2. A regulation will be incorporated into the social legislation book (general part) to the effect that temporary voluntary renunciation of social benefits will not affect the basic legal right to such benefits.

3. Pension insurance contributions will be fixed at 18.5 percent as of 1 January 1984.

4. The pension adjustment date in all fields (pension insurance, accident insurance, care for war victims, agricultural pensions and equalization payments) will be moved from 1 January 1983 to 1 July 1983. The adjustment rate pf 5.6 percent will remain.

The delay in wage increases will have a corresponding effect on civil service pensions. Due to the pause in the adjustment of pensions, a considerable decrease of federal subsidies -- DM1.7 billion -- will be achieved in 1983 compared with the decisions of the old Federal Government: amounting thus to a total of DM3 billion. If necessary, parts of this amount can be raised within the framework of the Federal Labor Office.

5. Likewise, effective 1 July, health insurance payments from pensioners in the amount of 1 percent will be collected.

6. The flexible retirement limit should be reduced to age 60, with deductions computed on the basis of insurance rate figures. The deadline for putting this into force is to be fixed after a survey of its effects on the current financial situation of pensions insurance.

For workers and employees of public service, it is a precondition that they do not derive any benefits from the extra optional old-age insurance. The valid regulations for public servants remain unaffected.

7. The objective remains to strictly adjust pensions to the payments made. What is sought is a relief of the pension insurance from the responsibility for benefits other than pensions, as well as a new stipulation of the principles covering the Federal Government subsidy.

8. A patient's own participation in the costs for hospitalization will be extended to 14 days; children under age 18 will be exempted.

It is necessary to consider the question of whether the use of leave time in the case of cures can replace the envisaged individual contribution, in total or in part. What must be urgently pursued is the establishment of a clarity of expenditures for benefits covered by insurance under the social health insurance system. The consultation of the company doctor is to be intensified (Art. 369 B RVO) [Reich Insurance Ordinance]. The company doctor will be informed about every sick call.

Within the framework of the talks on the reduction of mixed financing [by Federal Government and laender]; it is planned to negotiate with the laender on a transfer of the responsibility for hospital financing and legislation.

On a long-term basis, safeguards covering the risk of permament care cases and for intensifying home nursing instead of hospitalization are to be pursued. Available benefits under the legal health insurance must be relieved of the payments for negligible or luxury therapies. Provisions will be made for penalties imposed for doctor's certificates issued as a favor.

9. Social assistance

The limitation of the increased rate for the standard aid payments for subsistence support (3 percent as of 1 January 1982) adopted in late 1981 will be set at 2 percent effective 1 July 1983, in keeping with the regulations for the public service and for the pensioners. The criteria for the future establishment of the standard rates are to be newly drafted during 1983.

It is planned to grant legislative authority to the laender for the planning and requirements in the field of public housing effective 1 January 1983. The objective is to reduce costs for permanent residents through social aid outside a home.

10. Labor promotion law

The constribution rate [for unemployment insurance] remains at 4.5 percent. It is agreed to more broadly differentiate the period on unemployment benefit payments in keeping with the periods during which contributions were paid. This is aimed at saving DM500 million in 1983 as against existing regulations. The percentage rates for unemployment payments and unemployment aid benefits will not be changed. The rates for the promotion of measures toward rehabilitations and for job promotion must be newly fixed, effective 1 January 1983. The savings in 1983 in this field, as compared with current regulations, will amount to DM500 million.

11. Children's bonus

Envisaged is the reduction of the children's bonus, effective 1 Janaury 1983, to DM80 for the second child (by DM20), to DM150 for the third child and every other child by (DM70), beginning at a net income level of DM42,000 per annum for married couples with 2 children, and with an increase in this limit of DM7,000 for each additional child. The savings in the 1983 federal budget: DM1.3 billion.

12. Training promotion benefits [bafoeg] for pupils

Benefits for pupils will be maintained only in the event of intolerable distance between home and school. The new regulation will take effect with the 1983-84 school year. Benefits for students will be converted to a loan basis, with a new system of repayment conditions. The new regulation will come into force with the beginning of the 1983-84 winter semester. The savings in the 1983 federal budget: DM200 million.

In this connection, the amount of tax exempt income for training purposes will be cut in half, effective 1 January 1984. The amount of child care will be reviewed with the objective of a doing away with proof of the use of that benefit, and of a lump sum assessment and a reduction in context with the introduction of the family joint tax return system.

As for rent support payments, structural streamlining has been agreed upon effective 1 January 1983, especially with respect to the definition of income or a linear cut. The savings in the 1983 federal budget: DM100 million. The sum of the savings envisaged for 1983 comes to DM5.3 billion. Further cuts of at least DM200 million will be submitted for the budget discussions. Potentially inadvertable additional requirements by ministeries will be decided upon in the course of 1983 in connection with a supplementary budget.

IV. Projects for the Promotion of Investments and Employment as Well as More Far-Reaching Tasks

Under the new draft of the 1983 federal budget, it is planned to increase the federal funds for important common tasks (regional economic promotion, agricultural structure, constructive of institutes of higher learning) as well as for other important community projects (hospital financing, townscaping). The Federal Government will submit to the laender a fair offer for balancing the payments of the childrens' bonus and for the new distribution of the turnover tax.

The Federal Government's program on initiatives for making a living will be considerably improved with regard to its conditions, effective 1 January 1983. An agreement will be sought with the laender for the purpose of harmonizing and concentrating the promotion.

A draft bill on the promotion of property accumulation by working people will be submitted after the Bundestag elections.

For the spring of 1983, it is planned to adopt proposals pertaining to the restructuring of the federal budget aimed at enhancing the investment quota and reducing the structural deficit, proposals which will entail an extra limitation of the federal budget deficit already effective 1 September 1983.

There is fundamental readiness to adopt, as soon as possible, the law on the streamlining of statistics on the basis of the Bundesrat's draft.

A. Policy on Germany and on Berlin

(Editor's note: There were no agreements on this point) [Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German on 30 September 1982 on page 5, in a report on the final version of the coalition agreement, indicates that the following passage is to be inserted at this point: "The Federal Government's policy on Germany is based on the right due the German people to implement peacefully its right to self-determination. The Federal Government thereby lives up to the mandate of the Basic Law to complete Germany's unity in freedom. In the interest of peace in Europe and of the whole German people, the Federal Government will seek an improvement in the relations between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic. In doing so, it will be guided by the Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany, the treaty on Germany, the inter-German basic treaty, and the letter on German unity.

["Inter-German trade remains an important element of cooperation between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic. Inter-German agreements must contain balanced, reliable services and return services in the interest of the people in divided Germany. This is why the Federal Government upholds the demand for a retraction of the increase in the compulsory exchange rate. The Federal Government will continue to urge the gradual mitigation of the inhuman conditions along the inter-German border in keeping with human rights.

["The Federal Government will keep in mind the preservation of the special legal and political nature of the inter-German relations. In order to keep the national problem open both inwardly and outwardly, the Federal Government demands the strict observance and full application of the quadripartite agreement on Berlin, the consolidation of Berlin's ties with the Federal Republic and the maintenance of Berlin's outside representation."]

B. Foreign and security policies

1. European integration

The Federal Government advocates the political enhancement of the European Community, especially the early adoption of the German-Italian initiative concerning a European act [for European unity] and will continue to champion the early EC accession by Portugal and Spain.

The Federal Government adheres to the close cooperation with France in all intra- and extra-European issues. [Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT of 30 September reports that the above passage has been rephrased in the final version as follows: "The Federal Government accords special significance to close cooperation with France on the basis of the German-French treaty."]

2. Security and disarmament

The Federal Government unreservedly and unequivocally reaffirms the positions of the alliance. [Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT of 30 September indicates that the final version has extended the above passage and added the following sentence: "The Federal Government unreservedly and unequivocally reaffirms the positions of the alliance including an effective defense. The service of our soldiers in the Bundeswehr is aimed at peace in freedom."] In shaping its relations with the Warsaw Pact states, the Federal Government will be guided by the principles of the Harmel report of 1967. It will continue to advocate the alliance positions which pertain to: The support of the U.S. position during the Geneva negotiations on strategic arms reduction (START); the negotiations on a mutual renunciation of land-based medium range missiles (INF) and the review of NATO's counterarming requirements in the medium-range field in the light of concrete results of these negotiations; the preclusion of the emergence of another grey zone in the field of the nuclear medium-range missiles of shorter range; the Vienna negotiations on Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions (MBFR); a concrete negotiating mandate for a European disarmament conference which, in its first phase, is to reach agreement on confidence-building measures ranging from the Atlantic to the Urals (KAE) [not further identified]; the Geneva negotiations on a complete and verifiable ban of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons; and the second UN Special General Assembly on disarmament in New York.

The Federal Government advocates the early adoption of the agreement on the ban of the development, production and stockpiling of biological weapons, which has been submitted to the German Bundestag.

The Federal Government adheres to the principles of balance, transparence and verifiability in all its efforts toward arms control and disarmament. The Federal Government will further pursue the German proposals advanced in this field, for instance: practical proposals for the verification of a treaty on the ban of chemical weapons; disclosure of the military budgets; and the disclosure of the arms exports.

3. Treaties with the East and CSCE Final Act

On the basis of the treaties with the East, the Final Act of Helsinki and the international pacts on human rights, the Federal Government will continue the policy of active safeguarding of peace, genuine detente and dialogue and cooperation.

Such a policy also serves the interest of the people of our nation which is forced to live in two states. [Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT of 30 September says that the final version renders the above passage as follows: "Such a policy also serves the interest of the people of our nation who suffer under Germany's partition."]

The Federal Government advocates the continuation of the Madrid CSCE followup meeting because it is there that the special German interests can be brought to bear.

The Federal Government will continue to support in the CSCE process, the endeavors of the people in Eastern Europe to achieve implementation of human rights.

4. The Middle East

The Federal Government continues to advocate a lasting peace settlement on the basis of the following three principles: Israel's right to exist within recognized and ensured borders; the Palestinian people's right to self-determination; and renunciation of force by all parties in the conflict.

It advocates the restoration of the sovereignty and unity of Lebanon.

In the future also, the Federal Government will champion the closest coordination between the European and the American Middle East policies.

5. Third World

The Federal Government advocates: The support of the efforts of the Third World states toward true nonalignment, wherefore the Federal Government advocates the pullout of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan; respect for the independence and sovereignty of the Third World states; support in the implementation of elementary human rights in keeping with the two UN human rights pacts; support of regional mergers; rejection of the attempt to transpose the East-West conflict on the Third World; and strengthening of the independence of the Third World by economic development aid. [Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT of 30 September indicates that the final version renders the above passage as follows: "Strengthening of the independence of the Third World by economic development aid in the direction of more social justice and the implementation of the elementary human rights."]

As far as the Federal Government is concerned, the development of the Third World is a worldwide peace policy. This requires a trustful North-South dialogue aimed at building a stable cooperation between industrial and developing countries in the awareness of mutual dependence.

The Federal Republic of Germany participates in the political efforts for political conflict solutions all over the world. The dispatch of German troops to regions outside the NATO area is out of the question.

The Federal Government reaffirms the statements by the NATO conferences of Luxembourg and Bonn concerning the necessity of consultations with the other alliance partners on events in the Third World which might have an effect on their security. These consultations have the goal of an appropriate consideration of the West's strategic interests along the lines of Europe's and America's indivisible security.

Within the framework of the Western contact group (United States, Great Britain, France, Canada, Federal Republic of Germany) the Federal Government will continue to strive for a peaceful solution of the Namibia issue.

6. Economic relations with the European state trade countries

In keeping with the principles of the Harmel report, the Federal Government abides by the agreement reached at the world economic summit in Versailles to pursue a reasonable and nuanced economic course of action toward the USSR and Eastern Europe, in harmony with the joint political and security interests.

[Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT of 30 September indicates that the following additional passage has been inserted in the final vrsion; "In this connection, Western cooperation in the improvement of the international system for the control of the transfer of strategic goods and in the national enforcement of security controls plays a special role."]

To guarantee auniform stance of the alliance partners on questions concerning East-West economic relations, the Federal Government will strive to achieve the establishment of a permament information and consultation organ within the Atlantic alliance framework.

The Federal Government abides by the NATO council decisions pertaining to economic measures by the alliance partners against violence in Afghanistan and Poland.

[Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT of 30 September reports that the last two paragraphs above have been deleted in the final version of the coalition agreement.]

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON GOVERNMENT CHANGE

DW051117 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1000 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Interview with FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher by reporter Kopp in the program "Interview of the Week"; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Helmut Kohl received 256 votes as the new chancellor. Does this result reflect the ability to act which you hoped the new Federal Government would have?

[Answer] Yes, this is a majority stressing the ability to act and I'm very certain that there will be a greater majority now in the Bundestag for a businesslike policy. It is one thing when a deputy believes he is not in a position to elect a government, and another when he believes he is in a position to support the government's policy. It is every important for the clarity of the government program to ensure that the support which was shown on Friday is expanded during the time until 6 March.

[Question] You questioned the foreign political freedom of action which was once the core of the coalition. Continuity and predictability, labels you had given your policy, were no longer guaranteed in your opinion. If you were to meet with Secretary of State Shultz and Foreign Minister Gromyko in the near future, could your discussion partner then count on the new reliability?

[Answer] This is a reliability which must remain. Our country is located on the border between the East and the West. Clarity and continuity of foreign policy is of particularly great value here. It must stand the test in all fields of foreign and security policies.

This was indeed a problem for the FDP-SPD coalition because our citizens could observe how increasing segments of the SPD failed to support the foreign and security policies of the Federal Government after the 1980 Bundestag elections, and how foreign and security policies even became the instrument within the SPD with which to fight against Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. This is a fact and it has not been forgotten. These internal party disputes of the Social Democrats in this field certainly contributed to the fact that the government had to struggle with increasing problems.

Now it is important for the new coalition to demonstrate with clear support of continuous German foreign and security policies not only to our own country and our citizens but to the world that the FRG, whose foreign policy has been one of constancy since the first day of its existence, will unwaveringly continue its policy.

[Question] The open rejection by some segments of the SPD and also by some parts of your party of NATO's dual decision as well as the bitterness about interference in the natural gas pipeline deal have reflected growing self-confidence in the face of the leading Western power. Do German interests permit a change of positions at all?

[Answer] This is not a matter of changing positions. On the contrary, continuity means maintaining and developing your positions. The test of survival for NATO's dual decision lies in the will to consider both parts to be equally significant. The Federal Government will use all its strength to help achieve a positive result at the current Geneva negotiations. The FRG Government, like all its Western partners, has proposed the renunciation of land-based medium-range missiles on both sides: in the West and in the East. These land-based medium-range missiles do not yet exist in the West. In this connection, we appeal to the Soviet Union to remove its land-based medium-range missiles. If it will do this, there will be no need for counterarmament. So the key clearly lies in the hands of the Soviet Union. It simply has to use it and we appeal to the Soviet Union to do this.

If the Soviet Union renounced its land-based medium-range missiles, it would be the first time for complete mutual renunciation to be achieved in an important area of weapons of mass destruction. That could be the starting point for disarmament negotiations which would then lead to mutual renunciation in other fields of weapons of mass destruction. In the negotiations on medium-range weapons, I see a chance to reduce arms race for the first time. Since we see how the people in the West and the East are concerned about peace and about the problem of how to decrease armament burdens, all sides should realize the opportunity to give real meaning to the term disarmament negotiations.

[Question] Mr Genscher, your political adversaries make the accusation that the coalition paper deals only vaguely with foreign policy, and that German policy remained a blank sheet. When will this sheet be filled out?

[Answer] It was made clear in the German Bundestag on Friday, that the assertion with regard to German policy is wrong; a definite document was adopted here also with regard to German policy. I haven't heard the accusation that it was vague, on the contrary, it has been recognized that this part particularly reflects the continuity of German foreign and security policies.

Forming relations between the FRG and the GDR naturally seems to me to be of special importance. I know that many of our fellow citizens in the GDR ask themselves these days whether the new Federal Government will continue to strive for an improvement of relations with the GDR, or whether they must fear that there will be tensions which will have a negative effect on the people's possibilities to meet each other.

I would like to tell our fellow citizens in the GDR, in my central German homeland, that the new Federal Government will use all its strength to facilitate a further positive development of relations between the FRG and the GDR. We know that German policy, the forming of relations between the FRG and the GDR, is European peace policy, that we Germans in the West and in the East should act on the basis of common responsibility not only for our country, but for peace in Europe, and that the new Federal Government considers it its task to contribute to an improvement of relations with the GDR to help our fellow citizens in the GDR to meet other people, thus doing what they expect us to do.

You can be quite sure that Helmut Kohl, the new federal chancellor in office, will be aware of his responsibility for the mutual relations of Germans and act respectively.

BREMEN FDP DEMANDS GENSCHER RESIGNATION

DW060957 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Bremen, 5 Oct -- The delegates of the Bremen FDP land party congress have adopted a motion demanding the resignation of Hans-Dietrich Genscher as party chairman. The vote was 39 to 38 with 1 invalid vote.

CDU/CSU BUNDESTAG GROUP ELECTS NEW CHAIRMAN

[Text] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) -- The CDU/CSU Bundestag parliamentary group elected the Hesse CDU politican, Alfred Dregger, as its new chairman today. Dregger thus succeeds Helmut Kohl, who became the new federal chancellor on Friday.

Dregger received 213 of the 220 valid votes cast. Three deputies voted against and four abstained.

UNEMPLOYMENT CONTINUES RISE IN SEPTEMBER

[Excerpt] Nuremberg, 4 Oct (DPA) -- The number of unemployed in the Federal Republic has continued to increase in September, with 1,820,030 people out of work. This is the highest level for September since 1948, according to the Federal Labor Office in Nuremberg. In August, the figure was 1,797,100 unemployed.

The unemployment rate is now 7.5 percent compared with 7.4 percent in August. In September 1981, the rate was 5.4 percent.

The president of the Federal Labor Office, Josef Stingl, described the current job market situation to journalists today as "very bad."

CHEYSSON ON FOREIGN MINISTERS' CONSULTATIONS

PM051519 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Oct 82 p 6

[Robert Sole dispatch: "Atlantic Alliance Foreign Ministers Tried To Draw Up 'Comprehensive Strategy' Toward Eastern Bloc"]

The formula was unusual. No agenda, no speeches, no communique. And, to escape the journalists, the 16 ministers and NATO Secretary General Luns were barricaded in a hotel in the Laurentian Mountains, each accompanied by only one aide. At the end of the meeting, there was a chorus ofpraise and self-congratulation. "It was frank, cordial and very positive, a real success," Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs MacEachen said on his colleagues' behalf. One of U.S. Secretary of State Shultz' aides confirmed that judgement from New York, and at the Montreal airport, just before leaving for Paris. [French External Relations Minister] Claude Cheysson uttered a graceful mea culpa: "I saw no point in this meeting. I was wrong. It was very, very interesting."

The ministers wanted to avoid the heavy atmosphere of the assemblies they hold twice a year. Since they were virtually all in New York for the UN general session, they could go on to Quebec and hence continue bilateral talks. As fate would have it, the man who initiated this meeting was also the only one absent from it: [FRG Foreign Minister] Genscher, who was detained in Bonn by the government crisis. He was replaced by Von Staden, a secretary of state.

By common consent, the participants avoided discussing the Siberian gas pipeline. The meeting, which had been arranged a long time ago, before the conflict arose, was not suited to the subject. Experts would have been necessary. Moreover, would it be appropriate to discuss the different treatments meted out to Creusot-Loire and Dresser-France in the presence of Turkish, Luxembourg and Icelandic ministers? The gas pipeline affair arose several times in passing, but was immediately set aside. What is the point of exploring that blind alley? "The Americans took a unilateral decision without asking our opinion," Mr Cheysson remarked, "it is their business."

[Question] Ought not the U.S. secretary of state to have taken advantage of the weekend meeting to explain his action?

[Answer] "No," Mr Cheysson replied, "the U.S. decision had already been taken. It ought to have been discussed before."

[Question] But in that case, who will break the deadlock?

[Answer] The United States has created a deadlock situation, not us. It is up to it to break it...."

In short, the ministers preferred to discuss other -- broader and more fundamental -- matters. After passing from one subject to another (arms control, the export of technology, terrorism...) the ministers ended by discussing a "comprehensive strategy toward the Eastern bloc countries, from the political, economic and military angles."

No decision could be taken at such a forum. The participants nonetheless envisaged a series of economic studies relating to subjects like energy, credit for the Eastern bloc and agriculture, to evaluate in particular the degree to which the Western countries are dependent on the Soviet bloc.

[Question] Who will carry out those studies? NATO?

[Answer] "Certainly not," Mr Cheysson told us. "NATO is not equipped for that, and we are not going to create new structures in it. Moreover, countries which are very important economically, like Japan, are not NATO members. Those studies could be carried out by the OECD."

That does not mean that France is opposed to discussions on economic strategy within NATO. Quite the reverse, it even claims to have been calling for them for a long time.

Mr Cheysson thinks that great progress toward consultation was made in Val-David: "Hitherto, the alliance was discussed in terms of military strategy. NATO members did what they pleased in the economic sphere, without consistency and without taking account of their allies' interests. In Val-David, it was recognized that it was high time to discuss politics in a comprehensive way, including economic decisions. Of course, each country must maintain complete freedom in the making of decisions. But it is natural that there should be consultations before having dealings with the Eastern bloc countries and that that should be done in accordance with the alliance's two fundamental criteria: our security and our interests."

LE MONDE ON U.S. CALL FOR TOUGHER COCOM STANCE

[Jacques Amalric report: "United States Calls for Strengthening of COCOM Rules"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Shultz probably adopted an understanding and pleasant approach at the meeting which the NATO foreign ministers have just held in Val-David in the Laurentian Mountains. Nonetheless, the United States was preparing to launch a new offensive in Paris this Monday, 4 October, to secure from its partners a strengthening of the rules of COCOM, [Coordinating Committee for Export to Communist Areas] which has grouped the 15 NATO countries -- aside from Ireland [as published; presumably should read Iceland] -- and Japan since 1949.

This Monday's meeting -- secret, like all of COCOM's activities -- was to be devoted to reviewing the lists of strategic commodities the export of which to Communist countries is prohibited. Although the Europeans in general, and France in particular, were expecting merely a routine meeting, Washington has sent four senior officials from the State, Defense, Commerce and Energy Departments to Paris. The most well known -- and feared -- of them is none other than Richard Perle, Mr Weinberger's deputy, who is known to be the theoretician behind the embargo on supplies of both civilian and military technology to the USSR.

If the U.S. demands were accepted by Washington's partners, they would amount to a change in COCOM's approach. The United States would like to add to the strategic commodities banned from export, long lists of both civilian and military technologies and manufacturing methods. It would also like any deviation from those lists henceforth to be stopped (nonetheless that is a longstanding practice). Finally, it is demanding that COCOM be turned into a real agency staffed by a permanent bureaucracy. Only such a transformation, it believes, will make it possible to institutionalize the surveillance of enterprises and the coordination between intelligence services which it is demanding in order to ensure that embargoes are more effective.

Logically speaking, the U.S. demands should meet with strong resistance from France. Indeed, for Paris, COCOM as such, does not exist. According to people here, "it is a forum for 15 delegations which implement freely accepted rules with flexibility." There is, therefore, no question of agreeing to turn it into a heavy, binding machine, exceeding the military framework and eventually embracing all commercial activities.

"If the American view was accepted," people in the French capital add, "all trade with the communist countries, aside from grain sales, would eventually be banned. Even the sale of a shoe factory, for instance, would become strategic since it implies an improvement in the purchasing country's industrial organization." Finally, it is pointed out that "COCOM's purpose is not to impose economic sanctions, but to protect the West in the military sphere. The United States would do better to speed up the existing procedure. By taking a long time in replying to requests made to it, it is already scuttling a fairly large number of contracts without having to openly oppose them."

The Europeans expect the United States to present its demands as a "gesture." Indeed, that offensive within COCOM could be accompanied by a campaign on the theme: We are prepared to review our positions on the Siberian gas pipeline affair provided the Europeans adopt a more understanding attitude on COCOM's functioning, and take a more restrictive line in granting government-backed credit to the Eastern bloc countries. Such a campaign would be directed not so much at European public opinion as at public opinion in the United States, where some sections of the business world are increasingly critical of the policy imposed by Mr Reagan in this sphere.

PCF POLITBURO DENIES MARCHAIS TO STEP DOWN

[Text of statement issued by PCF Politburo on 30 September]

[Text] Big business and the self-confessed right are using all the means still at their disposal to curb change. With them, the false left is advocating backpedaling and concessions.

On the strength of its recent 24th Congress decisions, and led by the leadership which it elected democratically, the PCF is determined to take action with the workers for social progress and the development of a sound and strong French economy.

Those who do not accept the decisions of universal suffrage are storming against that.

Not balking at any infamous action, they have launched an odious and ridiculous campaign in the past few days alleging that changes in the PCF leadership are being planned. They go so far as to suggest the possibility that Georges Marchais will soon abandon his post as secretary general.

The Politburo takes this opportunity to reaffirm its complete unity behind the party secretary general and its will to pursue its activity with all the Communists.

The adversaries of the new policy cannot tolerate the PCF's action and its dynamism in promoting the reforms desired by the French people. That is an additional reason for continuing to follow the same course with determination.

COLOMBO REPORTS TO PERTINI ON UN, NATO TALKS

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 4 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo reported today to chief-of-staff Sandro Pertini on his visits to New York for the U.N. General Assembly session and to Canada for a round of NATO talks.

Colombo returned from Canada yesterday and met with U.S. Middle East envoy Philip Habib, who made a stop-off in Rome on his way back to the United States.

TRADE MINISTER COMMENTS ON ALGERIAN GAS DEAL

PM051517 Rome AVANTI in Italian 28 Sep 82 pp 1, 14

[Article by Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria]

[Excerpts] The methane gas agreement reached yesterday is extremely important for Italy primarily because of the importance of the other party or rather the partner with whom we have concluded it. Algeria is a country of great political prestige not only in the Arab world but also throughout the African continent and among the nonaligned countries. It has and versified economic system with a broad variety of products, scale of enterprises and range of trade. It has an extremely rich and varied range of raw materials, not yet adequately exploited. It has launched far-reaching development programs to which the government continues to give priority in the medium and long term.

Moreover -- and this is its main asset -- it has entrusted its process of economic and social growth to a young and able governing class with a wealth of international experience and absolutely determined to give their country a very prestigious role.

Algeria regards Italy as a friendly nation with whom it shares a common historical and cultural legacy, a nation with a wealth of experience, knowledge and technology which cannot be suspected of hegemonist aims but is motivated by a desire for and interest in cooperation in the many cultural, economic, technological and financial spheres.

The agreement reached and the more general framework into which it falls do not have exclusively bilateral characteristics but extend to the will and potential for the creation of a more stable political friendship and cooperation agreement among the Mediterranean countries, constituting an element of stability and balance in this strategic area of the international scene.

The policy of cooperation and friendship among peoples requires actions and not just statements: This agreement is certainly a major step in that direction.

For those reasons, as Prof Umberto Colombo, new chairman of the National Hydrocarbons Agency, recently said with regard to the supply of Algerian gas, "the discussion cannot be reduced to a mere commercial transaction. It should be considered that the relationship between Italy and Algeria, a developing country which is making major structural and infrastructural investments, involves a considerable potential for industrial and enterpreneurial activity for our country."

Of course that did not mean signing an agreement without taking stringent account of economic criteria in determining the price.

The price established, which is equal to $4.41 per million British thermal units, is in line with the contracts recently signed by Algeria with other consumer countries and the contract between Japan and Indonesia. The existing SNAM [National Gas Pipeline Company] contracts with other suppliers (for example the Netherlands and the USSR), to which reference is often made, were concluded years ago when the energy market was radically different, and their price will be renegotiated to make the necessary adjustments.

As regards the agreements reached so far on the possible supply of Soviet gas, it must be remembered that we are talking about a price relating to a supply which will not start for 4 years and is hence subject to adjustments and alterations in keeping with the development of the energy market, where forecasts are often contradicted by reality.

The agreement with Algeria not only contributes to the vital diversification of sources, but also guarantees security of supply through the diversification of supplies. And that is an important, central consideration at a time when a decision will have to be taken on imports from the Soviet Union.

CRAXI CITED ON REVIEW OF PSI, PCI STANCES

[Unattributed report on closing speech delivered by PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi at the AVANTI Festival in Milan 26 Sep]

[Excerpt] Craxi then added: "We are putting forward a coherent line in the political debate. We were digusted by the polemics which the DC leveled at us in a spirit of intolerance bordering on open hostility which, when it appeared, we judged incompatible with the spirit of cooperation appropriate to an alliance and a government coalition. However, we did not fail to stress in a positive way any different element useful for creating an appropriate atmosphere, understanding and framework of solidarity. And that remains our position, still open to cooperation, despite the fact that the DC camp is still giving off the fumes of all-pervading and inquisitorial polemics which seem tailor made to create a suffocating atmosphere.

"We did not ask the Communists to join the PSI. We merely recalled that both Socialists and Communists go back a long way, that both carried and still carry the burden of historical legacies which have largely been overcome and that both have the duty to draw up an account of their past with rigor, intellectual honesty, realism and, above all, with their gaze turned to the future.

"For our part we have done that and are doing it, referring our earliest origins, developing themes for review and change, striving to find a list of principles and values which might be valid for the present and the future in the modern industrial society in which we are living.

"We asked the Communists to channel their review, which they have scarcely begun, in the direction followed by the Socialists, knowing that, if that happens, many things are bound to change, not only in our relations but with regard to possible developments. In the face of revolutionary ideologies and hypotheses without revolution the outlook of a modern reformism is bound to gain ground by its practicality, its adherence to reality, its correspondence with Italian society's need for change and progress. That is confirmed by the fact that the ideology and practice of reformism is already followed more in practice now that it is recognized as a legitimate principle."

Interview on Relations

[Reprint of PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi interview granted to L'ESPRESSO; date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] Question: Mr Craxi, we really are witnessing another PCI-PSI pacification. Is the leftwing alternative becoming topical again?

Answer: Socialist-Communist relations are experiencing a cold shower. They pass from hot to cold depending on the topic and the circumstances. Overall, as is known, they are not good. At my party's congress in Palermo, [PCI Secretary General] Berlinguer was welcomed with applause out of a feeling of friendship and courtesy. We are still booed a lot at Communist rallies, however. The leftwing alternative is not a topical issue. Indeed, even the Communists talk in terms of a democratic alternate -- a formula open to many interpretations.

In any case formulas are always easier to interpret in the light of events and experiences. An extremely tactical version of the PCI's democratic alternative emerged in August. At that time the emperor was revealed in his new clothes. Speaking to the lower house, I was reminded of a polemic raised by my friend Leonardo Sciascia over the use of the word "battle." Sciascia wrote, polemicizing with the Communists: "You use the word 'battle' to describe standing behind a door, the door of the DC."

Not that it is not legitimate to seek accords with the DC -- we have done so and still do so -- but we declare the fact and accept the burden and responsibility for it before the voters, in the knowledge that Italy at present has neither the numerical nor political conditions for a leftwing alternative. This does not rule out the possibility, in the future, of different evolutions and innovations that could restore the issue to the agenda of political topicality. Individuals change, so too can parties and votes and, therefore, also political conditions. For the time being I merely point out that the necessary changes -- and one of these concerns the Communists -- are proceeding at a snail's pace and amid many contradictions.

Nevertheless, the Communists have resumed their insistent approaches to us, hammering away at the subject of the alternative. They ought to turn to the other secular parties too, whose role is certainly essential and decisive, especially since they have hitherto given no sign of willingness in that direction. In short, I always try to draw a distinction between propaganda and politics, what can be done and what would be desirable, the situation as it stands and what we would like it to be. And I advise everybody to do likewise.

Question: But there are Berlinguer's offers at the Tirrenia meeting [L'UNITA Festival], the overtures made to the PCI by colleagues of yours of the caliber of [Finance Minister] Formica and [PSI Deputy Secretary] Martelli....

Answer: Speeches in festival debates must be taken for what they are. They are of necessity never very profound. I think that a less superficial and distorted analysis could easily establish that the PSI has essentially continued to develop a united policy in the framework of straight and consistent guidelines. However, I thought Berlinguer's speech took a less harsh tone than has been used on other occasions and showed the principle of greater respect toward us and more balanced and moderate political criticism. When harsh tones were used I replied with equal harshness. In this case there was no need to do so. That is a much better state of affairs, irrespective of the political differences of opinion and conflicting elements which are often inevitably produced. The important thing is to create favorable conditions for dialogue, greater understanding and a convergence of views useful to the world of labor which we want to represent and to society's general progress.

Question: What did you and Berlinguer say to each other in the tense days of the government crisis in August?

Answer: We said absolutely nothing to each other. Throughout the August crisis no Communist leader, great or small, felt the need to hear my opinion on what was happening. We exchanged opinions and criticisms after the event and in the lower house under the gaze of public opinion.

Relations With the Communist Party

Question: You heard nothing from the Communists. However you Socialists also forgot to keep your allies informed. I refer to the Social Democrats to whom you were bound by a consultation pact.

Answer: That is not true. I wrote an article in AVANTI explaining certain circumstances which speak for themselves. The resignations were a democratic duty, even though some of our highly esteemed colleagues think that when a government is soundly defeated in Parliament its duty is to pretend not to notice anything, say a short prayer and prepare to take another defeat at the first opportunity. The serious point is that there was no demand for a consultation afterwards. Nonetheless we did not launch into polemics, merely taking note of other's polemics. We were asked to open a new chapter and we did so.

Question: So, how do you explain the fact that the secular alliance, to which you devoted so much tender care, has been abandoned?

Answer: I have never postulated the theory of a homogeneous, secular third force. I was, and am, aware of the differences and difficulties. I welcomed the growing responsibility and influence of the intermediate secular parties together with ours and, for my part, I have done what I could to help the processes of clarification, convergence and solidarity. If that has not, and is not, working in some way, do not ask me why. On the other hand, it is only through difficult trials that the quality of political relationships and their development potential and prospects can be assessed.

I do not think that the conduct which we have always followed in relations with the secular parties warrants reproach. Indeed, we do not hear any reproach. If anything, it is we who, in some cases, can appeal for thought. In politics, as in life, it is always better to have a long memory. We have developed a policy of agreement and good relations in that sphere and, of course, the time for assessment and complex evaluation will come for everybody as it always does.

The Experience of the August Crisis

Question: Do you have no reason to reproach yourself?

Answer: If you think about it, it is always possible to do better. That is being wise after the event. In fact, the August crisis was, fortunately, a quick one and from the start it took an inevitable course in some essential aspects. The start of the crisis was inevitable; once a useful basis for continuing cooperation had been identified, a positive solution was also inevitable. At least that was our view, since in the most difficult and tricky situations we have always tried to promote the policy of governability.

The obsession with, and fear of, elections eventually made people forget that the governability policy was, and remains, our basic line in a parliamentary term which we would not have liked to see end after running only three-fifths of its course.

For my part, I made no belligerent statements either on early elections or anything else, before or afterwards. Of course since everybody was talking about them some of our members did also. For my part, I merely regarded them as one of the possible hypotheses. Moreover, I have long bemoaned the fact that the parties in Italy have for months been heaving as if they were fighting an election campaign, creating an impassioned and tense atmosphere which frequently becomes paralyzing, precisely because it has no immediate outlet. This conduct can in one respect be considered partly physiological.

In the United States, at the turning point after the first 2 years of the presidency, they are already thinking about the next elections. Now in Italy the parties act with one eye on the elections. Hence their anxieties, hopes and fears and even a certain degree of propagandist dynamism. Hence the flourishing of regenerations, proud self-assertiveness and grit. And the more they look at the elections the more this happens, as is logical and natural. In any case, democracy is fortunately also witnessing some major debates in which the voters are the judge. I said the other day in Florence that some day, some year, we will vote. We are lucky. In other countries not only can you not really vote, but you cannot write, speak or meet freely.

Why Institutional Reform

Question: Even within the Socialist area some people are saying that perhaps it would have been better for you to "examine" your interlocutors' game, namely the government, including independents advocated by the PCI, among others....

Answer: People refuse to understand that this is no longer the time for petty moves and feints ranging from tactics to opportunism, or for leadership maneuvers. Yes, of course it might have been in our interests. But for what purpose? We have before us major specific problems in pressing need of solution. That is what we want to deal with.

Question: So let us discuss these specific problems. First, constitutional reform. You are accused of not being explicit, of having been the first to raise the issue but of subsequently failing to explain exactly what you want.

Answer: First the major parties must say their piece, because they bear the major responsibility. In any case, we have known for a long time exactly what we want.

Question: It seems to me that the Christian Democrats and Communists have started saying what they want and do not want. Now it is your turn.

Answer: Now we will speak, at the right time and as soon as the proper forum has been established.

Question: Could you reveal to us your personal opinion?

Answer: I believe we should proceed from the president of the republic.

Question: In what sense?

Answer: Have him elected by the country and no longer by Parliament.

Question: This would not make governments any more secure, however.

Answer: As far as governments are concerned, machinery can be introduced to facilitate their stability, or in any case weaken the factors of instability. Germany's experience over the past few days, for instance, has shown us that the principle of "constructive lack of confidence" works well. Furthermore, open ballots should be introduced to deprive the more unscrupulous pseudo-politicians, the plunderers of Parliament, of a weapon. There are other possibilities. We are examining all other countries' experiences. Last, there must be a proper reform of Parliament, primarily in the direction of a modification of the system of perfect bicamerialism.

Question: Tell the truth: Do you also have in mind an electoral law that will force the parties to ally and present their coalition leaders before the elections so that the voters can choose the future government by means of their votes?

Answer: Definitely not. We are also opposed to clauses such as the 5 percent clause, which are designed to exclude the minor parties from Parliament. Be that as it may, when I mentioned the grand reform, I was thinking not only of a constitutional revision but also of the reforms needed in public administration and local government.

Question: Are the Socialists willing to pursue a policy of rigor?

Answer: We have clearly stated this willingness. Our policy is one of rigor, reform and justice. But the painful point is still the fiscal situation. We must approach, albeit gradually, an acceptable degree of fiscal justice. We are still a long way from it. We are making a major and courageous contribution in this field.

Question: Do you, perchance, include a pinch of nationalism on your list of values?

Answer: Italy has experienced nationalisms that have drawn it into adventures and disasters. However, many citizens have been aware for some time of an unsatisfied need for national identification. This is confirmed by recent, always incidental, demonstrations. Consolidating national awareness means opening the way to a clearer view of everyone's rights and duties. It is always a major factor of moral strength. It is important that this element make headway, especially among the new generations. A national community without confidence in itself is bound to regress, not progress. I am not one of those people who confuse progressive critique with rhetorical laments and who talk about "poor Italy." Italian society has major elements of dynamism that must be encouraged, guided and organized more rationally. Confidence in Italy and in its future must not be considered a rude term.

Italy's International Role

Question: But nationalism can be dangerous in today's world....

Answer: Italy must think of itself and others in today's and tomorrow's world. It has an international role to play. It will succeed if it proceeds from a reformed and better organized domestic situation, and if -- as we are asking -- it establishes a foreign policy of peace, security and independence: a policy capable of defending the peoples' and human rights, based on principles, not on fluctuating opportunism; a policy that will place Italy in an active role in North-South cooperation, which is stagnating or regressing, with very serious consequences for world balances.

Socialists' Image

Question: You Socialists are changing your image in this field. Until recently you were strenuous defenders of Western values: Now, first with Argentina, and now with 'Arafat....

Answer: What change? We have adopted stances based on a careful examination of the facts and in accordance with our traditions; facts that have proven us right. Let us take the latest instance: I have always been a friend of Israel's, but today's Israel is unrecognizable; as for my friendship with 'Arafat, it is nothing new. Bear in mind that I first met 'Arafat way back in 1958 at an international students union conference in Beijing.

MAFIA SUSPECT ARRESTED IN DALLA CHIESA KILLING

[Text] (ANSA) Reggio Calabria, southern Italy, October 6 -- An alleged mafia hit man has been arrested here on charges connected to the killing of the prefect of Palermo, Carabinieri General Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa, and his wife in a mafia ambush in the Sicilian capital on September 3.

State prosecuters here identified the suspect last night as 36-year-old Nicola Alvaro, an employee of an agricultural concern in the Calabrian region, and reported that he was arrested on a warrant signed by Sicilian magistrates.

After he was questioned for two hours here, he was transferred to Palermo. The suspect, long thought by police to be a hired killer for various mafia families, has been convicted in the past on charges of carrying a knife and criminal association.

The slaying of General Dalla Chiesa, who spearheaded the antiterrorist campaign in the north of Italy and was transferred south in May to lead the battle against organized crime in Sicily, shocked the nation and jolted the Rome Parliament into speedy passage of antimafia legislation.

TEN RED BRIGADE TERRORISTS ARRESTED IN NAPLES

[Text] Naples, southern Italy, Oct. 3 (AFP) -- Ten members of the Red Brigades, including the suspected leader of the Naples column, Vittorio Bolognesi, have been arrested in a major sweep in the suburbs here, a police source said today.

A police headquarters spokesman described the arrests as the "biggest anti-terrorist operation since the freeing of U.S. General James Dozier". The senior NATO general was released from a flat in Padua where he had been kept by the Brigades since being kidnapped in nearby Verona a month earlier.

During the raid here, in the suburb of Bagnoli, police said they unearthed two hideouts of the leftist terrorist organization and captured a quantity of arms. These included weapons stolen during a Brigades' attack on a barracks at Santa Maria Capua Vetere, north of Naples, last summer, and in a raid on an army convoy outside Caserta, in which three guards were killed.

Vittorio Bolognesi, 32, is a native of Bagnoli. He was wanted by the anti-terrorist squad since the kidnapping of senior Christian Democratic official Ciro Cirillo in the spring of last year. An anti-terrorist officer and Mr Cirillo's chauffeur died in the kidnapping.

Mr Bolognesi is also suspected of involvement in the murders of Christian Democratic Magistrate Raffaele Delcogliano and his chauffeur last April, and Naples Deputy Police Chief Antonio Ammaturo in July.

He is also wanted for questioning following military raids against barracks at Santa Maria and at Castel di Decima outside Rome, and on the Caserta convoy. A former worker at a railway engine works, Mr Bolognesi went underground early last year.

He is thought by police to have moved rapidly up in the leadership of the Naples column, one of the Brigade's most dangerous factions, going by the name "guerrilla party".

PAPERS REPORT DETAILS OF FAILED COUP PLOT

[Text] Madrid, Oct. 5 (AFP) -- Three Spanish Army officers who were arrested here Saturday and accused of planning to overthrow the government had contacted more than 100 soldiers in military units throughout the country, the independent newspaper EL PAIS reported today citing military intelligence sources.

The monarchist newspaper ABC, however, quoting well-informed sources, said that five officers were arrested yesterday in connection with the plot but provided no further details. A meeting of the Supreme Military Council was meanwhile expected to examine Saturday's revelations at a scheduled session later today.

According to EL PAIS, the names of the soldiers appeared in coded documents linked to one of the three accused officers, Colonel Luis Munoz, and photographed by army intelligence agents while he was having lunch with Blas Pinar, head of the extreme rightwing party Fuerza Nueva.

Press reports here pointed out that both the daughter and the wife of Colonel Munoz were activists in Fuerza Nueva and that Mrs Munoz had announced her candidacy for a Senate seat in the upcoming national elections.

It was not clear, however, to what extent the soldiers implicated in the documents had already become involved in the coup plans. The paper said the plotters, who had access to enormous financial resources, intended to name Lt Gen Jaime Milans del Bosch, leader of the aborted coup of February 23, 1981, the head of the Madrid Military Region.

The alleged organizers had likewise counted on tanks from the "Brunete" armored division north of the capital -- once led by Lieutenant General Milans del Bosch -- to take control of the principal sectors of the Spanish capital at dawn on October 27, one day before the scheduled general elections, EL PAIS said.

Sources cited by the paper said the outlines of a "national-populist" program had been among the confiscated documents that envisaged an end to constitutional rule in Spain.

The Spanish press elsewhere highlighted international condemnation of the planned coup and noted what it said was a change in the attitude of the United States. In contrast to its response to the 1981 coup attempt, the papers said, Washington has expressed its strong support for Spanish democracy.

The most significant internal reaction thus far appeared to come from Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez, widely expected to be the next prime minister, who predicted that other attempts to overthrow the government cannot be ruled out.

In the absence of an official explanation from the Defense Ministry, the only new details provided officially yesterday came from Francisco Laina, director of state security, who said that at least six civilian conspirators were still at large and that authorities have tapped some 200 telephones.

Today's meeting of the Supreme Military Council follows a series of visits of leading Spanish civilian and military officials to the Zarzuela Palace, the residency of King Juan Carlos.

Although the meeting had been scheduled prior to Saturday's revelations, the attempted coup was expected to figure prominently in the discussions.

Reliable sources said the king had received numerous messages of loyalty from officers and military units throughout the country. The Spanish monarch, who Saturday summoned Army Chief of Staff Lieutenant General Ascanio Togores, has been kept regularly informed on all aspects of the investigation into the attempt, sources added.

[Text] Reliable sources report that the lists seized from Col Luis Munoz at the time of his arrest contain the names of over 100 officers, with coded information against each of them. The same sources say that the coup operation had no shortage of financial support, though no names of civilians were found on the lists. The plan apparently counted on the help of persons in a position to neutralize the captain-general in each military region. Well-informed sources also report that the conspirators were planning to make Jaime Milans del Bosch captain-general of the Madrid Military Region. Moreover, the documents seized from the conspirators on Saturday point to their having had important contacts in the [Brunete] armored division.

Supreme Council Statement

[Text] Thirty minutes ago the Ministry of Defense Center for Institutional and Social Relations issued a statement on the events which led to the arrest of three military commanders last Saturday: At its plenary meeting today, the Army Supreme Council received a detailed report on the activity of the defense intelligence services and the steps taken with regard to the irresponsible conduct of some army commanders, and expresses its unanimous and emphatic rejection of the said conduct.

At the same time, the Council expressly affirms its total and unswerving respect, loyalty and subordination to his majesty the king, the Constitution and the institutions. Similarly, it expresses its confidence in the commanding ranks whose (?line of thought) it can interpret with certainty, and in military justice which is already acting to clarify the events completely.

ETA FACTION OPPOSES ANNOUNCED DISBANDING

[Text] The Basque newspaper EGIN reports in today's edition that at midday yesterday it received a telephone call from someone claiming to belong to the Seventh Assembly of ETA Politico-Military who conveyed the disagreement of a part of the Seventh Assembly with the announcement disbanding the organization. According to the paper, the caller said the following, verbatim: A communique from ETA -- the armed organization for the Basque revolution -- Seventh Assembly sector opposed to disbanding: We are in total disagreement with disbanding the organization, basically because the risk of the Organic Law on the Harmonization of the Autonomy Process has not been removed and because there exists no prospect of freedom for prisoners. We also want to say that the disbanded group does not amount to more than 30 members. All of them are in exile. The caller concluded by saying: We will shortly issue a manifesto addressed to Basque working people.

This is the report published today by the paper EGIN in connection with the telephone call it received yesterday.

HUFVUDSTADSBLADET VIEWS UN CHIEF'S REPORT

PM051529 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 29 Sep 82 p 2

[Jan Magnus Jansson editorial]

[Text] There is much to indicate that in Javier Perez de Cuellar the United Nations has found a man who has both the intellectual capacity and sufficient energy to reactivate the powers the organization's Charter gives to its general secretary. This is also clear from his first annual report on UN activities, which is to be discussed at the General Assembly session which began the other day. It bears the stamp of special acuity and healthy realism and concentrates, unusually, only on the present UN crisis and its causes. You could say that the report contains iron rations for everyone concerned about the future of the United Nations.

Unfortunately, Perez de Cuellar is beginning his career at a time when the United Nations' star is more on the wane than it has ever been. Nor does the general secretary mince words, despite the report's consistently sober tone. "We are dangerously close to a state of international anarchy," he writes. And on several occasions he points out how this year, in particular, the organization has been set aside or directly snubbed on issues where it could have played an important role.

In his report, Perez de Cueller deals almost exslusively with security problems and concentrates on the solution of current conflicts -- that is, the sphere of activities originally considered to be the world organization's most central concern. This means that a large number of other questions which are interesting in themselves and which in the longer term have a relevance for peace and security, such as disarament, international legal concerns and social and economic development, are dealt with this time in mere mentions. "To save future generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetimes has inflicted unspeakable sufferings on humanity," was the main objective decided for the United Nations in San Francisco in 1945. The nucleus of the secretary general's report discusses the prospects for and chances of fulfilling this main objective.

The report puts all the emphasis on the Security Council. It may seem unfair to ignore the General Assembly completely; it is true that nowadays it is mostly a voting machine, but in the past it has proved itself to be an effective political instrument. However, Perez de Cuellar's intention is to once again remind the world of the UN Charter's spirit and obligations, and the Charter's clear message is that the Security Council must bear the responsibility for the preservation of peace. In this respect the UN crisis is primarily the Security Council's crisis.

A particular point made by the report is not only that the Security Council is often left out in the cold during crises, but also that the council is only brought in when a crisis has become acute. The general secretary calls for permanent surveillance of crisis in the making and the commencement of discussions between the parties involved in a conflict at a very early stage. The informal consultations which have become a great deal more common in the council are described as "valuable," but they must not be allowed to become a replacement for constitutional action by the Security Council or an excuse for passivity.

The general secretary promises to make his own role more active and once again be more diligent in making use of the right enshrined in the UN Charter's famous 99th article to direct the attention of the Security Council to circumstances which threaten peace and security. He also offers the prospect of increased activities to collect facts in advance about situations which could give rise to conflicts.

The preventive role, which according to the Charter is the council's central task, would, in other words, come more to the fore than hitherto.

Of course, there are things which even a general secretary cannot touch on too openly. The central question of the relationships between the Security Council's permanent members, and between the superpowers in particular, is not subjected to detailed examination. It is even more difficult to imagine the report looking at the distrust which the "automatic majority" of socialist countries and countries of the Third World engenders among the Western members. But on many issues he is direct and to the point. He points out that member states often believe that the adoption of a resolution frees them from further responsibility in an issue, instead of believing that the resolution should be followed up by action. He points out that the peacekeeping operations, excellent in themselves, need the solid backing of member states to be effective. And, finally, he coins a phrase which deserves to be inscribed over the entrance to the headquarters in New York. "Debate without effective action undermines the organization's credibility." It could be added that the spirit of confrontation which has often prevailed in UN votes has not always been of use.

The annual report is, as has been indicated, largely a real revivalist call, and it was quite appropriate that Foreign Minister Stenback, in the speech he delivered last night to the General Assembly, should promise Perez de Cuellar's endeavors all possible support from Finland. The matter has been much discussed here, both officially and in the press, and it seems as if public opinion is in the process of shaking off the cynicism with which the United Nations' continuing decline has hitherto been viewed.

It is also healthy to be fully aware that the talk of Finland's interest in the continued existence of the United Nations -- it is also repeated in this year's official Finnish statement -- is more than just a phrase. Of course Finland, like other states, must look after its most vital relations, those with its neighbors, on a bilateral basis. But we should be fully aware what a catastrophe -- for the small nations in particular -- a breakdown of the UN system similar to the weakening of the League of Nations in the thirties would be.

This is not only due to the fact that the general political atmosphere would be even more uncertain without the channels and potential levers the United Nations offers. Our potential for influencing the world outside Europe also exists through the United Nations. In the global context, we carry very little weight. But through the UN channels, a small state has an opportunity to accept responsibility and make contributions everywhere on the globe. Now that there is so much talk in Finland of activity and initiatives, it should be stated: This activity will only achieve substance and durability through the United Nations.

DEFENSE FORCES ORDER WEST GERMAN SUBMARINES

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Norway Buys Six Submarines in West Germany"]

[Text] On Thursday [30 September] the marine forces' supply command will sign a contract with Thyssen Nordseewerke in Emden in West Germany for the purchase of six submarines for the Norwegian Defense Forces, with an option for the purchase of an additional two submarines at a later date. The contract price for the six boats is around 800 million marks, or 2.1 billion kroner.

The total framework budget for a six-vessel submarine project has been set at 3.13 billion kroner.

The framework for eight submarines is put at 3,896 million kroner. In addition to the boats themselves, this figure includes torpedos, command and weaponry control systems, communications equipment, building work and plant, project costs, spare parts and training costs.

The first boat will be delivered in February 1989. The remainder will be delivered at 6-month intervals beginning May 1990. The new submarines will replace Norway's present Kobben class submarines, which were also built by Thyssen Nordseewerke.

The new boats will be equipped with torpedos, sonar and periscopes made by German industry, while direction-finding equipment will be developed and supplied by A/S Kongsberg Vapenfabrikk. One reason for this is that a planned new series of submarines for the West German Navy is to have the same equipment as far as possible.

At the same time as the purchase contract is signed, an industrial protocol between the Defense Ministry and Thyssen Industrie A.G. will be signed in which the Thyssen concern will commit itself to giving Norwegian industry orders amounting to a minimum of 60 percent of the contract sum. In addition, the Thyssen concern has declared that it will do its utmost to increase this figure to 75 percent.

Ingegerd Troedsson, Moderate; Anders Dahlgren, Center Party; and Karl Erik Eriksson, Liberal, became deputy speakers. The Riksdag session will open tomorrow, but the members assembled today for the roll-call and the election of speakers.

FALLDIN ON POSSIBLE ACTIONS AGAINST FOREIGN SUB

LD051950 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1700 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] [Question] To what extent is the military allowed to act against the submarine?

[Answer] Naturally we are not using directly [word indistinct] as this is different from a state of war in which the purpose would be to sink the submarine directly. However, the aim is to make it surface in order to identify its nationality.

[Question] But this means that this is something a little different from the principle observed until now, in other words, to expel the submarine.

[Answer] Well, that has been the main objective of the instructions which have been in force. But since they have begun to appear in the inner waters in this way, it is important that we can -- if possible -- make the submarine surface in order that its nationality can be established. We can thereafter make a protest to the country which is guilty of such violations.

[Question] The current situation is that you will soon leave the government and we will have a new prime minister and new government. You have had meetings with the leaders of the Liberal Party, the Moderate Coalition Party and the chairman of the Social Democrats. Are you fully in agreement about the (?measures) here?

[Answer] We have followed the same pattern as we did when we had the submarine in the Blekinge Archipelago. I am a little surprised that Olof Palme today, judging by everything, expressed disappointment that he had not received information. We have followed the same pattern as then, and it is quite clear that if Olof Palme and the Moderate Coalition Party leader turn to the commander in chief of the armed forces, they know that they will receive the same confidential information as the government receives. On the part of the government, we took the initiative today to call them to a joint information meeting given by the military leadership. This is a self-evident matter. But the formal responsibility for any measure rests on this government until Friday, until the cabinet council session when the change of government takes place. But, naturally, we must consult concerning any measures, and consultation took place today.

[Answer] Well, in the government we have in this case and earlier drawn the line at those parties which are represented in the Advisory Council for Foreign Affairs.

Depth Charges Cause Oil Slick

[Text] Stockholm, Oct 6 (AFP) -- The Swedish Navy found new evidence Tuesday [illegible] at an unidentified submarine was lurking near the top-secret Muskoe Naval Base, some [illegible] (38 miles) from Stockholm, authoritative sources said. Sonar devices located a sub, and Swedish experts ascertained that a large oil slick which appeared on the surface after 20 depth charges were dropped had come from a sub.

They were not sure whether a fuel tank had actually been damaged or whether it was a trick by the submarines to gain time for an excape.

Meanwhile helicopters and patrol boats were scouring waters in the area. But experts believed the sub would not surface or put its snorkel above water for fear of being spotted by radar. Oxygen reserves could enable it to stay on the bottom another five or six days.

Incoming prime minister and Socialist Party leader Olof Palme, who takes office Thursday, denounced the sub's presence as an "inadmissible intrusion." He criticized the outgoing government bitterly for failing to keep him informed of the incident and he refused to comment on action taken by the military.

A navy spokesman said earlier that depth charges were being dropped to force the sub to leave Swedish territorial waters. But the outgoing prime minister and foreign minister, Thorbjoern Falldin, and Ola Ullsten, said that any intruding sub would be boarded and taken into port to interrogate the crew.

This was despite the fact that legislation providing for these measures is not due to become law until next July.

They called the [words indistinct] Swedish territorial waters a "brazen violation" and categorically ruled out a navigation error "so close to installations of obvious military interest."

Swedish defense had instructions to use all methods to force the sub to surface, but without damaging it or endangering the lives of its crew, officials said. Authorities believed the sub to be Russian, Polish or West German.

Sub Believed To Be Soviet

[Text] Stockholm, Oct 5 (AFP) -- The Swedish Navy today stepped up efforts to locate an unidentified submarine believed to be lurking in waters near a secret underground base, as the search went into its fourth day.

The authorities believe the submarine, detected near Muskoe Island base south of Stockholm, to be either Russian, Polish or West German. The West German Defense Ministry had denied it is one of theirs.

This afternoon six depth charges were dropped as warning shots near the submarine, following 10 depth charges dropped yesterday. The navy also brought three more helicopters into the search, along with more patrol boats and a submarine. The vessels' aim will be to block exits for the submarine.

"We will make this one surface," an official spokesman said earlier.

Swedish Defense Forces spent the summer chasing submarines spotted by fishermen and pleasure craft, with five officially confirmed intrusions. Last October, a Soviet submarine ran aground near the Karlskrona base in southern Sweden.

Some experts believe the present intruder is a Soviet submarine identified in NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organisation) jargon as belonging to the "Quebec" class, which comprises 30-crew vessels equipped with eight torpedoes or 16 mines.

DAGENS NYHETER EXAMINES OPPOSITION'S ROLE

[Olof Kleberg editorial: "The Opposition's Uncertain Road"]

[Text] The government should govern, and the opposition oppose. So runs parliamentarism's classical principle. It is a principle which comes from Britain and which fits well into its two-party system. In countries with many parties it is subscribed to by groups on the extreme left and right. They are the ones who need clear antagonisms in politics before they are able to thrive.

For parties closer to the center there are often more than just two forces in politics. They understand the difference between government and opposition. But the fact that they are not far to the left or far to the right in politics means that it is easier for them -- actually and psychologically -- to understand their opponents. Sometimes this leads to cooperation within a coalition, at other times agreements with the government when they are in opposition.

This type of "result politics" has become characteristic of many parties of the center, such as the liberal FDP in West Germany, the Center Party in Finland, the social-liberal Radical Liberals in Denmark and the parties of the center in the Netherlands. From their opponents to the right and left (those who at the time are excluded from cooperation with these center parties) comes criticism alleging an unprincipled stance, loss of identity and unrealiability.

The attitudes of voters vary. In times of polarization like the present, the center is having difficulties, and not only in Sweden.

In the Swedish Riksdag, the Coalition Party now has more seats than the center parties together for the first time since 1932. Against them stands a Social Democratic government which -- as in the Social Democratic Party's golden age in the forties and sixties -- is bigger than the three nonsocialist parties together.

The Moderates' major advances and the center's retreat are creating a new climate in the Riksdag which will assemble next week. The Moderates have won a lot of new voters with their "tough" program, as the party puts it.

However, this toughness has applied not only to economic but also to political issues; violent criticism of the center government on the tax reform issue, a generally negative campaign against the Social Democrats on matters large and small, from the wage earners' funds to school grading systems. Nonsocialist voters have appreciated this toughness. The party can therefore be expected to continue this policy.

The Moderates run into two problems. The first is the disintegration of the three-party alternative. A three-party government was not a major concern for the Moderates in this election. They were chiefly concerned to win votes. But in the 1985 election the Moderates will have to be able to indicate how they intend to get into government. This will not be easy. For the time being, at least, Sweden is not Norway.

The second problem is the Moderates' intensified concern for their own interests. Those with higher incomes, home owners, people not dependent on state benefits are favored by their policies. How long will middle income earners, tenants and those entitled to state benefits support the party's tough cuts and its confrontation with society's major organizations? It will need skill like [former Moderate leader] Bohman's to win such a game.

The center parties have devoted themselves to result politics for most of the seventies. This is particularly true of the Liberal Party, which finds itself in special difficulties as a result. It does so want to be the party of ideas in Swedish politics.

Things have been easier for the Center Party with its interest-group-related spirit of compromise as its traditional base. Its intense conviction in the nuclear power referendum campaign broke this line, but now the party has once again returned to everyday political realities.

When party Deputy Chairman Olof Johansson talked with the Social Democratic STOCKHOLM-STIDNINGEN'S editor in chief, Sven O. Andersson, on radio's Kanalen program yesterday, he stressed the importance of cooperation across the socialist/nonsocialist divide on individual issues, despite ideological differences over the wage earners' fund question, for example.

Since the election, both [Center Party leader] Thorbjorn Falldin and [Liberal Party leader] Ola Ullsten have said that they do not want an understanding with the government just for the sake of the understanding. But neither should they oppose simply for the sake of opposition.

Both the Center Party and the Liberal Party now need to give more forceful expression to their individuality. But there are important questions where they must not allow the center cooperation from their period in government to be wasted. One of these important questions is the economy.

Because of his knowledge and experience, Thorbjorn Falldin could become the opposition's real leader. He could exploit this role to voice tough criticism of the Social Democrats if they begin to follow expansionist policies without cutbacks -- but also to make sure that all the cooperation bridges are not demolished. It is possible to pursue strong opposition without striving for total confrontation.

KIPRIANOU MEETS WITH PEREZ DE CUELLAR, KHADDAM

[Text] President Spiros Kiprianou met at UN headquarters with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar. Attending the meeting on the UN side were Assistant Secretary General Urquhart, Mr Sherry and Mr Pico, senior UN officials, and the UN secretary general's special envoy in cyprus, Gobbi. From the Cypriot side the meeting was attended by: Foreign Minister Rolandhis; the Greek Cypriot side's representative at the inter-Cypriot talks, Mavrommatis; Cypriot permanent delegate at the United Nations, Mousiouttas; and Deputy Permanent Delegate Sierifis.

A UN communique released after the meeting said that President Kiprianou and the UN secretary general exchanged views on the situation in Cyprus and studied the best ways to promote efforts for a solution. The communique adds that the question of missing persons was also discussed.

During the meeting, which was described as particularly useful, there was a review of the situation in Middle East in light of recent developments in the region.

It has been learned that the president of the republic informed the UN secretary general of the Cypriot Government's decision to make a recourse to the General Assembly for a Cyprus debate next March. The president of the republic also discussed with Mr Perez de Cuellar a more substantive role by the UN secretary general and the United Nations than they have played thus far for a Cyprus solution in accordance with the UN resolutions.

On his arrival at UN headquarters, the president of the republic was met by the UN secretary general and was received as the head of state. Mr Kiprianou also met with Syrian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Khaddam. During the meeting, which was also attended by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, they discussed the Cyprus and Middle East problems. Mr Khaddam conveyed Syria's full support for the just cause of Cyprus and its people. He also conveyed a message from President al-Asad to President Kiprianou particularly expressing his thanks and appreciation for Cyprus' attitude during the recent crisis in Lebanon. Mr Khaddam will pay an official visit to Cyprus shortly.

Talks With Gromyko

[Text] Continuing his contacts at UN headquarters, President Kiprianou this afternoon met with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. During the 45-minute meeting, they discussed the Cyprus issue in depth. They also discussed the Middle East issue and other international problems. The meeting was attended by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Cypriot Permanent Delegate at the United Nations Mousiouttas and the director of the foreign minister's office, Mr Siambos. On the Soviet side, the meeting was attended by Soviet Permanent Delegate at the United Nations Troyanovskiy.

The president of the republic also met with Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca. They discussed the Cyprus issue, nonaligned questions and other international problems occupying the UN General Assembly. The meeting was also attended by Mr Rolandhis.

Tonight, the president of the republic will meet with UN General Assembly President Imre Hollai and tomorrow with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz.

KIPRIANOU, MALMIERCA SPEAK AT 5 OCT DINNER

[Text] President Kiprianou tonight met with UN General Assembly President Hollai and discussed the Cyprus issue. It was established that there is no problem with the Cyprus issue being discussed at the UN General Assembly next March, as has been decided.

President Kiprianou gave a dinner tonight for the chief delegates of the nonaligned contact group who are following the Cyprus issue. As is known, participating in the group are Algeria, Yugoslavia, India, Cuba, Guyana, Mali and Sri Lanka.

In an address during the dinner, the president referred to the significance of the Nonaligned Movement and thanked the members of the contact group for the interest they always show in a just solution to the Cyprus problem. The president stressed that with the support of the nonaligned countries it will be possible to reach a just and correct solution to the Cyprus issue that will safeguard the independence, unity, sovereignty and nonaligned status of the Republic of Cyprus, adding that the withdrawal of the occupation troops and the full demilitarization of Cyprus will also be accomplished. President Kiprianou stressed: In such a Cyprus, all inhabitants would be able to live in prosperity and harmoniously. The president said the nonaligned contact group is well aware of the Cyprus issue, but that it would be expedient if its members would visit Cyprus.

Replying on behalf of the contact group, Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca thanked President Kiprianou for the invitation and said that the contact group, as well as the entire Nonaligned Movement, will continue to contribute as positively and effectively as possible to the Cypriot people's struggle for full independence. Mr Malmierca stressed: You must have no doubt that the Nonaligned Movement will always play a leading part in this struggle. He added: Despite the long-term military occupation, the Cypriot people have succeeded in accomplishing a great deal in all sectors and deserve the admiration of the whole world. Mr Malmierca concluded: The main thing the Cypriot people expect from the Nonaligned Movement is support for and solidarity with their struggle for full freedom.

The Cuban foreign minister accepted, on behalf of the nonaligned contact group, President Kiprianou's invitation. It is expected that the members of the group will visit Cyprus before the debate on the Cyprus issue at the UN General Assembly next March.

DAILY: FOREIGN AGENTS BEHIND ASSASSINATION PLOT

NC050904 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 5 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] There was official confirmation yesterday of press reports saying that security authorities had received information about an attempt against President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou.

Commenting on these press reports, the government spokesman stated the following yesterday: "Indeed, a telephone call was received last week to the effect that there is a plan for an attempt against the life of the president of the republic." The spokesman added that, following this, security measures for President Kiprianou were strengthened.

According to supplementary reports, the security authorites possess serious indications that the plans for an assassination attempt against President Kiprianou -- plans also providing for the creation of general anomaly in Cyprus -- have been prepared by a certain foreign secret service.

According to the reports received by the security authorities, the plan to assassinate the president originated in a West European capital where this foreign secret service has been particularly active. After receiving the first substantive reports, the Cypriot security authorities are now directing their investigations toward tracing the Cypriot collaborators of this foreign secret service. Various elements with well-known undemocratic activities have already been put under surveillance and those conducting the investigations are optimistic that in the end they will be able to fully uncover this aspect of the plan.

The above-mentioned Cypriot undemocratic elements have reportedly had repeated meetings abroad with agents of the secret organization.

An official source stressed yesterday that the government is determined not to allow any deviation from lawful order nor to condone a revival of terrorist methods which prevailed in the recent past. The same source also stressed that the government, which is enjoying the support of the vast majority of the people, has both the will and the power to foil the conspiratorial plans of the foreign and local enemies of our country.

Spokesman on Press Reports

[Text] The government spokesman was requested to comment on press reports to the effect that the plot for an attempt against the president's life, which was the subject of a warning telephone call to the government, was prepared in a foreign country. The spokesman said that it would not be advisable to say more on this question.

Asked about the presence of teams of anarchists in Cyprus, the spokesman said that there is a team of anarchists which is under surveillance. The surveillance of this team, he said, was recently intensified because of its activities.

CONCLUSION OF SENIOR DIKO OFFICIAL INTERVIEW

NC051356 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 5 Oct 82 pp 3, 5

["Text" of second and final part of exclusive interview granted to Andreas Kaouris by an unidentified Democratic Party senior official; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Question: The Democratic Party [DIKO] poses as a party of the center and of the progressive rightwing. How can its ideological position be reconciled with its cooperation with AKEL? In your opinion, would there be negative consequences for the Cyprus cause if AKEL were to be excluded from any cooperation and if DIKO were to cooperate with the Democratic Rally [DISI], with which there is almost an ideological philosophy? [as published]

Answer: DIKO covers a wide ideological sphere and its goal is to avert polarization. Our cooperation with AKEL is nothing less and nothing more than a joint decision to nominate a joint candidate for the office of president based on the minimum program. The issue is not ideological. This is very clear. DIKO and AKEL have agreed on a program of cooperation which safeguards and strenghthens the present socioeconomic system; that is, mixed economy. There is absolutely nothing that would change, or recall communist ideology in the minimum program.

AKEL did not impose any conditions or prerequisites for this cooperation. Everything was put in black and white and released to the people. The people can read and they possess both memory and judgment.

As for sible cooperation with the DISI, this is out of the question because DISI has been altering and depending on those who are responsible for our sufferings. Of course, this does not mean that we consider 32 percent of the Cypriot people extreme rightwingers. However, the majority of the leadership, and the decisionmaking centers and mechanism of DISI belong to the extreme rightwing.

Question: Would you favor a DIKO-AKEL cooperation with other political forces, and under what prerequisites?

Answer: Of course we would favor a broadening of the DIKO-AKEL cooperation with the participation of other democratic political forces. Those who are really concerned about the salvation of this country would only have to respond to the open invitation to broaden this cooperation and to provide bigger popular support for the candidacy of President Kiprianou and the policy he has been following.

As for the prerequisites for such a cooperation, this is a question which can be discussed, provided there are no conditions that would make such a cooperation impossible from the outset.

Question: President Kiprianou's political opponents maintain that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation undermines Greek alignment. How do you view this criticism and what is your stance toward Greek alignment?

Answer: This allegation is untrue; it is untrue because the Greek alignment is not a figure of speech but a substantive option which is addressed to the people of Cyrpus and is based -- in addition to the moral and legal duty to defend Cyprus -- on common national identity, tradition and history.

For the Democratic Party, the Greek alignment has been and will continue to be the cornerstone and most important mainstay of our struggle.

Thus, we consider as impermissible and nationally detrimental -- to say the least -- the policy of those who, by undermining and distorting everything, have been trying to cause a crisis in Athens-Nicosia relations.

Question: In view of the fact that the procedure of the intercommunal dialogue has not produced substantive results so far, why does DIKO, as the ruling party, not denounce this procedure? How, in your opinion, without denouncing this procedure, can it be possible to make substantive progress through the dialogue?

Answer: It is a fact that so far the procedure of intercommunal dialogue has not been productive, despite the good will and conciliatory attitude the Greek Cypriot side has repeatedly displayed. Our positions toward the Cyprus problem -- as put forward in the DIKO-AKEL program of cooperation -- are absolutely well known and clear, and they are based on the Makarios line.

The controversial point of which we are being accused by the opposition -- some of the opposition parties have even made a 180-degree turn -- is preccisely whether the intercommunal dialogue must be continued or denounced. Our stance is that if we denounce the intercommunal dialogue, this would not only fail to bring about the results our rifals expect, but on the contrary, would lead to unfavorable developments.

We must not forget that the West and the East, as well as the nonaligned countries, explicitly favor the procedure of the intercommunal dialogue.

Supporting the procedure of the dialogue does not mean that we support the indefinite holding of a dialogue without content. And, of course, it would never be possible to accept or legalize occupation or the presence of Turkish troops. Eliminating the results of the invasion, starting with the withdrawal of the Turkish troops, always constitutes the primary goal of both the president of the republic and the Democratic Party. This goal will remain the focal point of our policy regardless of whether there is a dialogue or other procedure.

COMMITTEE FOR INTERNATIONAL SOLIDARITY FORMED

[Text] A conference was held on 27 September 1982 at the Pan-Cypriot Committee of Refugees [PEP] Building in Nicosia with the participation of the following parties and organizations: Democratic Party [DIKO], AKEL, Pan-Cypriot Labor Federation [PEO], Union of Cypriot Farmers, PEP, Pan-Cypriot Federation of Women's Organizations, Pan-Cypriot Federation of Students and Young Professionals, United Democratic Youth Organization, PEC's Youth Organization, the DIKO Press Office, Coordinating Committee of Parties and Organizations, Young Professionals Union of Cyprus, Pan-Cypriot Peace Council, SKYE [expansion unknown], and the PEO Press Office.

According to a released statement, the conference decided to form the Cypriot Committee of International Solidarity [Kipriaki Epitropi Dhiethnous Allilengiis (KEDA)]. The purpose of KEDA is to further promote and coordinate our people's solidarity with other peoples and also to further broaden and develop international solidarity for our people's struggle.

For this purpose, KEDA will associate itself with AAPSO and will also cooperate with the WPC, and the International Committee of Solidarity for Cyprus.

AAPSO representative in Cyprus, Faruq Hakimi, attended the meeting for the establishment of KEDA and addressed greetings. The KEDA lines are open to other organizations and democratic forces that would like to join.

The KEDA Secretariat was elected as follows: chairman, Mrs Rina Katsellis; vice chairman, Andreas Erotokritou; vice chairman, Mrs Mairi Papadhopoulou; secretary general, Dhonis Khristofinis; assistant secretary general, Mikhalis Olimbios; treasurer, Zakharias Filippidhis.

The statement adds: KEDA has sent a cable to the UN secretary general condemning Israeli crimes in Lebanon and asking for punishment of the guilty and for taking measures to prevent similar crimes.

A cable has also been sent to the PLO expressing unlimited support for the just struggle of the heroic Palestinian people whose sole legal representative is the PLO.

A cable has been addressed to AAPSO expressing full support for its goals as well as the wish for KEDA to join the AAPSO ranks.

TURKS REPORTEDLY BRING HEAVY WEAPONS INTO NORTH

NC060738 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The occupation troops have recently brought armored vehicles and heavy weapons from Turkey in order to reinforce the entire line of confrontation.

Specifically, according to information I ELEVTHEROTIPIA has received from authoritative sources, the Turks have brought a number of U.S. armored M-48 vehicles that were unloaded at Famagusta port.

The tanks were seen heading toward the headquarters of the occupation forces' armored unit stationed at Lysi. From there they are being deployed in the Tymbou area.

Along with this, the invaders have brought a large number of long-range recoilless guns, bazookas and mortar launchers as well as a series of FN [as received] weapons, including heavy submachineguns.

All of these weapons have been deployed at the border posts which are close to the National Guard posts.

The republic's authorities are also aware of these reports.

According to the same authoritative sources, the invaders have replaced the Turkish Cypriots who man the posts in the area of Pergamos and Pyla with Turkish mainland troops.

The Turks are already taking strict measures to prevent the Turkish Cypriots from having contacts with Greek Cypriots. These Turkish activities are described as very provocative and are aimed at causing aggravation and intimidation.

CBC RADIO, TELEVISION WORKERS BEGIN STRIKE

[Text] The Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation [CBC] radio and television were silent for 12 hours since noon yesterday, and there will be two 2-hour interruptions daily as from today until Friday, as a result of a dispute between CBC technical staff and management.

Interruptions will be from 10 a.m. until noon and from 7.00 p.m. to 9.00 p.m. in the evening.

An appeal by the minister to the president, Mr Dinos Michaelides, whose ministry oversees CBC affairs, for a 15-day strike suspension to consider a pay settlement was rejected by the union. So was an offer by the CBC management to refer the case to arbitration.

The dispute showed no signs of an early settlement. The CBC announced that it is not prepared to negotiate under duress.

The CBC employs a staff of between 400 and 500 belonging to two unions, one representing the editorial and non-technical staff and the other the technical staff with some 100 to 150 members.

Management, in its statement, said the agreement with the union was concluded only last June and was approved by the CBC and union which now demands re-negotiation on the grounds that "certain facts have changed since".

The CBC statement said: "The Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation is not going to discuss under the threat of strike action about an agreement which was only recently concluded after strenuous and long negotiations".

The union said it had given the CBC 10 days notice under the Code of Industrial Relations, and despite the good will shown by the union there has been no response to their demand for the restructuring and job evaluation.

At a meeting yesterday, it said further action will be decided on Friday at a general meeting of the union.

KHARALAMBOPOULOS RETURNS, DISCUSSES MEETINGS

[Text] Foreign Minister Ioannis Kharalambopoulos returned from Canada this morning. At the airport he was received by Deputy Foreign Minister Kapsis.

On arrival at Ellinikon Airport, Kharalambopoulos stated that during his meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Shulz in New York the exchanged views on international and bilateral issues. Shultz, he said, demonstrated understanding of the problems facing Greece. Kharalambopoulos expressed satisfaction with his meeting with Shultz, who thanked him for Greece's constructive role in dealing with the Middle East crisis.

On his meeting wiht Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen in Ottawa, Kharalambopoulos said that it was agreed to continue efforts to promote an atmosphere of detente between the two countries. During the next meeting we will have in December in Brussels, he said, we will discuss future processes and methods to be followed for the dialogue between the two countries. Relevant recommendations will be submitted by Kharalambopoulos and Turkmen to the Greek and Turkish Governments.

PAPANDREOU, KLIRIDHIS DISCUSS CYPRUS ISSUE

NC052145 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou was visited at noon today at Kastri by Glavkos Kliridhis, chairman of the Democratic Rally of Cyprus. Also present were Leandros Zakhariadhis, deputy chairman of the Democratic Rally, and the director of the prime minister's diplomatic bureau, Makheritsas.

A review of the latest developments in the Cyprus issue was conducted. Also examined were prospects in view. Kliridhis explained to the prime minister his proposal for a conference of all Cypriot political leaders under the chairmanship of the Greek prime minister. This meeting falls within the prime minister's scheduled contacts with Cypriot political leaders.

As stated by the government spokesman, requests to see the prime minister have been received from Mr Lissaridhis and Mr Ioannidhis. The government spokesman added that the question of Kliridhis' proposal cannot be considered now because presidential elections are due to be held in Cyprus next February.

In the afternoon, Kliridhis conferred with the leader of the official opposition, Evangelos Averof, for 1 hour. During their meeting all aspects of the Cyprus issue were examined along with the proposal for a pan-national conference on the issue.

TURKMEN: TRANSITION TO DEMOCRACY PROGRESSING

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that the transition to a parliamentary democratic system in Turkey is progressing according to the program and that with the completion of this program political problems between Turkey and various Western European and Scandinavian countries will be eliminated.

Turkmen, who is in New York, made a statement at the Foreign Policy Association meeting yesterday and commented on Turkey's relations with Western European and Scandinavian countries. Turkish Radio and Television correspondent Kemal Akaydin reports that in reference to Armenian terrorism, Turkmen said that it is creating problems in Turkey's relations with certain countries, especially France. Turkmen also expressed his satisfaction over the observation he made at the NATO foreign ministers meeting held last weekend that there is a more pronounced consciousness of the issue of international cooperation against terrorism. Turkmen concluded by saying that Turkey insists that harsher legal punishment be meted out against acts of terror and that there be more cooperation in the control of arms trade.

Turkmen held various contacts in New York yesterday. He met with the foreign ministers of Algeria, Tanzania and Romania. Bilateral relations and international problems were discussed at the meetings.

PRIME MINISTER SENDS MESSAGES TO KOHL, SCHMIDT

[Text] Ankara, 5 Oct (AA) -- Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has sent messages to the new West German chancellor, Helmut Kohl, and the former chancellor, Helmut Schmidt.

In his congratulatory message to Kohl, Ulusu expressed his "belief that the interest shown in Turkey's problems and the relations between the two countries by Kohl and his party will continue and increase during his term in power."

Ulusu said that "Turkey is ready to cooperate both with the chancellor, himself, and the government he leads in line with the historic ties between the two countries, and the alliance of which they are members."

In his message to Schmidt on the occasion of his leaving office, Ulusu expressed his best wishes in his future life.

Ulusu stated that the good will shown and the efforts exerted by Schmidt to raise the level of relations and cooperation between the two countries to a most productive level during his term in office will be remembered with gratitude by the Turkish Government and nation.

Ulusu noted that "it is an undeniable fact that you have made great contributions to strengthening not only Federal Germany, but the entire Western alliance, and to developing world peace."

CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY BEGINS LEGISLATIVE YEAR

Irmak made an opening speech after the playing of the national anthem. He said that the Assembly will continue with its intense activities during the new legislative period in a bid to restore a normal and healthy democracy to Turkey. Irmak added that the Assembly prepared the constitution, which is one of its primary duties on the road to democracy, and that the laws on political parties and elections which will affect the future of the nation will be enacted within this legislative year. Irmak said that in addition to these major duties, the Assembly will also contribute to modernizing Turkey, in line with the Ataturk principles, and to the activities underway in the social field. He added: Our assembly will fulfill all duties as required with a sense of responsibility toward history and the people, and will receive the gratitude of future generations.

Irmak recalled that, since 23 October 1981, the day the Assembly began its activities, it has worked a total of 811 hours, enacting 131 bills. He added that there currently are 89 bills on the agendas of the committees. Irmak noted that all members of the assembly are working in accordance with the desires and inclinations of the people and with a sense of responsibllity toward the nation.

Elections will be held for the Assembly speaker and members of the Chairmanship Council at the Assembly's afternoon session, to convene at 1400.

Irmak Reelected Speaker

[Text] The Consulative Assembly has begun the new legislative year. Sadi Irmak has been reelected Assembly speaker. Yavuz Kocak reports from the news bureau at the parliament on the new legislative year and the elections for speaker:

[Begin Kocak recording] On the occasion of the new legislative year, the Consulative Assembly held elections for a speaker and for other members of the Chairmanship Council at its afternoon session. A vote was taken to elect the president as soon as the Assembly convened in the afternoon. Five candidates were nominated in the election for speaker. They were: Esref Akinci, Teoman Ozalp and Namik Kemal Yolga, appointed by the National Security Council, Konya Representative Sadi Irmak and Ankara Representative Fevzi Uyguner. According to the rules and regulations of the Assembly, candidates must receive a minimum of 81 votes in the first two rounds of voting to be elected Assembly speaker. However, none of the candidates could win this majority. In the first round of voting, in which 148 members participated, Irmak and Ozalp each received 41 votes. Alkinci received 31, Yolga 21 and Uyguner 10. Three votes were blank. In the second round, in which 150 members participated, Irmak received 63, Ozalp 44, Akinci 27, Yolga 11 and Uyguner 4. One vote was blank in the second round. The third round of voting was held because the simple majority could not be achieved in the first two. According to the rules and regulations of the Assembly, the two candidates who received the highest number of votes in the second round participated in the third round. These candidates were Irmak and Ozalp. In the third round, the candidate who receives the highest number of votes is elected president. In the third round, 148 members participated in the voting. Irmak received 86 votes and was reelected speaker. Ozalp received 60 votes, one vote was blank and one was declared void.

In a short statement after being elected speaker, Irmak thanked the members for considering him worthy of becoming speaker.

The Assembly went into recess after the elections. After the recess, the Assembly convened under Irmak. Then the Assembly proceeded to elect the two deputy speakers. Eight candidates were nominated. The elections for the deputy speakers are still in progress. [end recording]

BAYULKEN URGES COOPERATION AGAINST TERRORISM

[Text] National Defense Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Umit Haluk Bayulken has said that international terrorism is systematically and consciously being conducted inside and outside the country, which has been chosen as the target, and that the dimensions are gradually reaching those of war. Bayulken made an opening speech, entitled "NATO in the Nineties," at a meeting organized by the Political and Social Research Foundation in Istanbul. He recalled that those attacking Turkish diplomats and attaches were the products of Armenian terrorism, which was the kind of international terrorism directed against Turkey. Bayulken said: On the occasion of this meeting, we reiterate our call to NATO countries and all the countries of the world to cooperate against international terrorism. The targets of international terrorism and the places through which it is channeled are known. Noting that past years demonstrated that detente cannot be as effective as a defense system, Bayulken added that detente should not be regional, but general, from the viewpoint of world peace and security.

The president of the foundation, Prof Memduh Yasa, also speaking at the seminar, said that for NATO to fulfill its deterrent role it should increase its military power, and political unity within the alliance should be secured.

Other speakers at the meeting expressed the view that NATO countries have different views on detente and that this causes a setback within the alliance.

PASIN ADDRESSES TURKISH, U.S. BUSINESSMEN

[Text] Minister of State Sermet Refik Pasin has said that the economic stability program being implemented has made irrevocable changes in the Turkish economy and that the government is determined to continue along the same path.

Speaking at a meeting attended by Turkish and U.S. businessmen in Istanbul, Pasin noted that it is natural to face difficulties in the implementation of the stability program. Referring to economic relations between Turkey and the United States, Pasin said that the share of Turkish-U.S. trade within the overall trade volume is gradually decreasing. Pasin said that Turkey especially needs foreign investment directed to exports and that the economic policy being pursued will secure it. Pasin concluded by saying that Turkish and U.S. businessmen can cooperate on issues such as construction, industry and the marketing of foodstuffs.

The Administrative Council chairman of the Turkish Union of Chambers, Mehmet Yazar, said that statistics show that the stability program has been successful. Yazar added that the rate of inflation has dropped from 100 percent to 35 percent and that exports are increasing in a healthy manner.

The U.S. ambassador to Ankara, Robert Strausz-Hupe, said that the Turkish private sector has made considerable progress in the last 2 years. He added that Turkey might be accepted as a full EEC member earlier than expected as a result of the stand adopted by Turkey in its relations with the Community.

The president of the Turkish-American Association talked about the benefits of joint investments by the businessmen of both countries. An exhibition entitled "Turkey During the Republic Period Through Statistics" was also opened on the occasion of the meeting, which was jointly organized by the Turkish Union of Chambers and the Turkish-American Association, based in New York. The Turkish and U.S. businessmen's meeting, during which possibilities for cooperation will be taken up, will last 3 days.

MINISTRY REJECTS ECEVIT APPLICATION FOR RELEASE

[Text] The application by his defense lawyer for the release of former RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has been rejected by the Junta's Defense Ministry for the second time. In reply to the lawyers' second application, the Defense Ministry decided that they will not resort to a written order in connection with subtracting the time spent as a detainee from the time of punishment and releasing Ecevit, who is currently in the Ankara prison. It has been announced that the Defense Ministry decision on the issue has been submitted to the Ankara Martial Law Command's 3rd Military Court.

ARMENIAN TERRORIST SAYS ASALA ARMENIANS' ENEMY

[Text] Ankara, 5 Oct (AA) -- (Levon Ekmekciyan), condemned to death by Ankara Martial Law Court for taking part in an armed attack at Esenboga Airport in August, told journalists Tuesday: "The enemy of Armenians is ASALA [Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia] and not Turks. The Armenian nation must know that. I regret bitterly what I have done. The dogs called ASALA came out as the defenders of the Armenian cause but their aim was evidently different. Their aim is to deceive Turkish youths and make them attack the Turkish nation."

During the 30-minute press conference, (Ekmekciyan) said, through an interpreter, ASALA had been putting pressure on his family, adding: "In case we had not staged an action in Turkey, ASALA would harm us and our families."

TWO LEFTIST ACTIVISTS SENTENCED TO DEATH

TA051651 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] Two members of the illegal revolutionary leftist organization [DEV SOL], Saadettin Guven and Baki Altin, accused of killing former Prime Minister Nihat Erim and a policeman named Ali Kartal, have again been sentenced to death by the Istanbul Martial Law Command's 2nd Military Court. The sentences were announced at today's hearing after the suspects and their lawyer made their defense. In its decision, the court stated that it had become evident that Guven and Altin had killed Erim and Kartal on 19 July 1980. Arriving at the conclusion that the suspects' action in question aimed at forcefully changing the constitional order, the Military Court sentenced Guven and Altin to death. The suspects were previously tried at the same court, together with four other DEV SOL members, for killing Istanbul Deputy Security Director Mahmut Dikler and policeman Turgut Ergulen, and were sentenced to death. However, the Supreme Court of Military Appeals has annulled the death sentences on grounds of incomplete investigation due to the absence of Mrs Erim's testimony.

COMMUNISTS SCORE TURKMEN'S MIDDLE EAST POLICY

[Station commentary]

[Text] The statements by the junta's Foreign Minister Turkmen during his news conference in New York must have attracted your attention. First of all, Turkmen is an expert at making utterly contradictory statements in one breath.

For example, on the one hand Turkmen says that his government totally approves of the U.S. Middle East plan and that the Turkish-U.S. defense cooperation agreement, which is an integral part of the U.S. Middle East policy, has reached the state of implementation. On the other, he announces that he does not consider Reagan's recent proposals for a Middle East solution comprehensive. He states that his government supports the Middle East plan formulated at the Fes Arab summit. Which statement do you say is right? If the resolutions adopted at the Fes summit meeting are positive, then should not Turkey exert efforts for the implementation of these resolutions, acknowledge that the United States is the primary active supporter of recent Israeli attacks and reformulate its Middle East policy?

However, Turkmen does not say anything like this. On the contrary, he announces that the defense cooperation agreement with the United States has reached the stage of implementation and new aircraft types are being discussed. He talks happily about many-sided economic and military cooperation with the United States.

Dear listeners, Turkmen may sail through his news conferences with such double standards or blatant demogogueries. However, it is no longer possible to conduct a foreign policy through lies and deceptions; nor is it possible to deceive the people. The U.S. Middle East policy is clear. It is also clear what role the United States envisages for the junta within this policy. It is impossible to conduct a joint foreign policy with the United States, on the one hand, and attempt to appear likable in the eyes of the Arab people and convince our people about this so-called multifaceted foreign policy demagogy, on the other. The people contend that if you support the Palestinian and Arab people, then you cannot differentiate between the United States and Israel. The murderer of every annihilated and murdered Palestinian is not only Israel but, above all, the United States.

KREISKY APPRECIATES REAGAN LETTER ON MIDEAST

AU050843 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0600 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Excerpt] At a meeting sponsored by the Karl Renner Institute at the Vienna Konzerthaus last night, Chancellor Kreisky announced that President Reagan had paid tribute to his efforts for a solution of the Middle East problems. In a letter, Reagan expressed the hope that joint initiatives could be continued. Kreisky said literally that he was personally satisfied with the U.S. President's letter and with the fact that Reagan has recognized the Palestinian problem as the crux of the Middle East problem.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON PENTAGON MISSILE RUMORS

[Text] Vienna (AZ) -- Contrary to recently published newspaper reports, the U.S. Defense Department has by no means called for missile armament for the Austrian Army, Defense Minister Roesch declared in an interview with EXTRABLATT magazine. Roesch: "There is a definite statement by the Pentagon that this issue has never come up for discussion."

SOVIETS CALLS OFF CARDINAL KOENIG'S VISIT

AU051113 Vienna NEUE KRONEN-ZEITUNG in German 5 Oct 82 p 2

[Text] Vienna -- The USSR visit planned by Cardinal Koenig has been called off. Koenig intended to meet with Catholic clergymen from Lithuania and Latvia. The official reason given by the Soviets for cancelling the visit: "lack of time." Unofficially, it has been learned that the Kremlin called off Koenig's visit because of disturbances in the Baltic countries. Cardinal Koenig intends to make the trip at some later date.

MARIO SOARES RULES OUT PS-CDS COALITION

[Unattributed report: "Mario Soares Tells Radio Commercial: Socialist Party Will Not Return to 'Unnatural' Coalition With Social Democratic Center Party"]

[Excerpt] Mario Soares said on Radio Commercial's "Domingueiro" program last night that his party will not form any more coalitions with the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] since such an agreement is considered unnatural. In this instance, the Socialist Party secretary general was answering a question put by Freitas do Amaral during the previous program regarding what the Socialist Party would think now about such a government arrangement.

The CDS chairman's question was broader than this, however, and was intended to make Soares say whether "he would make the same mistakes again." That is, whether "he would again reach parallel agreements of social import with the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers-Intersindical and the PCP itself."

Having said that the question seemed "a curious one, revealing a guilty conscience on the CDS' part," the Socialist Party secretary general said that some center ministers "still feel nostalgia for the government," which proved "particularly important in increasing the conditions for a real financial recovery."

"The Socialist Party will form no more coalitions with the CDS because such an agreement would be unnatural," he said, adding that "the fact is that it was the president of the republic who pushed us into that government with his demand for a majority administration."

APN'S MOROZOV OUTLINES USSR'S POSITION ON START

[APN military observer Vasiliy Morozov article, "Barring the Way for the Arms Race" -- published alongside an article by U.S. Disarmament Agency Director Eugene Rostow under the common DIE PRESSE headline, "What Are the Essential Aspects for the United States and the USSR Regarding the START Talks Beginning Today in Geneva, and the Vienna MBFR talks?"]

[Text] In the opinion of the Soviet Union, the task of the negotiations on the limitation and reduction of strategic arms, considering their different structure, is to find such mutually acceptable long-term solutions which lower the level of the military confrontation between the USSR and the United States without impairing their security.

What is needed for this? Only one thing: Both sides must pursue the negotiations while heeding the principle of equality and equal security.

The negotiations will only be successful if one does not attempt to destroy the historical parity, and if the negotiations really aim at limiting and reducing strategic arms. Soviet military-political expert Col Gen Nikolay Chervov recently said when talking about the USSR's policy: "The essence of the Soviet policy is to block the way for the arms race. Among other things, the Soviet Union has proposed to freeze strategic arms quantitatively right now, and to introduce a ceiling for modernization; to ban the deployment of air-, sea-, and land-based long-range cruise missiles; to ban altogether, or to limit, the development of new strategic weapons; to abstain from any action likely to disturb the stability of the strategic situation and to preserve everthing positive that has been accomplished by the sides at the preceding negotiations."

And the United States? It continues to advocate so-called "drastic reductions," of which President Reagan had talked about as early as May 1982. The United States proposed to reduce the number of ballistic missile war heads by nearly one third (from 7,500 to 5,000) as well as to reduce the number of missiles to such an extent that they total about half of the present number of U.S. ballistic missiles (from 1,700 to 850 units).

In the case of the Soviet Union, 70 percent of the warheads are for ballistic land-based missiles, but in the case of the United States, this share is only about 20 percent, while 80 percent of the U.S. warheads are installed in sea-based missiles and strategic bombers. The U.S. President has publicly declared that the reductions must be carried out in such a way that they primarily affect the Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles. The U.S. proposal is putting the sides in unequal positions.

As far as the Geneva negotiations on a limitation of nuclear weapons in Europe are concerned, no mutually acceptable solutions have been found here either.

What is necessary to lead the Geneva negotiations out of the cul-de-sac and to reach mutally acceptable agreements during the new round which started on 30 September? To ensure that the limitations to be stipulated are really equal, that they do not impair the legitimate interests of either side and ensure the halting of the nuclear arms race, it is necessary both on the NATO and the USSR sides to take into consideration the entire complex of nuclear intermediate-range arms, not just separate, arbitrarily selected elements.

Recently, USSR Defense Minister Dimitriy Ustinov decalred: "The Soviet Union has submitted proposals in Geneva which provide for the establishment of an extensive European zone of reducing and limiting nuclear weapons from the Arctic to Africa, from the mid-Atlantic to the Urals. It has been proposed to reduce the existing intermediate-range weapons in such a way that 5 years after the agreement there are at the most 300 units of this type of nuclear arms on the USSR and on the NATO sides.

The reduction could apply to all types of nuclear intermediate-range weapons -- missiles as well as aircraft. In this zone, the deployment of new types of nuclear arms, naturally including the U.S. missiles -- Pershing II as well as cruise missiles -- would be prohibited."

To get things moving, the Soviet Union had earlier unilaterally stopped the deployment of intermediate-range missiles in the European part of its territory. It is no longer deploying intermediate-range missiles in the European part of the country. Rather, it is reducing them, and it is not deploying any additional intermediate-range missiles wherever the West European countries could fall within their range.

The Soviet Union remains faithful to the main goal, which consists in banishing the danger of a nuclear war and halting the arms race. The highly important Soviet initiative -- the unilateral commitment not to be the first to use nuclear weapons -- also serves this noble goal.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON INTERCEPTORS, MISSILES

AU061302 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1157 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] In the opinion of Defense Minister Roesch, Austria will have no other choice but to buy interceptors in the next legislative period. At a discussion in Vienna, Roesch stressed that the interceptors were not intended in the event of a war, but to maintain Austria's air soveriegnty in peacetime. He added that this was the only way to safeguard the country's air sovereignty in peacetime. Roesch also opposed the idea of seeking a modification of the Austria State Treaty so as to permit Austria to buy missiles. A small country, he said, could not afford to disregard a treaty.

KOHL VIEWS RELATIONS WITH U.S., FRANCE

["Excerpt" from interview with Chancellor Helmut Kohl by reporter Peter Scholl-Latour; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Kohl] I don't think it can be the aim of German policy to enter into some kind of fair-haired-boy relationship with the United States. The United States is our most important partner and the most important guarantor for the peace and freedom of our country.

On the other hand, France is our most important partner if we want to move decisively forward toward political unification in Europe -- 5 minutes before the deadline, so to speak.

I don't think you can say either/or in this connection; I think we must say as well as. That is the proper way to describe the German stand toward relations with Washington and Paris.

[Question] Were European defense problems discussed [in Paris]?

[Answer] That was naturally one of the main points of our discussions today. These talks were in preparation for the German-French summit which is to take place in Bonn in about 2 weeks. We will discuss this issue further then.

GENSCHER MEETS WITH SHULTZ, GROMYKO AT UN

LD052106 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] On the sidelines of the UN General Assembly, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher met his U.S. and Soviet counterparts, Shultz and Gromyko. Genscher assured Shultz of the continuity of Bonn's foreign policy following the change of government. With Gromyko, he discussed East-West relations and the natural gas pipeline deal.

Further Meetings

[Excerpts] UN/New York, 6 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher met with the UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar for an exchange of views on Wednesday.

To his Argentinian counterpart, Juan Ramon Aquirre Lanari, Genscher expressed his satisfaction that the conflict between Great Britain and Argentina over the Falkland Islands has not done lasting harm to German-Argentine relations.

Genscher said that the FRG, which is the friend of both sides, did not take sides in this dispute and did not aspire to the role of referee. On 15 October, the states of the EEC will consider their attitude toward the draft resolution which Argentina intends to put before the UN General Assembly. The aim of the Latin American initiative is to get London to take part in negotiations on the Falklands.

The Chinese Foreign Minister, Huang Hua, told Genscher that Beijing wants to continue its policy of opening up to the outside world. Huang Hua also spoke in favor of developing relations with the FRG, above all in the sphere of science and technology. The focus of his talks with the Angolan foreign minister, Paulo Teixeira Jorge, was the Namibian question.

RSFSR'S SOLOMENTSEV ARRIVES, HAS TALKS WITH RAU

[Text] Duesseldorf/Bonn, 6 Oct (DPA) -- Mikhail Solomentsev, chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers, arrived in Duesseldorf on Wednesday for a 6-day visit to the FRG. It is the first visit by a high-ranking Soviet politician since the change of government in Bonn. Solomentsev will meet Chancellor Helmut Kohl (DCU), Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) and SPD leader Willy Brandt for separate talks in the federal capital on Thursday.

The head of government of the largest -- 17 million square km -- and probably the most significant Soviet republic -- it has more than 150 million inhabitants -- is visiting the land of North Rhine-Westphalia at the invitation of North Rhine-Westphalia minister president and SPD deputy chairman, Johannes Rau. During a 1-1/2 hour talk on Wednesday afternoon, Rau and his Soviet guest stressed the need to further develop the economic and cultural relations between the two countries. Rau told Solomentsev that the German people are looking with great concern but also with hope toward the Geneva disarmament negotiations between the world powers. The Duesseldorf minister president's office said in the evening after the discussion that there was specific discussion on possible cooperation in exploiting raw materials in the USSR and in agricultural projects.

MINISTERS ATTEND GDR EMBASSY RECEPTION

[Text] Bonn, 6 Oct (DPA) -- Rainer Barzel, federal minister for intra-German relations, and Minister of State Philipp Jenninger of the federal chancellor's office, on behalf of the Federal Government attended a reception given by the GDR Embassy in Bonn today to mark the 33rd anniversary of the founding of the GDR. The prominent guests from the opposition ranks included former minister Hans-Juergen Wischnewski and Herbert Wehner, chairman of the SPD Bundestag parliamentary group.

Barzel described his presence as "quite natural." In addition to representatives of the diplomatic corps, many representatives of industry were present again this time at the reception in the Godesberg town hall.

GENSCHER VIEWS CONTINUITY OF BONN POLICY

DW061203 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1800 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] [Question] Have you been representing every aspect of the former detente policy here [during your talks]?

[Answer] The Federal Government will continue its alliance policy as well as the detente policy with the East. I have explained that in all areas of German foreign and security policy, we will continue consistently along the lines which have been supported politically for years in the Bundestag.

[Question] Regarding disarmament in the field of medium-range missiles, will the new German Government possibly press less for negotiated results in Geneva and willingly accept the deployment of these weapons?

[Answer] Everyone knows that we, as a country located on the border between East and West, are particularly interested in seeing that there won't be a new arms race and that disarmament negotiations will be successful. Therefore, no sensible person can expect from the new government what you just suggested.

No, people here know that we stand by the decisions that the alliance has made so far. This means equal stress on the offer to negotiate and on the determination to implement the decision we have made.

ECONOMICS MINISTRY 'REGRETS' U.S. SANCTIONS

[Excerpt] Bonn 6 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Economics Ministry has expressed regret at the sanctions imposed last night by the United States against four German firms which have supplied equipment for the construction of the Soviet-European gas pipeline. A ministry spokesman stressed that although this step had been expected, it could only be hoped now that the U.S. Department of Commerce would revoke its decision against AEC-Kanis, Mannesmann Anlagenbau AG in Duesseldorf and the Mannensmann subsidiaries, Essener Hochdruck-Rohrleitungsbau GMBH and Kocks Pipeline Planung GMBH. According to U.S. information, the sanctions decision is similar to those already taken against firms in France, Great Britain and Italy, which must now do without U.S. technology and equipment for the oil industry.

The ministry spokesman repeated the "considerable legal doubts" expressed earlier against U.S. intercession in existing agreements and supply commitments. The firms must ask themselves whether they want to continue to make themselves dependent on U.S. supplies. An ensuing trend to produce the corresponding technologies in the Federal Republic itself would lead to an "economically senseless duplication of work."

FULL EMPLOYMENT TO BE GIVEN 'TOP PRIORITY'

[Text] Nuremberg, 6 Oct (DPA) -- Reducing unemployment and re-establishing full employment are to be given "top priority" in the new Federal Government. Federal Labor Minister Norbert Bleum (CDU) told the administrative council of the Federal Labor Office in Nuremberg today that this is "now subject number one." Otherwise, all social policy would lose its very foundation, Bluem said.

It would not be possible to prevent 2 million people from being unemployed this winter. "But we must put our weight against this avalanche." Job provision steps, which the Federal Government helps to finance, are, in Bleum's view, "better than the fate of someone receiving unemployment benefits." With regard to the question of shortening work hours, he gives priority to a flexible age limit, without, however, excluding the possibility of reducing the hours in a working week.

The minister spoke out strongly for an open discussion of all social and wage issues here." This had nothing to do with autonomy in negotiating wage rates, which must naturally be protected and respected.

PRESS REACTION TO NEW FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

DW041739 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0600 GMT 4 Oct 82

[From the Press Review]

[Text] Today's press comment deals extensively with the domestic and foreign policy beginnings of the new Federal government.

The Dortmund WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU writes: Federal Chancellor Kohl took over at a time when the country is in an economically difficult phase, when people are concerned about peace more than ever before and when parliamentary democracy is drifting toward a credibility crisis.

He said prior to his election that the most important thing needed to reactivate the economy was a new government, and now he has one. Regarding security, he said the most important thing was to strengthen our partnership with the United States which in his view had been neglected by the social-liberals. Now he has a chance to represent German interests in Washington and Moscow. He said the most important thing for the restoration of credibility was intellectual leadership. He can assume it now. In their own interests, all citizens will wish him good luck and success in this respect. However, in view of the extremely general nature of the formulated promises of the new head of government, there is no reason not to be skeptical. Kohl will have to be judged by the way he faces the challenges and fulfills his promises. That was a quotation from WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU.

The SAARBRUCKER ZEITUNG stresses: Assuming that early in March next year, a new Bundestag will be elected, the CDU/CSU-FDP coalition formed on Friday has damned little time to prove its worth. However, the special nature of the change of government through a constructive vote of no confidence also makes it quite clear that special achievements are expected of the CDU, FDP and CSU formation. If this were not the case, we could have quietly waited and seen former Chancellor Schmidt end up in a total mess, and the FRG make a new beginning in a state of quasi bankrupt y. This Sonthofen (place of CSU rally) view of the situation certainly still has many supporters in the CDU/CSU.

The Kassel HESSISCH/NIEDERSACHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE writes: Those who had expected that in forming the government the new chancellor would set a signal of austerity are disappointed. As before, the cabinet will have 16 ministers. The number of state secretaries will even be increased. This is not a good start for a government which announced it would proceed with economizing and would demand sacrifices by all, not lastly by the state. Federal Chancellor Kohl owes it to his credibility to first of all, dismantle bureaucracy in the cabinet and the Bonn ministries. In doing this, the proportion of the coalition parties must not be of importance. The elimination of some posts of ministers and state secretaries would not substantially relieve the federal budget, to be sure. However, the new chancellor could thereby prove that he is willing and able to keep his promises.

The Duesseldorf, RHEINISCHE POST has this to say: The success or failure of Bonn's new economic and social policies will largely be determined by the future relationship between the government and the trade unions. Chancellor Kohl has taken this factor into account by appointing Labor Minister Bluem, and Family Minister Geissler, federal chairman and member of the board of the Christian Democratic Workers Union respectively, to his government. Although they have succeeded in preventing the full adoption of Lambsdorff's positions by this social welfare state offer, they will yet have trouble with their trade union colleagues.

The Munich SUDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG remarks: Federal Finance Minister designate Gerhard Stoltenberg is not holding out the prospect of tangible success of the new government's effort during the first year, and this is a realistic assessment of the situation. It is not only an attempt to establish an alibi by referring to the burden inherited, but also a sober assessment of the time it takes economic-political decisions to produce an effect. However, this government must prove its success by improving the economic situation. If Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl views the combating of unemployment primarily as a spriitual-moral challenge and tries to outline the new policy as the merger of one's self within the community, then such phrases will be viewed as resulting from the exhaustion at the end of the day when there was a change of chancellor. They will not be considered to be a criterion for the usefulness of the new team.

The KOLNISCHE RUNDSCHAU deals with the Social-Democratic campaign against the new government coalition. We quote: With great haste, which was rare earlier when it had to solve its political tasks, the SPD has now staged a campaign to put the new CDU/CSU-FDP coalition in a disadvantageous light. In millions of leaflets and newspaper ads, the people who were governing yesterday are addressing the citizens. The SPD talks loudly about betrayal and manipulation. This is an unfair campaign because the party which is now leaving has been unable for a long time to fulfill the mandate of the electorate to govern the country and solve its problems. To that extent, it is good for the Social Democrats to propagate their views a millionfold and nationwide because politically interested citizens can form their own opinion. The mature voter who will be called to the ballot boxes next spring is confronted with views which cannot be proclaimed through objective contributions, but only in partisan leaflets and newspaper ads.

The following are two commentaries on the new federal chancellor's visit to Paris. To begin with, the KONSTANZ SUDKURIER says: Helmut Kohl was certainly not ill-advised to pay a visit to the French Government in Paris on the fourth day of his chancellorship because despite all the differences between the FRG's previous five chancellors, the German-French relationship has been one of the solid foundations of Bonn's foreign policy. This trip is certainly also beneficial for himself: On the one hand, he can continue in the custom of his two great predecessors Konrad Adenauer and Helmut Schmidt, whose personal efforts and close friendship with Presidents De Gaulle and Giscard d'Estaing led to much more than just good-neighborly relations between this and the other side of the Rhine; on the other hand, Helmut Kohl can in this way correct his image of being inexperienced in foreign policy. The fact that he has a lot of catching up to do in this field is undisputed even by his political friends. The foreign reactions to the change of chancellor in Bonn were characterized by the tribute paid to Schmidt rather than by an optimistic assessment of Kohl. Therefore, the new chancellor has begun his term in office with a clever and well-considered move. We wish him and this country further decisions of this kind. This was an excerpt from the KONSTANZ SUDKURIER.

The Oldenburg NORDWEST-ZEITUNG writes on the same topic: The new government's foreign policy beginnings do not spell any problems. It even seems to be very successful on a broad front because Hans-Dietrich Genscher has much greater support for his foreign policy from his new coalition partner than he had from the SPD faction. It is becoming clear that in foreign policy, Helmut Kohl and Hans-Dietrich Genscher will continue the course of continuity which former Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had defined to the diplomatic corps the day before he was voted out. It fits into this general picture for the chancellor and vice chancellor to fly to Paris this evening to pay French President Mitterrand a courtesy visit.

COMMUNIQUE REPORTS FORCES' TASKS IN BEIRUT

LD061314 Paris Domestic Service in French 1145 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] Clarification from the Ministry of External Relations concerning the Middle East has just appeared on our teleprinters: French soliders in the multinational force are not taking part in combing operations in Beirut. They must not carry out military tasks, but simply ensure the security of the Lebanese and Palestinian civilian populations; this involves mine-clearing operations, detection of booby-trapped cars and the recovery of arms, all of which come within the framework of general tasks for the protection of the population, the communique explains. The ministry of External Relations communique has been issued following the policing operation organized yesterday in Beirut by the Lebanese Army in collaboration with French soldiers.

MINISTER DELORS CITED ON RELATIONS WITH FRG

[Unattributed report: "Mr Delors Tells Us: 'I Have No Worries About Our Relations With Bonn'"]

[Excerpt] Naturally, it is still too early to know what repercussions will result in the international economic field from the change of government in the FRG. At present, Germany is not escaping the rigors of an environment that is forcing all countries to struggle within a particularly gloomy scenario.

Whichever party is in government in Bonn, there are a number of unavoidable facts, if only because of the role currently played by the dollar, which is changing from that of a reserve currency to that of a refuge currency [valeur refuge].

As far as France is concerned, there are no indications that relations between the countries will be substantially changed. "I have no worries in this regard," [French Economy Minister] Jacques Delors told us in this connection. "The Germans can only be very heedful as regards maintaining excellent relations with us. This relates to historical conditions," the economy and finance minister continued. "Ever since the friendship forged between General de Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer, there has always been close consultation between France and Germany. This has been seen particularly in the way in which the EC's various growth crises have been surmounted. And it can even be claimed that the absence of conflict in Europe is basically linked to this capacity for consultation between the two countries."

According to Mr Delors, the leeway for the German economy remains very limited, which seems to be stressed by the German press. The only major factor that could have an effect depends on prepayments [anticipations], which would be justified by an improved psychological climate.

But the Germans have always been -- and will remain -- supporters of the market. They cannot be expected to bring about an artificial recovery. Unless the market produces satisfactory signs, German industralists will not invest.

"They softened the blow of the second oil crisis," Mr Delors said, "thanks to a traditional export outlet in the engineering industry. Otherwise, despite the excellent progress made in the auto industry, the Germans would not escape the phenomenon of industrial decline. They too are in the midst of the international crisis and can no longer count on an expansion of their exports.

Their response capacity is consequently reduced," Mr Delors recalled the excellent relations that he maintained within the European Parliament, as a deputy, with Christian Democratic representatives, some of whom were former trade unionists. He stressed their desire to maintain Europe as a framework for the quest for good relations between the two countries.

LE MONDE ON GEN ROGERS' 'NEW ATLANTIC STRATEGY'

[Editorial: "A New Atlantic Strategy?"]

[Text] The future will tell what should be thought of the commitment made Sunday by the Atlantic alliance foreign ministers at an "informal" meeting in Canada to draw up a new "comprehensive strategy" aimed at governing their relations with the Eastern bloc. At a time when the Euro-American conflict on the Siberian gas pipeline has still not been settled (a new chapter could even be opened in that affair with the determination shown by the United States to strengthen COCOM [Coordination Committee for Export to Communist Areas] controls of sales of strategic equipment), there is reason to wonder about the chances which the "16," as the Canadian secretary of the state for external relations modestly called them, have of "finding joint solutions to their differences of perception."

There is another sphere in which other differences might emerge between the Europeans, some of them at least, and their U.S. allies: the military strategy sphere. Indeed, in a speech in Brussels 30 September, supreme allied commander in Europe, General Rogers. outlined a far-reaching change, similar to the one which led to the "flexible response" doctrine in the sixties.

According to the U.S. general, the old continent's defense effort should concentrate on the development of conventional weapons installed on high-precision delivery vehicles. These would have the mission of striking deep into the rear of the Warsaw Pact Armed Forces in case of invasion, and should alone be capable of halting the attack. Tactical or other nuclear weapons would not be eliminated, but would be kept in reserve to respond to a nuclear attack if the Soviets decided to escalate to that level.

In other words, the response would be even more "flexible." The "no first use," dear to Mr McNamara and to the scientists from East and West whom the pope has just brought together [reference to report on nuclear weapons commissioned by the pope from a group of Eastern and Western scientists] would be replaced by the "no early use," which amounts to almost the same thing. The role of the nuclear forces would be changed somewhat: They would henceforth deter destruction rather than invasion.

In doing that, General Rogers' intention is to satisfy the antinuclear movement which is very active in his own country and in Europe and which, he said, "wants the same thing as I do." It is not so certain that that movement will be prepared to support the 4-percent annual increase in real terms, which that doctrine implies according to him, for the alliance's military budgets. There is also reason to wonder whether the Soviets will allow themseleves to be convinced by the challenge which that presents them in the conventional sphere which has always been their strong point: Things would be different if the neutron weapon was regarded as a "conventional" weapon. However, the political leadership have not yet reached that point. Meanwhile,this new U.S. doctrine is not likely to produce greater flexibility in Moscow's attitude in the Geneva negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe. If those weapons are to become secondary, why would the United States fight to deploy new ones on the territory of allies who themselves have reservations?

France, which certainly intends to maintain its nuclear weapons as a deterrent against any direct attack -- and not only against the threat of nuclear destruction -- is, in any case, not prepared to espouse that new direction taken by U.S. strategists.

MARCHAIS, OTHER PCF LEADERS ATTEND PRC RECEPTION

[Unattributed report: "Reception at Chinese Embassy"]

[Excerpt] Many prominent people attended the reception given yesterday evening by the Chinese ambassador in France, Yao Guang in the embassy to mark the 33rd anniversary of the PRC.

[PCF Secretary General] Ceorges Marchais and [PCF Politburo members] Maxime Gremetz and Roland Leroy attended the reception.

PRC ENVOY REGRETS CHIRAC MEETING WITH DALAI LAMA

[Text] Paris, Oct 6 (AFP) -- The Dalai Lama today held a 30-mimute meeting with Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac and later met a number of guests in a room at city hall traditionally reserved for visiting heads of state.

Immediately after the official reception, the Chinese Embassy here released a communique expressing "regret" over the event, stating that the meeting between the exiled Tibetan spiritual leader and Mr. Chirac "does not favor the relations of friendship between the Chinese and French peoples."

However, the embassy communique noted a statement by Mr. Chiras yesterday reaffirming his esteem and friendship for the Chinese people," and describing the meeting with "the Tibetan Buddhist religious chief" as an honor which he, as mayor, would have in welcoming the Dalai Lama "in the name of the capital."

Mr. Chirac said in the statement that the 30 year task of building the Chinese nation, "which has spread across all the territories which make up the People's Republic of China, notably Tibet, has allowed France and China to pursue...a fruitful policy of understanding and cooperation."

At today's meeting, Mr Chirac told the Dalai Lama, who now lives in India with some 100,000 followers, that Asia and the West, despite their apparent differences, know that they are joined "by the same eternal reality that requires a search for improved mutual understanding."

LE MONDE REPORTS GOVERNMENT ALLIANCE SQUABBLES

PM061215 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Oct 82 pp 1, 10

[Jean-Marie Colombani report: "The Majority, Stringency and the Crisis"]

[Excerpts] The PCF Central Committee meeting in Paris Monday 4 and Tuesday 5 October heard a report Monday morning from Andre Lajoinie, chairman of the PCF National Assembly group, devoted to "action for national economic development, social progress and workers' rights."

That meeting comes at a time when the question of financing the social security system is again giving rise to tension between Communists and Socialists at the government level. After the criticisms of some provisions in the social security recovery plan, [National Solidarity Minister] Pierre Beregovoy called on the PCF to respect government solidarity. For his part, National Assembly Chairman Louis Mermaz said in an interview to LA CROIX that "the union is an obligation which is binding on all."

This dispute within the majority raises the question of whether it is limited exclusively to social security or whether it concerns the new political course. Indeed it is clear that in Francois Mitterrand's view, priority should henceforth be given to reducing enterprises' costs.

"The government of the republic is not the parties' government": that reply by Pierre Beregovoy to the criticisms which the PCF is levelling at some major provisions in the social security recovery plan was not enough to deter the Communists. [Health Minister] Jack Ralite suggested in turn that the "feeling" which the Communist ministers expressed at the cabinet meeting 29 September was not the "agreement" of those ministers to which Mr Beregovoy referred when interviewed by the Europe 1 Press Club.

Thus, there is a problem concerning the rules of the game within the majority: The minister of social affairs and national solidarity thinks tht government solidarity must not suffer any attack in the present period; the health minister thinks that "nobody has the authority to report government deliberations."

If Mr Beregovoy wanted to insist, he could remind his colleague of the attitude adopted by another Communist minister -- [Transport Minister] -- Charles Fiterman -- following a government decision -- exemption of professional assets from the wealth tax -- which had led the Communist deputies to state that the government sometimes gives in to pressures from "the right and the employers." Mr Fiterman, a minister of state who had been placed in a difficult position by his own political friends, then remarked: "Government solidarity cannot be cut into slices like a sausage."

But it must be remembered that the first clash within the government took place 10 November 1981 over the restoration of the contribution of 1 percent of income. Mr Ralite had expressed reservations in the cabinet, as he did on 29 September. However, Mr Beregovoy could point out that, on this occasion, the government has taken account of the health minister's argument by not fixing any date for implementation of the criticized measures (daily rate to be paid by hospital patients and taxes on alcohol).

LEBANESE PRESIDENT TO MEET PERTINI, POPE 20 OCT

[Text] (ANSA) -- Beirut, October 6 -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil will come to Italy October 20 on official visit and will meet during his stay in Rome head of state Sandro Pertini, Premier Giovanni Spadolini and with Pope John Paul II in private audience in Vatican, Beirut government sources confirmed today. Al-Jumayyil's trip to Rome will come at the end of a visit to the United States, beginning October 17, for meetings with United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar and American President Ronald Reagan. After Italy, the president will travel on to Paris to meet with head of state Francois Mitterrand.

The government sources here said that Al-Jumayyil can be expected to sign an agreement in Rome connected to Italian aid for the reconstruction of Lebanon. Thus far, Italy has earmarked a total of 11 billion lire (8 million dollars) for emergency aid for the war-stricken nation and is preparing to allocate a like amount for the job of rebuilding the country.

A Rome Foreign Ministry delegation, led by Minister Councillor Massimo Curcio, is now in Beirut mapping out with Lebanese authorities the construction of a residential center in the capital, the rebuilding of Beirut's old sector and the reactivation of the public transport system.

FRG PRESIDENT CARSTENS TO VISIT 25-28 OCTOBER

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 5 -- West German chief-of-state Karl Carstens will make an official visit to Italy later this month, from October 25 to 28, the Italian president's office announced today. Carstens, who will be accompanied by his wife, is scheduled for an audience with Pope John Paul II at the Vatican on October 28.

PALESTINIAN RED CRESCENT HEAD THANKS FOR AID

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 6 -- The chairman of the Palestinian Red Crescent, the equivalent of the Red Cross, (Fathi) 'Arafat, visited the National Association of Italo-Arab Friendship in Rome today and the Italian-Palestinian Committee for consultations on channeling the show of Italian solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese people. After voicing his organization's thanks for Italian efforts in assisting these stricken people, 'Arafat said that the work must now be directed towards south Lebanon where the population "has been abandoned and left to the Israeli occupation and the excesses of the band led by Haddad," a reference to the Israeli financed and trained Christian militiamen led by the cashiered Lebanese Colonel Sa'd Haddad.

The Palestinian Red Crescent intends to open an office in Rome to coordinate Italian relief for Palestinians and the Lebanese.

In the related development today, the Palestine Liberation Organization bureau in Rome accused Israel of continuing its policy of "repression and extermination" waged against the Palestinians in Lebanon and in the occupied West Bank territory and demanded that world public opinion safeguard the fate of these Palestinians. The PLO communique containing the charges also insisted that the Lebanese Phalangists, described as "the long arm of Israel" are murdering dozens of Palestinians every day and are "killing and conducting mass arrests" in West Beirut in dragnets thrown out often with the cover of the Lebanese Army.

The statement said that a number of Palestinian university professors have been expelled from the West Bank because they have refused to disassociate themselves from the PLO, as demanded by the Israeli occupiers of the Arab territory.

MINISTER ON PURCHASE OF SOVIET, ALGERIAN GAS

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 6 -- An Italian decision on whether to buy Soviet natural gas "must take into consideration the rebalance of trade with the Soviet Union," State Industries Minister Gianni de Michelis told newsmen in the evening in response to a question pending for the Rome government. Earlier this month, Italy was given another extention of the deadline for deciding on the purchase of Siberian natural gas to be pumped to Western Europe through the new Soviet pipline now under construction.

"Italy imports too much from the Soviet Union in relation to its exports to the country," the minsiter said and noted, "the same case was made for Algeria," with reference to the recently concluded deal to buy Algerian natural gas for a price pegged at 40 cents per one million BTU's over the prevailing world market price.

In this context, De Michelis acknowledged that the special commissioner in charge of the powerful State Hydrocarbons Agency (ENI), Enrico Gandolfi, had sent a letter to the ministry demanding a full explanation of all aspects of the contract before the government put a final signature on the accord.

De Michelis told the press conference that "the government is studying all aspects of the surcharge" and that ENI "will have the clarification it is asking for." The minister also dropped the assurance that the surcharge for the Algerian gas "will not weigh in on the SNAM budget" and that the government will demonstrate to parliament that the purchase agreement is sound.

AVANTI REBUTS PCI AIDE'S CRITICISM OF PSI

[Text] To assert, as [PCI Secretariat member] Deputy Napolitano does, that the PSI has increasingly based its political approach on the PCI's exclusion from the process of forming majorities and governments is simply untrue. On two occasions -- in 1976 and 1979 -- the PSI accepted early elections so as not to exclude the PCI. We will not pursue a third time the path of great hopes ill rewarded by those who recently, just so long as early elections could be avoided, limited themselves to the ambiguous proposal of a "different kind of government."

To assert, as Deputy Napolitano does, that the socialist requirement of aiming at an adjustment of the balance of forces is "illusory because the PCI is bound to remain the strongest left-wing party," may perhaps satisfy party pride, but carries no weight when it comes to the PSI's determination to grow within the left and nationwide, not resigning itself to inevitabilities that do not exist in politics. To assert, as Deputy Napolitano does, that "there are people within the PSI who do not realize that without an understanding with the communists, it is impossible to implement a policy of progress and reforms," cannot fail to prompt mistrust, unless this assertion is preceded or at least accompanied by the PCI's realization of the need for a thorough and consistent revision of ideological orientations and practical conduct.

POPE URGES RETURN OF 'TIME OF TALKS' IN POLAND

[Text] (ANSA) -- Vatican City, October 6 -- Pope John Paul II called for a return of "the time of talks" between the segments of Polish society today. Picking up a phrase used by Krakow Archbishop (Frantiszek Nacharski) during the weekly general audience today, the pope stated in part: "Not long ago, Cardinal Archbishop (Macharski) said 'We want the time of talking things over to return, and we shall leave no stone unturned to achieve this...in order not to lose any of the achievements of the past two years which made us feel the masters of (our) land." The pope urged prayers so that "...every man may obtain the dignity that blossoms within him through his ties with God."

JUNE COUPISTS TRANSFERRED FOR 'SECURITY REASONS'

[Text] Madrid, Oct 6 (AFP) -- Four of the 32 soldiers convicted in June of participation in the abortive military coup of February 1981 were transferred to prisons outside the capital today for security reasons, the Defense Ministry announced. The four included the leader of the assault on the Cortes (parliament), Lieutenant Colonel Antonio Tejero. The transfer followed by four days the arrest of three high-ranking officers on charges they were preparing a military rebellion for October 27, just before scheduled general elections.

While attributing the transfers to security considerations, the Defense Ministry communique (?stressed the situation of) tranquillity" currently reigning "in all military units" and the "genuine indignation" among members of the armed force at the "unreasonable behavior" of the officers just arrested.

The ministry denied rumors of fresh arrests in the armed forces and of the [word indistinct] of a list of 100 colonels among documents seized from the arrested men.

PRESS CONCERNED OVER FEW ARRESTS IN COUP ATTEMPT

[Text] Madrid, Oct 6 (AFP) -- The campaign for Spain's legislative elections on October 28 began today with political leaders themselves pasting up posters in the capital. Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, brush and glue in hand, put up the portrait of Central Democratic Union Leader Landelino Lavilla while the man expected to head Spain's next government, Socialist Party leader Felipe Gonzalez, peered out from his party's poster, urging citizens to vote "for change."

Other leading politicians helping to kick off the campaign were Communist Party Secretary General Santiago Carrillo and Popular Conservative Alliance chief Manuel Fragairi Barne.

Meanwhile, there still was concern in Spain over the threat of a coup d'etat, five days after discovery of a plot to disrupt a socialist victory in the elections. The press was wondering about the extent of the plot, which reportedly was to be "hard" and might have even led to the killing of King Juan Carlos. Newspapers were wondering why only two colonels and a lieutenant colonel were arrested. Certain dailies cited well-informed sources who said 1,000 military personnel were contacted by the plotters, and not 100 as previously reported. The independent daily EL PAIS cited an unidentified North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) official who said that 2,000 of the Spanish Army's 40,000 officers were putschists. The DIARIO 16 newspaper recalled that 15 officers and 2,000 soldiers were all that was needed to bring the colonels to power in Greece in 1967.

BOMB EXPLOSIONS CAUSE PROPERTY DAMAGE, INJURY

Meanwhile, in Pontevedra in northwest Spain, a child was injured yesterday when a detonator which he and his brother had found in a trashbin exploded in his hand. Unofficial sources say that the explosive device belonged to the 1 October Antifascist Resistance Group, GRAPO, which is blamed for a number of bombs recently placed in various Spanish cities.

CARRILLO ON PCE'S FUTURE OPPOSITION ROLE

PM051545 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 24-30 Sep 82 pp 6-11

[Apparent text of Spanish Communist Party [PCE] Secretary General Santiago Carrillo 16 September report to PCE Central Committee Session in Madrid: "No Progressive Changes Against PCE"]

[Excerpt] Irrespective of whether or not those concerned are irritated by the fact, one is surprised by the incredible ease with which the country has opened the way to a Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] election victory. In the Union of the Democratic Center's [UCD'S] case, this incredible ease is somewhat reminiscent of the way in which the Francoist Cortes and the movement were replaced at the time of the political reform.

Though among the voters there is obviously a very strong pull toward the PSOE, the fact is that the context for this pull was facilitated and encouraged by a number of factors within economic and social circles and the media, which threw open the doors of a government majority to the PSOE.

An attempt is thus being made to create a bipolarization in this country between a moderate PSOE and a right that is in no way moderate -- a disorderly right led by [Popular Alliance leader] Fraga Iribarne.

Socialist Concessions to the Right

We must be clear and state that to ensure that the doors to the government would be opened widely and easily to the PSOE, to what was the party of Pablo Iglesias, Largo Caballero and Indalecio Prieto, the PSOE has had to make major concessions to the right.

It is not I who says this: They should be angry with Nicolas Redondo, who said so in a leading magazine. He accused the PSOE of concerning itself more with seeking the employers' votes than with seeking the workers' votes.

But obviously -- and this, together with the preceding, is the reason for our criticism of the PSOE -- the PSOE has made a gift to the right in this election campaign -- vetoing the Communist Party. Furthermore, it is doing its utmost to reduce -- and, if possible, electorally eliminate -- the Communist Party. This stance on the part of the PSOE must warm the hearts of those who, when they directed the political change in 1976, wanted an incomplete democracy ranging from the movement to the PSOE to the outlawing of the Communist Party.

The Really Useful Vote

Since a PSOE victory is certain, as can be deduced from the opinion polls, it must be said that the useful vote for change -- and not the kind of change the PSOE is talking about -- is not so much a vote for the PSOE (which will receive an avalanche of votes from the UCD, from new voters and also as a result of abstentions), not so much the PSOE's guaranteed vote, but a vote for the Communist Party, which is directly under attack by Fraga and, regrettably, also by the PSOE.

Under these specific conditions, the really useful vote for real change in this country, to avoid another disappointment that will create the conditions for a radical regression to the right, is a vote for the PCE -- and not because our party now constitutes a government alternative. A party such as ours cannot yet constitute a government alternative, but it can, nevertheless, play a regenerate role, an invigorating role in Spanish politics. In short, it can be the guarantor of real change.

If our party has -- as it will have -- a substantial parliamentary group and is supported by the mobilization of the people's masses, the promises of change will not remain a mere promise, a mere trap, but will become a reality.

So that nothing stops, so that parliamentary acts and so that there are real changes in Spain, I repeat: The useful vote on the consistent left is the Communist Party vote.

The Communist Party group in the next Cortes will support the government headed by the PSOE in everything to do with measures of change, progress and advancement. The Communist Party will form no pincers with the right against the PSOE. However, it will oppose that government if it ever makes undertakings to the right harmful to the workers' interests, to the freedoms of the citizens or to the autonomies; which reduces the prerogatives of the people's sovereignty and maintains decisions harmful to Spain and to peace as members of NATO.

If we are now criticizing the PSOE in the election campaign it is precisely because our exclusion, which it proposes, and its flattery of the powers that be, now constitute a tactical compromise with the right to the detriment of the changes and advances that are possible in this country and to the detriment of the left.

We do not at all regard the PSOE as our adversary, but as a dangerous rival, when we see that it intends to eliminate us.

Our wish would have been for each of our parties to contest these elections with its own lists so as to establish its own strength and representation, but with convergent programs and with a desire for cooperation, not only between the two parties but also with the progressive and reformist sectors of the bourgeoisie. We are convinced that only a broad democratic alignment is capable of surmounting the resistance of the forces opposed to change.

PSOE: A Certain Totalitarian Inclination

On its own, the PSOE has show what I have called, and which must be properly understood as, a kind of totalitarian inclination. This inclination was revealed in its internal rules as a result of truly monolithic votes. It was confirmed when the PSOE refused to form political pacts, and when it absorbed -- I would say made extinct -- Fernandez Ordonez' [Democratic Action] Party, which is rejected by every individual and party, even if it is granted some consolidating positions. But I repeat, the PSOE, on its own, is not in a position to guarantee the changes.

The democratic forces must reach an understanding, and we have shown over and over again our unitary desire for cooperation with the PSOE. We have shown it in local councils, in the parliamentary committees and in the bodies of the autonomous communities. We are not to blame for whatever polemics there have been between the PSOE and the Communists. The ones to blame are those who have approached the start of the election campaign by denying the Communist Party absolutely everything, as pleases this country's extreme right.

DENMARK

POLITICIAN ON STATUS OF EAST-WEST ARMS TALKS

PM060939 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 1 Oct 82 p 7

[Social Democratic Party Foreign and Security Policy Committee Chairman Lasse Budtz "panel" article: "U.S. Happiness Over Denmark"]

[Text] The U.S. administration is viewing political developments in three of its West European allies with satisfaction -- West Germany, the Netherlands and Denmark. This satisfaction was recently expressed to me openly and candidly during a visit to Washington, but at the same time this satisfaction is also to be found in the newspapers.

Thus a few days ago, the NEW YORK TIMES wrote that the fall of Helmut Schmidt would make it easier to carry through the deployment of the West's medium-range missiles. The article added that NATO Secretary General Luns was certain that the Netherlands would accept missiles for deployment after the probable formation of a government of the liberals (conservatives) and Christian Democrats. And finally, it said that the formation of a new government in Denmark would mean that it would no longer be necessary to listen to Danish ministers' warning voices about [Western] reactions to the Soviet Union.

If Europe is taken as a whole, there can be no suggestion of a shift to the right -- think of France, Greece, Sweden and Spain. It is probable that the U.S. swing to the right has been stopped, something we will see demonstrated in the U.S. midterm elections in early November. But it is still rightwingers who are in power in the United States, and they have nothing against seeing Helmut Schmidt and Anker Jorgensen toppled.

The WASHINGTON POST and the LOS ANGELES TIMES have expressed some nervousness at the possibility that Schmidt might lose control over the West German Social Democratic Party. One commentator, for example, has said that under Willy Brandt's leadership, the party is in the process of working its way into a position of opposition to the deployment of the West's medium-range missiles, but that this opposition could be thwarted if Schmidt retains his power over the party.

Various members of the [U.S.] Senate advocate a foreign policy even more rightwing than Reagan's. They are very angry at the Europeans' attitude toward the Soviet gas pipeline, and in a real effort to punish the impudent Europeans, a Senate subcommittee recently voted by 12 to 1 for a 23,000-man reduction in U.S. forces in Europe. The senators were led by Alaska's Senator Ted Stevens who fairly illogically embarrassed the U.S. Administration in its attempts to reach a negotiated agreement with the Russians on conventional force reductions in Europe. Why in the world should the Russians enter into an agreement on reductions, when the Americans are cutting their forces of their own free will?

At present, the Americans are negotiating with the Russians in two other areas -- the long-range strategic nuclear missiles and the European medium-range missiles. Both Washington and Moscow, which I visited immediately before the U.S. capital, are somewhat nervous regarding what might happen if an agreement on medium-range missiles is not reached during the course of next year.

The United States, in particular, in response to calls from Europeans, has proposed that the Russians remove all their SS-4, SS-5 and SS-20 missiles. In return for which the West would refrain from deploying 572 Pershing II missiles and the so-called cruise missiles. For the time being, the Russians have rejected this proposal and Moscow is complaining of a lack of movement on the American side. The Russians do not want to dismantle all their medium-range missiles, but they could perhaps agree to the adoption of a ceiling on the number of missiles -- a proposal rejected at present by the Americans.

But what will happen at the end of 1983 if no results have been achieved by then? Will a new, large-scale, expensive arms race begin? Will West Germany, Britain, the Netherlands, Belgium and Italy immediately allow the deployment of the Western missiles? Will the United States agree to a ceiling, so that it would be possible at least to limit the number of missiles? Or will the Russians continue their attempts to have the negotiations on medium-range nuclear arms linked to the talks on long-range strategic missiles?

The Russians have proposed a ceiling on all types of nuclear arms, including aircraft carrying medium-range nuclear arms, a proposal which, according to U.S. sources, would lead to bigger reductions in the Soviet Union than in the United States. But the United States has dismissed the proposal because it includes medium-range missiles which, it is said, are absolutely necessary if the Russians do not remove all of theirs.

The negotiations are moving incredibly slowly, but they do provide sudden brief glimpses of otpimism. It ought to be in the economic interests of both countries that they reach some form of agreement or other. Some 315 SS-20 missiles have now been deployed. The Russians claim that they have suspended further deployment. The Americans deny this categorically.

If some form of agreement or other is not reached, the international climate could not avoid a grave deterioration, and this would increase the tension not only between East and West but also between Europe and the United States, because it is clearly the case that Europeans in general have a completely different view of the necessity of detente than the Reagan administration.

BANK OF FINLAND LOWERS MARK'S EXTERNAL VALUE

[Excerpts] The Bank of Finland has lowered the external value of the Finnish mark by approximately 4 percent. The decision was preceded by a consultation between the management board of the Bank of Finland and representatives of the government. Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa says the government will support the decision by its own measures, which aim at stabilizing price levels and at improving employment.

The changes in the currency rate are believed to result from an improvement in the competitiveness of Finnish industry, which had weakened over the past few years. Bank of Finland director Rolf Kullberg thinks that the lowering of the external value of the mark will not significantly increase pressures on prices, because the international recession will be longer than predicted, and for this reason, the rise in both export and import prices will be slight. Kullberg says that the devaluation now carried out has been set at such a figure whereby demands for compensation in various quarters will be slight and other countries will not react.

BRUDTLAND SEEKS POSTPONEMENT OF MISSILE FUNDING

PM061439 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Oct 82 p 40

[Per Danielsen report: "Labor Party Wants NATO Funding To Be Postponed"]

[Excerpt] "Norway should not grant money at the present time for preparations for the deployment of new NATO nuclear arms in Europe," [Labor Party Chairman] Gro Harlem Brundtland said yesterday in a speech to the party's National Executive meeting.

This opens the way for a vehement security policy debate in the Storting. The possibility cannot be ruled out that the government will find itself facing a majority against it on this issue.

Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland pointed out that no other NATO nation in Europe has yet granted money for the construction of new missile launching ramps. She also asserted that the U.S.-Soviet negotiations on European disarmament in Geneva would be harmed if deployment of the new missiles begins before we know what the results of the negotiations are to be.

Mrs Harlem Brundtland also stressed that it would be a violation of Norway's security policy traditions if the country were to exert pressure on the other NATO nations with an allocation of funds in this fall's budget. "We should not, and will not appear to spearhead this issue. It is reasonable for Norway to adopt a more wait-and-see attitude in line with the views the Norwegian Government used as a basis for its acceptance of the dual decision in 1979," she pointed out.

In comments to NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA, Prime Minister Kaare Willoch said that there is no suggestion of Norway's leading the way with the allocation of funds for the development of missiles. "Nor is there any proposal for fund allocations which would amount to pressure on other NATO nations from Norway. What is at stake now is the implementation of a decision made jointly by the NATO nations long ago," the prime minister said.

When the issue was discussed in the Storting in June, 32 of the Storting's 155 deputies voted for a statement which asserted that "in the present situation," Norway should not collaborate in the construction of bases for new medium-range missiles in Europe. Three Christian People's Party deputies voted in favor of the Statement, as did two from the Center Party, the four deputies from the Socialist Left Party and the two from the Liberal Party. If all 66 Labor Party deputies now vote against the actual allocation of funds this fall, this will mean that at least 77 Storting deputies could vote against the government's proposal of funds of 49 million Kronor for the NATO joint program.

At a press conference after the joint meeting between the Labor Party National Executive and the party's Storting group, Gro Harlem Brundtland called for a more detailed investigation of the question by the government. She pointed out that the government has not dealt with the matter with the care and insight such an issue requires.

SWEDEN

POSSIBILITY THAT SUBMARINE MAY BE 'DRONE'

[Text] Stockholm 6 Oct (AFP) -- Swedish authorities were today considering the possibility that the unidentified submarine they have been tracking for several days might be nothing more than a drone.

Earlier, authoritative sources said the navy had found evidence of a submarine in the waters off the top-secret Muskoe Island Naval Base, some 60 kms (35 miles) from Stockholm.

Two defense research representatives, Lars Joether Stroem and Joergen Lexander, explained today that submarines were able to launch remote-controlled robots the size of a torpedo through their tubes.

The drones would carry electronic systems which would imitate the noise made by a submarine in a dive.

The two suggested that such a device might have triggered a Swedish coastal defense alert, while the mother vessel remained outside the Muskoe Base Zone.

Although the search continued today, activity appeared to have been somewhat reduced. Only four depth charges were fired off today, compared to around 20 in recent days, for example.

Some observers believed authorities were preparing public opinion for an admission of failure.

A general staff member expressed astonishment in a television interview that the large number of depth charges used had not brought the intruder to the surface. He also noted that the rocky, uneven underwater topography made spotting a submarine difficult.

Politicians meanwhile remained virtually silent on the matter. Only outgoing Defense Minister Torsten Gustafsson dismissed as "hardly serious" speculation that a superpower may have deliberately mounted the affair to influence decisions on Swedish defense.

The conservative government of Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin is to give way tomorrow to the Social Democrat government of Olof Palme.

(In Moscow, the Soviet news agency TASS held that "an atmosphere of tension is being artificially maintained by the propaganda service.

(One begins to wonder. Is there really an unidentified object in Swedish waters? Or is that version the fruit of artifice aimed at undermining confidence and compromising the traditional normal ties between the Soviet Union and the Scandinavian nations?")

KIPRIANOU, SHULTZ DISCUSS CYPRUS ISSUE

[Text] In a meeting he had today with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz, President Kiprianou asked that the United States exercise its influence on Turkey so that it will abandon its negative stance on the Cyprus issue. Kiprianou told Shultz that the Cyprus problem is an international issue that always remains within the UN framework. However, the president added, Cyprus expects the U.S. Government to exercise its influence on the Turkish side, because if there is no change in Ankara's stance, it is impossible to expect progress in the Cyprus problem.

During the meeting, which was held in the hotel where President Kiprianou is staying in New York, the president expounded his government's position on the Cyprus problem and gave Shultz a general briefing on all its aspects. Shultz described the briefing and his talk in general with Kiprianou as very useful. Furthermore, the U.S. secretary expressed the appreciation of the United States for Cyprus' role during the recent crisis in Lebanon.

The meeting was attended on the U.S. side by Bartholomew, who coordinates issues connected with the Cyprus problem in the U.S. State Department, and Jones of the office for Cypriot affairs; and on the Cypriot side by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Ambassador in Washington Iakovidhis, the republic's permanent representative at the United Nations Mousioutas, Director of the President's Office Vovidhis and Director of the Foreign Ministry Siambos.

KHARAVYI ON KIPRIANOU-GROMYKO DISCUSSIONS

[Excerpts] Continuing his contacts at UN Headquarters, President Kiprianou met with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko yesterday afternoon. The ATHENS NEWS AGENCY reported the following late last night from New York:

"Following today's meetings with the UN General Assembly president and Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, President Kiprianou stated that during his contacts to date and, in general, during his meeting with Mr Gromyko, he met with full understanding when he explained his government's positions regarding a Cyprus solution. He also said that he and Mr Gromyko discussed the question of holding an international conference on the Cyprus problem. He also stressed that he does not expect any difficulty for the discussion of Cyprus' recourse at the General Assembly next March.

"Mr Kiprianou answered in the negative when asked whether an American initiative has been or is about to be put forth in connection with the Cyprus problem."

GDR'S HONECKER TO BEGIN OFFICIAL VISIT 14 OCT

[Text] Mr Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State and secretary general of the SED Central Committee, will arrive in Cyprus next Thursday [14 October] on a 3-day official visit at the invitation of President Kiprianou. The two presidents will begin official talks the same day. The talks will conclude on Saturday.

The president of the republic will invest the chairman of the GDR Council of State with the Grand Chain of Makarios III.

On Friday, Mr Honecker will go to Kykko and lay a wreath on the grave of Ethnarch Makarios. On Saturday, Mr Honecker will receive the committees of refugees and relatives of missing and enclaved persons.

During his visit to Cyprus, Mr Honecker will be accompanied by Guenter Mittag, SED Politburo member and Central Committee secretary; Oskar Fischer, minister of foreign affairs and member of the SED Central Committee; Gerhard Beil, member of the Council of Ministers and first deputy minister of foreign trade; and Guenter Sieber, chief of the SED Central Committee Directorate [title as heard]

LISSARIDHIS ANALYZES CURRENT CYPRIOT SITUATION

[Text] Socialist Party EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis, speaking at a press conference today, made an analysis of the current situation in Cyprus and explained the basic principles of the program to be proposed by the party for the Front of National Salvation and Alignment With Greece. Mr Lissaridhis said that the final program, on which special teams are working, will be released shortly.

Explaining the party's views on government policy, the EDEK chairman said that it does not serve the national requirements for handling the Cyprus problem, for compliance with democratic procedures and in the economic field. In the national field, he said it is noted that basic goals are being abandoned and that what had been agreed upon with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou was being violated. Mr Lissaridhis reiterated that if there is to be a solution, Turkey's final goals must become unfeasible. This, he added, can be achieved through the repositioning of the Cyprus problem on its sound anti-occupation basis, with insistence on the need for compliance with the UN resolutions and internationalization based on this repositioning.

In connection with the internal front, Mr Lissaridhis said that instead of becoming the center for people's unity, the government has become a factor for division and intolerance. He added that occupation conditions make the mobilization of all the people in the struggle for national salvation imperative.

As for the economic field, the EDEK chairman said that the situation causes serious concern and that the public debt is increasing dangerously. Mr Lissaridhis said that the goal is to balance production, which should be based on national resources. He also advocated taking austerity measures, restricting unnecessary imports, increasing exports and sound planning in behalf of the national economy with substantive control over capital reserves and investments.

Mr Lissaridhis explained the views and goals of his party on various other issues. He said the implementation of the EDEK program will provide the Republic of Cyprus with a fresh political, economic, social and moral physiognomy and will make it capable of facing any outside threat and any challenge from technological progress.

LISSARIDHIS DENIES WITHDRAWING FROM ELECTIONS

[Excerpts] Dr Vasos Lissaridhis, leader of the Socialist EDEK Party, one of the presidential candidates for next February's elections, held a press conference yesterday to outline his election manifesto. He described as a "midsummer night's dream" rumours that he would withdraw from the presidential race. President Kiprianou, though he has the AKEL support, would not manage to secure the more than 50 percent majority needed for his re-election, he said, and was confident to be the winner in a second round which will be contested by the two top winners of the first.

So far there are four presidential candidates: the incumbent President Kiprianou, the Rally Party leader Mr Glavkos Kliridhis, Dr Lissaridhis and the former Greek Cypriot negotiator, Mr Yeoryios Ioannidhis. All four declared earnest support for collaboration with the Athens government and Greek Prime Minister Mr Papandreou. But Dr Lissaridhis, a long-time friend of Mr Papandreou, said his "National Salvation Front" would ensure real collaboration.

If the second round was fought between him and President Kiprianou there was "much chance" that Mr Kiprianou would not be the next president, he said. But, he added if the second round was fought between Kiprianou and Kliridhis, then Kiprianou would be the president.

When he was reminded that his Socialist EDEK Party had polled only eight percent in the last general election, Dr Lissaridhis said that the percentages are never "fixed." Otherwise, there would be no need for elections.

In his summary of the election programme, covering 24 typewritten pages, Dr Lissaridhis claimed that Greece, the mainstay of the Cyprus struggle, is underestimated and even insulted, and said that the prestige of the Cyprus Government has fallen internationally. He also accused the government of causing national disunity instead of unity, and attacked the government's economic and social policies.

His main criticism however, was about the handling of the Cyprus national issue and of the intercommunal talks. He called for "conciliation and unity of all patriots" and said his government, if elected, will follow a police of "equality" with all parties without discrimination, and will ensure peoples involvement in the exercise of power.

About the British bases, he said that he would seek that the bases' territories be declared part of the Cyprus Republic and demand their abolition. But in answer to questions, he said that he would not at this stage seek abolition of the treaty of guarantee which includes Turkey, Greece and Britain, though he would seek abolition of the treaty of establishment.

On the question of nationalizations or "socialization of monopolies" as he called them, he included the oil refinery, the underground resources, cement, fertilizers and air transport.

DENKTAS COMMENTS ON CUBA, HONECKER VISIT

TA061223 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Replying to a question on a statement by the Cuban foreign minister during a dinner given in honor of the nonaligned group by Greek Cypriot leader Mr Kiprianou in New York, President Rauf Denktas said that the approach of the Cuban foreign minister to the Cyprus problem was expected. He said that the Cuban foreign minister did not know the facts of the Cyprus problem and was continuing his country's policies. President Denktas stressed that the very presence of Cuba in the nonaligned group was unfortunate for all.

On the question of the projected visit to Cyprus of the East German leader, Mr Honecker, President Denktas said that Mr Honecker was coming to Cyprus to gather information and would undoubtedly want to see the Turkish Cypriots, who are one of the communities living in the island. He stated that if he did not visit northern Cyprus, Mr Honecker would see only the Greek Cypriot side. President Denktas extended an open invitation to Mr Honecker to come to northern Cyprus and see the realities for himself. He said that if Mr Honecker meets the Greek Cypriot displaced persons and the families of the missing persons he should also see the Turkish Cypriot displaced, the families of the Turkish Cypriot missing and visit the mass graves of the Turkish Cypriots massacred by the Greeks. The president added that the Turkish federated state would also formally invite Mr Honecker, and if he did not come, he would see only the Greek Cypriot part of the island and he would not be able to say that he had seen Cyprus and had contacts with the peoples of Cyprus.

[Text] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou today received Syrian Ambassador 'Ali al-Madani, who conveyed to him an invitation from Syrian President Al-Asad to pay an official visit to Damascus. The invitation has been accepted and the date for the Greek prime minister's visit will be fixed through diplomatic channels.

PROCEDURES FOR U.S. BASE NEGOTIATIONS DISCUSSED

The negotiations will begin in the last 10 days of October and will concern the political framework and basic principles governing the new agreement. During the first phase of negotiations, Mr Kapsis will be briefing the prime minister and the foreign minister, as well as the other members appointed to the base talks. In addition to Mr Kapsis, the members of the committee are Air Force General Kouris, chief of the Air Force General Staff; Mr Makhairitsas, director of the prime minister's diplomatic office; Ambassador Zeppos, and Mr Papanikolaou, economic adviser to the prime minister.

When the first phase of the negotiations is concluded, the Government Council on Foreign and Defense Affairs [KISEA] will convene to decide on the proposals. When and if the proposals are approved, the second phase of talks will begin with the participation of all members of the appointed committees. This phase will be more technical and complete.

One of the targets of the first phase of talks will be the codification of all agreements that currently exist on the bases as well as many other [agreements] concerning the facilities enjoyed by the Americans. It should be noted that the written agreements number 108 and, in addition to them, there are also verbal arrangements for facilities. Together, they constitute the complex of the present status of the U.S. bases in Greece.

At 1230 tomorrow, U.S. Ambassador Stearns will visit Deputy Foreign Minister Kapsis to regulate the procedural details and set the date for the opening of the first phase of talks.

POLITIKA THEMATA on Bases

NC021109 Athens POLITIKA THEMATA in Greek 1-7 Oct 82 p 15

["Bases" column: "The Bargaining Begins"]

[Text] While the dossiers, agendas and files on the negotiations for the [U.S.] bases and NATO are being prepared, PRAVDA launched warning shots against the PASOK government. It was on the day on which Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos was to leave for the United States (where he will meet with Mr Shultz, his U.S. counterpart, among others). According to a REUTERS dispatch, PRAVDA (the official CPSU organ) said that "there has been concern" because of the Greek Armed Forces' participation in the military exercises in the eastern Mediterranean, a fact that shows that the government has given in to U.S. pressure. Some circles view the Soviet criticism as an attempt to strengthen Greece's negotiating positions, since its delegates at the negotiations will be able to refer to this criticism in order to ease the burdensome conditions in these agreements.

Finally, it is recalled that the press criticism has coincided with the denial made a few days ago concerning Tikhonov's visit to Athens.

As the opening of the talks on the fate of the U.S. bases in Greece draws closer, the echoing from the popular sloganeering "out with the bases in Greece" becomes more and more distant. Today no one in the government talks about it. The issue being confronted is not the complete suspension of the foreign (American) bases' operation -- this may probably be envisaged in some extreme cases -- but the advantages that may result for national defense, for technological development and for the economy.

The basic negotiating element on which the Greek side will cast its card appears to be the view that the presence of these bases in Greece -- although aggravating the country's position by exposing it to manifold dangers -- does not promote its defense goals, but solely serves U.S. national and strategic interests. This view is also backed by the desire put forward at various times by various Arab states, which view the presence of these bases as a threat directed against them. The case of Libya and the Gulf of Sidra incident and Libya's open statement that "We will turn against the U.S. bases operating in the Mediterranean," with specific reference to Crete, is characteristic of such pressure.

With this general position that the bases do not serve NATO, but only the American interests, the Greek side expects to achieve still greater military aid as well as other military benefits deriving from pending Greek-allied issues connected with the Greek-Turkish dispute and the Turkish challenge over the Aegean. In addition, an impressive increase in the "rent" connected with the degree of broadening the role of the various bases in Greece will be pursued so that a number of urgent military expenditures may be settled.

The discussions about NATO will undoubtedly affect the talks on the bases to a considerable degree. But the latter as well may possibly help the Greek positions toward the alliance. During the dos-des [as receives] game, which gives the appearance of oriental bargaining, the winner is the one who always has both time and the press on his side. Both elements of negotiation favor the Greek views, provided that they are given specific shape and are presented correctly.

KKE DAILY CRITICIZES ADHERENCE TO NATO POLICY

[From the "Radical" column: "Adherence to Atlanticism?"]

[Text] With the recent conference of its member countries' foreign ministers in Canada, NATO has once again proved that it is aggravating international tension and the cold war climate in the world and in Europe in particular. Once more the discussions revolved around new attempts to intensify armaments, economic war and aggressiveness against the USSR and the other socialist countries. The 16 NATO ministers agreed "to strengthen their forces and obligations" toward the "alliance." All this has been agreed unanimously -- that is, including the participation of official Greece, which was represented at the conference by Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos. However, speaking at the "sporting" club last Sunday, Mr Papandreou admitted that "Greece should be liberated from the complex of dependence, as this is principally expressed by our participation in NATO and the presence of foreign bases in the country." This is very correct, but gives rise to the logical question: What is the government doing to rid the country of the complex of dependence? Certainly Greece's already permanent participation in the cold war maneuvers of NATO and endorsement of the warlike communiques of the North Atlantic bloc not only do not help in ridding the country of the chains of dependence but, on the contrary, perpetuate the chains of dependence.

SOVIET DELEGATION ARRIVES TO DELINEATE BORDER

[Text] Ankara, 6 Oct (AA) -- The eighth round of talks of the Turkish-Soviet joint committee on the demarcation of the Turkish-Soviet border on the Arpacay dam and lake, which was jointly constructed by Turkey and the Soviet Union with the equal participation of both countries, will begin in Ankara on 8 October. A Soviet delegation arrived in Ankara today to participate in the Turkish-Soviet joint committee's eighth round of talks.

Work on the redemarcation of the Turkish-Soviet continental border was carried out between 1969 and 1973, and subsequently the Turkish-Soviet sea border and the continental shelf were determined. The final prints of the Turkish and Russian texts, which were prepared according to the comparisons and arrangements made in the documents drawn up during last year's talks, will be checked for the last time during the talks to begin on 8 October. The border documents are expected to be signed in the beginning of November.

With the signing of these documents, all work in connection with the redemarcation of the Turkish-Soviet border will have been concluded.

TURKISH, U.S. BUSINESSMEN MEET IN ISTANBUL

TA061703 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] The meeting between Turkish and U.S. businessmen has ended. Giving information on the results of the meeting, the secretary general of the Turkish Union of Chambers, Mehmet Saglam, said that the meeting prepared the foundation for the development and strengthening of relations between the two countries. Saglam said that U.S. businessmen assessed Turkey as a country in which serious investments can be made with confidence. Noting that a government establishment which encourages investments and insures them against various risks also participated in the meeting, Saglam said that the fact that the same establishment included within its range of encouragement firms that will invest in Turkey strengthened this view. Various economic issues were discussed at the meeting, held with the participation of 60 U.S. and 67 Turkish firms.

HURRIYET: CYPRUS GIVEN GREEK WAR MATERIEL

[Cem Basar report]

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] (HURRIYET) — Greece, which has begun to play a dangerous game, has secretly included Cyprus within its defense borders. "The Government Council of National Defense," which is is composed of Papandreou's close associates, has expedited the work of arming the Greek Cypriots in recent weeks. Papandreou's war council, which is referred to As Kisea for short, is purchasing arms for the Greek Cypriot army to fight the Turks. Papandreou's efforts are financed by the Greek Cypriot church, businessmen and various other sources, including the Greek Treasury. Some of the arms allegedly purchased for the Greek Army are entering Cyprus under the nose of the UN peacekeeping force disguised as "agricultural implements" or "factory materials."

Greece's Socialist Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou is playing his own game by endangering the fate of the Greek Cypriots. Ankara interprets this as a desire on Papandreou's part to hurl Cyprus into a conflict between the south and the north, an adventure which will create problems for Turkey.

Back in 1971, Papandreou wrote articles which advocated "If we manage to turn Cyprus into a Vietnam, we can bring about the collapse of the junta in Greece."

The Turkish intelligence organizations have ascertained that a Greek Cypriot air force squadron has been formed in Greece. Greek Cypriot pilots trained at the Greek Air Force Academy are continually carrying out flying exercises on the Island of Crete with planes provided by Greece. These pilots number 20 to 25, but a new group will begin receiving training in Athens in the next few days. According to news from Athens, "the Greek National Defense Council" is also trying to obtain aircraft for the Greek Cypriot air force. A part of the 100 planes that Greece is obtaining to strengthen its air force will be allocated to the Greek Cypriot air force. These planes will include "Mirage-2000, "Tornado," "F-16" or "F-18." In the meantime, "A-7" air force squadrons of the Greek Air Force based on Crete are being prepared in such a way as to include Cyprus within their defense zone.

The Greek Cypriot officers and noncommissioned officers being trained at the armed forces training centers in Greece have greatly increased in recent months. It is noteworthy that these officers are being trained in the use of antitank weapons such as "Tow" and "Milan." It is also reported that C-130 transport planes are based on Crete to transport mobile detachments to Cyprus when necessary.

It has been established that Papandreou has turned Crete into a base of arms and military activity connected with Cyprus. M-24 and M-47 tanks have been piled up at the Ayios Nikolaos naval base on Crete ready to be dispatched to Cyprus. In the meantime, large quantities of arms and ammunition have been transported to the Greek Cypriot sector since the beginning of the year by the Greek naval force on ships chartered from Greek shipowners. These include unassembled helicopters capable of firing antitank rockets.

CUMHURIYET RAISES DOUBTS OVER DRAFT CONSTITUTION

NC051042 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 1 Oct 82 pp 1, 11

[Editorial by Nadir Nadi: "Anxious Expectation"]

[Excerpts] The camel was asked, "Why is your neck so wry?" To which he replied: "As a matter of fact, what part of my body is straight?" No one can argue that we are not seeing a similarity between this centuries-old popular saying and the draft constitution that has assumed its final form in the Consultative Assembly.

The Turkish Armed Forces, which went into action at the last moment and halted anarchy and stopped the pre-12 September bloody incidents just before a civil war could break out, while achieving successful results, have unfortunately failed to produce the accomplishments we had expected of them as regards leading our country to normal democratic order. What point have we reached today in the efforts of both the chief of General Staff and the forces commanders -- who together formed the National Security Council and the Consultative Assembly, which the National Security Council has called to duty -- to achieve conditions of natural freedom? The structural formation of the Consultative Assembly is a mistake.

Let us not return to the story of the camel's neck, but we would like to say that the draft the Consultative Assembly has referred to the National Security Council, where it will be given its final shape, looks at first glance as if it is designed to normalize the present transitional period or at least to prolong it until 1990. Will the president of the republic be elected simultaneously with the constitution? That is, will the honorable Evren, as the only candidate, become the president of the republic automatically if the constitution submitted to a referendum is approved? The entire press has unanimously stressed the fact that this could not be called [presidential] elections. Moreover, a person placed at the highest position of the state for 7 years will be vested with powers unprecedented in the history of our republic.

This honorable person will have the power to appoint as he wishes all the members of the supreme court of appeal, the general manager of the central bank, the rectors of the universities, the director-general of the Turkish radio and television network, the chief prosecutor of the republic as well as his assistant and many more important high-ranking officials. And yet a president vested with such vast powers will not be held responsible to any constitutional institution. Such powers and even more could be given to an authoritarian head of state during extraordinary periods in order to quell riots and combat anarchy. But this could be valid only for a temporary period. When rebellion and anarchy are suppressed and a return to normal order is secured, the democratic rules should come into operation. The draft constitution which we expect to assume its final shape at the National Security Council is now treating the extraordinary situation as if it was an ordinary one, and we fear that it carries the risk of plunging the state into social unrest and turning it into an administration impossible or difficult to run -- a state whose indivisibility with its country and nation we have always cherished.

We are a people who consider respect for the head of state a national tradition. A president vested with such vast powers but devoid of responsibility will, we fear, shake the initial respectability of the Presidency if the draft is approved by the electorate in its present condition.

The articles that comprise the draft constitution contain innumerable inconsistencies. This draft has failed to satisfy either the majority of the circle of scientists and scholars or the press, the workers' sector or the intellectuals.

If one has to put it briefly, the National Security Council is facing a very difficult task and their moral responsibility is equally heavy.

Our Radio on Constitution

TA061655 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] The Turkish Bar Associations Union has opposed the junta's constitution as a whole and has stated that this draft, which will be a setback to and cause crises in the Turkish community, should be redrafted.

The Turkish Bar Associations Union's General Council ended its 3-day meeting in Ankara on Monday and announced to the public by means of a report its views and proposals concerning the pre-12 September draft constitution. The report, approved by the Union's General Council and submitted to the National Security Council, described the draft constitution as the product of an archaic mentality. The following views appear in the first section of the report:

The Turkish Bar Associations Union believes that this draft constitution, which will greatly affect the future of the Turkish nation and state, entails very detrimental solutions. The union also believes that clearly stating the deviant philosophy on which the draft is based is the inevitable necessity of patriotism and duty.

This draft constitution, which was adopted at the constitution assembly and submitted to the National Security Council, will create lack of confidence among the voters and disrespect for the political maturity of the nation through the solutions it stipulates. This draft disregards all social and legal gains and fundamental rights and liberties and might drag the Turkish community into various crises. Therefore, we believe that the draft constitution should be redrafted.

The report later states the views and proposals determined by the fundamental principles, the fundamental rights and liberties, the legislative, executive and administrative and the judicial committees.

VOTCP Criticism

TA051900 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 5 Oct 82

[Text] The Turkish Bar Associations Union held its General Council meeting in Ankara on Saturday. The Bar Associations Union is continuing its work in the form of committees. The fundamental principles, the fundamental rights and liberties, the legislative, executive and administrative and the judicial committees formed at the General Council meeting, which convened to determine the views and proposals in connection with the junta's constitution, have discussed the 12 September constitution and have prepared their reports.

In an opening speech at the General Council meeting, the president of the Turkish Bar Associations Union, Atilla Sav, said that the draft constitution prepared and adopted at the Consultative Assembly is beneath the current power of the Turkish community and lags behind its political maturity from the viewpoint of its content, structure and language. Noting that the draft symbolizes a very grave setback from the viewpoint of the concepts of democracy and laicism as well as from the viewpoint of its being the constitution of a social state of law, Sav said that it is very difficult to talk about the democratic aspects of such a constitution. Stating that the limitations and [word indistinct] directed against the fundamental liberties and rights in the constitution and aimed at abolishing the essence of the fundamental liberties and rights, Sav added: The fact that the right to kill appears in Article 17, which regulates legislative rights, is a blatant example of the basic concept. The limitations brought to the freedom of the press and the freedom of thought, science and the arts [words indistinct].

The chairman of the Turkish Bar Associations Union General Council meeting and Ankara Bar Association president, Prof Muammer Aksoy, also addressed the meeting. He described the constitution as the product of archaic beliefs. Aksoy made the following interesting comparison: although the Abdul Hamid constitution was retrogressive in comparison to the Western constitution of the period, it constituted a step forward compared to the previous periods. The current draft is not a step forward but, in comparison to the previous constitutions, it has been prepared by a less free mentality. The current draft constitution has emerged as the product of an archaic mentality.

Aksoy also criticized the provisional articles of the draft constitution. Recalling that previously Evren was talking about the election of a president, Aksoy said that now provisional Article 12 of the draft envisages bringing the president to power without elections.

As is known, a day before the Turkish Bar Associations Union meeting, the head of the junta, Evren, speaking in Burdur and Isparta, clearly supported this constitution of dictatorship and said: This is our constitution. Those opposed to our constitution are also opposed to the 12 September operation. We will struggle against those who say no to our constitution. These were the threats made by Evren.

OUR RADIO SCORES FRG'S KOHL ON TURKISH WORKERS

[Text] Dear listeners, the coming to power of the reactionary rightist forces in the FRG has created a very dangerous situation from the viewpoint of the future of the Turkish workers employed in that country and their families. This reality is confirmed by a statement made by the new German chancellor, Kohl, on television in connection with the Turkish workers. This statement shows that Kohl is determined to throw out a significant number of the Turkish workers in that country and force them to return to their country. Kohl also said that measures encouraging the Turkish workers to return to their country will be taken. What do they mean by these so-called measures?

As a first measure, the return of the Turkish workers to their country will (?be secured in exchange for a certain amount of money. If their return is not secured in this manner, then the workers will be forced to leave Federal Germany.

Whatever the methods and means, the government of the reactionary rightist forces in Federal Germany is determined to throw the Turkish workers out of the country. It is clear that the Kohl government is taking advantage of the presence of the military dictatorship in our country in its hostile attitude and actions against the Turkish workers employed in Federal Germany. Kohl and his partners are well aware that the junta officials in Turkey have taken no measures against the Turkish enmity seething in Federal Germany for a long time, that they have contented themselves with mere words and that their major goal is to confiscate the Turkish workers' money. However, Kohl does not want any noise made, even if insubstantial, over the expulsion of Turkish workers from Federal Germany. In order to achieve this, he tells the junta: If you do not voice any opposition to the expulsion of Turkish workers from Federal Germany, I will supply you with arms. Actually, the arms he intends to give Turkey are the old Leopard tanks and the F-104 aircraft discarded by the Federal German Armed Forces. Kohl will thus kill two birds with one stone. In the first place, he will throw out a large number of the Turkish workers employed in the country and, second, by selling the discarded arms of his army to Turkey he will make millions out of the bread of our people.

This is the way the Federal German reactionaryism wishes to realize its policy of Turkish enmity through the help of the military junta which it fully supports.

VOTCP OPPOSES RDF MANEUVERS ON TURKISH SOIL

[Text] The aggressive NATO circles and the Reagan administration are gradually increasing their aggression. They have intensified their efforts to create the misfortunes of war. The aggressive NATO circles and the likes of Reagan are confronting the Soviet Union, the socialist world, countries (?opposed to) war and millions of peace-loving people by developing new methods of aggression daily. Our people are in solidarity with the peace-lovers in this war between the pro-war circles and the peace-lovers.

However, democrats and fighters for peace are currently in jails in our country. A reactionary warmongering junta, following in the footsteps of the U.S. administration and the likes of Reagan, is in power. This junta has not only left economic regulations, which have brought poverty and privation to our people, in the hands of imperialist establishments, but it is also following orders from the United States as regards war provocations. This junta is now seeking ways to more easily fulfill U.S. directives through a constitution. As though sacrificing our soil to the Rapid Deployment Forces [RDF] and granting new possibilities to the United States against our neighbors were not sufficient, now the junta is enabling the U.S. RDF to rehearse future attacks against our neighbors on our soil.

Our people do not want to attack our neighbors with the imperialists. Our people wish to remain friends with their neighbors. They wish to remain friends with our socialist neighbors, the Greek people, the Arab peoples and Iran. What is the RDF doing in our country? American soldiers, your country is far away from our country. Go to your homes. We do not want war rehearsals on our soil.

PAPER VIEWS COLLAPSE OF GOVERNMENT FORMATION BID

[Editorial: "No Time-Wasting"]

[Text] The Van Kemenade government formation attempt has entered its decisive phase. Or, to put it more correctly: It is now about to reach the failure which really had to be expected from the beginning. Whoever still cherished illusions about the possible formation of a cabinet comprising the Labor Party [PvdA], Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] and perhaps also Democrats '66 was able to wave them good-bye at the beginning of last week, when the PvdA Party Executive let party negotiator Den Uyl know clearly and quickly that on the question of the preparations for the deployment of cruise missles on Netherlands territory, only a categorical "No" is possible.

Leaving aside the question of whether Den Uyl would not have done better to leave the creation of room for negotiation within the PvdA to the government formation negotiations leader, on this very important issue a week ago Den Uyl suffered a loss of face and the slim chances of a PvdA leader forming a government were reduced to practically nothing.

The subsequent orchestrated-sounding suggestions from Socialist circles about a possible further postponement of Netherlands decisions were no longer able to prevent this. Such suggestions from a party which took part in the last few years' discussions with a categorical "No" as it position, sound odd, to say the least.

It was also striking that the Netherlands European Parliament chairman -- the Socialist P. Dankert -- also followed the party line in statements made in Washington. In the not so distant past, when Dankert was still moving in the Binnenhof [seat of Netherlands Parliament], his tune was somewhat different.

How slim Van Kemenade's formation chances were in his own view became apparent yesterday when he complained in an open letter to CDA parliamentary party leader Lubbers about what ministers one and two on the CDA electoral list, Ministers Van Agt and De Koning, and CDA Party Executive had said in the way of civilities toward the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy. The correspondence shows already that the search for someone to carry the blame for the government formation negotiations leader's impending failure had begun.

There is a slight fear that the CDA's Second Chamber group will be so mesmerized by this question of guilt that they will struggle with it for longer than necessary. It is to be hoped that they will not do so, that is, that they will quickly reject Van Kemenade's proposals if they do not consider their main points acceptable.

For wasting time in a competition like the present one would definitely be undesirable.

KOHL, GENSCHER VIEW RELATIONS WITH USSR

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl (CDU) and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) have bot given assurances of the predictability and continuity of Bonn's detente policy and Ostpolitik under the Christian Democrat-liberal coalition. In an exchange of views in Bonn today with chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers, Mikhail Solomentsev, Kohl said that on the basis of existing treaties and agreements, the Federal Republic will continue in its relations with the Soviet Union to be a sound, honest and reliable partner whose policy is directed at actively safeguarding peace, genuine detente, dialogue and cooperation.

Solomentsev, candidate member of the CPSU Politiburo, who is visiting the Federal Republic at the invitation of North Rhine-Westphalia Minister-President Johannes Rau, is the first top Soviet politician to be received by Kohl since he became chancellor. Kohl stressed that his government's central task is to safeguard peace in freedom. He expressed concern to his guest at the continuing burden being placed on East-West relations by the situation in Afghanistan and current developments in Poland. He appealed to the Soviet leaders to allow ethnic Germans in the Soviet Union to leave for the Federal Republic if they so desire.

According to government spokesman Lothar Ruehl, the chancellor also stressed the importance of the Geneva disarmament negotiations on medium-range nuclear weapons. He said NATO's dual decision remains a cornerstone of German security policy. Substantive steps by the Soviet Union are necessary in order to achieve specific results of negotiations in time, before the deadline for deployment of new Western medium-range missiles in autumn 1983.

According to the Foreign Ministry, at a lunch with Solomentsev, Genscher stressed the continuity and predictability of the long-term foreign policy with regard to the Soviet Union and the other East bloc states.

Solomentsev Continues Visit

[Text] Bonn, 7 Oct (DPA) Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl received Mikhail Solomentsev, chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers, on Wednesday [as received] for a discussion.

Solomentsev is on a 6-day visit to the Federal Republic. His program also includes talks with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and SPD Chairman Willy Brandt.

Kohl and Solomentsev have known each other since 1975. During a visit to the Soviet Union, Solomentsev was host to the CDU chairman.

GENSCHER CONFIDENT OF SANCTIONS SOLUTION

[Text] Bonn, 7 Oct (DPA) -- There will be no change in Ostpolitik or the policy of detente by the new Christian-liberal coalition in the view of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. "All our partners in the Warsaw Pact" can rely on that, Genscher said on Thursday in an interview with North German Radio (NDR) released by the Foreign Ministry.

Answering the question whether he was expecting some delaying maneuvers from the CSU, Genscher said that he has no reason for such a supposition. The federal chancellor's government declaration to the Bundestag this coming Wednesday will make very clear once again "that we will proceed from a joint basis, and that is the basis of German foreign and security policy which already exists."

On the most recent U.S. sanctions against the German firms AEG and Mannesmann because of the natural gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union, Genscher said that he is confident that within the framework of discussions on an overall Western strategy, these problems can be overcome very quickly. The measures which Washington has set in motion in the last hours is only the "wake" of the measures which have been taken in relation to other states in the Western alliance.

MERTES INTERVIEW ON GAS PIPELINE CONTROVERSY

[Interview with Alois Mertes, minister of state in the Foreign Ministry, by unidentified reporter, date and place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] The new government has hardly been in office 3 days and Washington is continuing its tough course [regarding the natural gas pipeline embargo deal]. Do you feel irritated?

[Answer] No, we expected this reaction. Once the French and British firms which were affected by the extended embargo experienced these measures [imposition of sanctions], we knew that the Americans would treat us the same way. Secretary of Commerce Baldridge added, however, that only equal treatment is involved and not punishment. The fact that we are already discussing with the U.S. Government the whole complex of the natural gas pipeline deal and economic relations with the Soviet Union is much more important.

You mustn't believe that the Europeans and the Americans are drifting apart. We are much rather on the way to an agreement, and anyone who believes that there will be a conflict between the United States and the Europeans over this issue is wrong because European and national interests cannot be separated from general interests.

The Americans as well as the Europeans have made mistakes. In the future we can no longer afford the luxury of separating economic from political issues. This is not a matter of punishing the Soviet Union. What is involved is the development of a Western strategy which will make international relations predictable. It is no good if every time the Soviet Union violates the law, the West stand in disagreement for years over how to react. We need a common and reliable Western strategy, and we are on the way to achieving it. I can tell you with absolute certainty that this is the view of the Federal Government.

ALLIED COMMANDANTS PROTEST EAST BERLIN PARADE

MITTERRAND, TUNISIA'S BOURGUIBA DISCUSS MIDEAST

[Unattributed report: "Mr Bourguiba and Mr Mitterrand Congratulate Each Other on Their Near East Initiatives"]

[Text] [French President] Francois Mitterrand and Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba had a 1-hour private meeting at the Chateau de Rambouillet on Monday, 4 October.

In a statement in which he portrays himself as a "messenger of tolerance and peace," Mr Bourguiba, who is in France on a private visit, said that the conversation related mainly to the Near East and that the two heads of state congratulated each other on "the initiatives taken by France and Tunisia respectively."

The Elysee, for its part, published a message sent by Mr Mitterrand to the president of the Tunisian Republic following the appeal launched on 26 September by Mr Bourguiba for "mutual recognition by Israel and the PLO." "You have once again solemnly rejected the language of violence and arms," the French president wrote in particular. "Your appeal rightly stresses that a lasting peace in the Near East can only be established on the basis of mutual recognition by the parties to the conflict. Rest assured that your message is an encouragement to all those who hope to make progress on the path of justice and peace."

MAUROY WARNS AGAINST DISMANTLING SOLIDARITY

LD072152 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Summary] French Premier Pierre Mauroy addressed the senate today on a number of topics. "The premier issued a warning to Warsaw. According to him, threatening the existence of, or dismantling Solidarity would present a hindrance to French-Polish relations. Poland's troubles can only be solved through a dialogue between the state, the church and Solidarity, he said."

NUCLEAR FORCES TO RECEIVE PRIORITY IN 1983

[Text] Paris, Oct 7 (AFP) -- France plans to give priority to its nuclear forces in 1983, Defense Minister Charles Hernu announced here today.

Mr. Hernu told a news conference that his ministry's global budget next year would amount to 158,886 million francs ($22,700 million) -- an increase of 10 percent over 1982.

Of the total, 31.68 percent of the budget is to be devoted to deployment of nuclear forces, an "absolute priority," he said.

As it did last year, the defense budget amounts to 3,895 percent of the gross national product, Mr. Hernu noted.

Program authorizations for nuclear projects are to be increased by 24.6 percent over 1982, and payment credits (for current year expenses) by 14.4 percent.

New equipment includes 16 M-R missiles carrying six thermonuclear warheads each, and with a range of 4,000 kms (2,500 miles). The increase involved will enable French defense forces to keep three missile-launching nuclear submarines permanently at sea from early next year and to equip the new sub, the Inflexible, beginning in 1985.

Fifteen nuclear Mirage 2,000 fighters will also be financed, Mr. Hernu said. The planes will, beginning in 1988, carry a medium-range air-to-ground missile with a tactical nuclear warhead.

The Army will get a lesser 10.03 percent increase for operating expenses in 1983, while payment credits will grow by only 7.70 percent and program authorizations by 7.91 percent. New equipment to be ordered includes 87 AMX tanks, 225 armored vehicles and 3,000 tactical vehicles.

Air Force operating expenses will increase by 9.95 percent, payment credits by 10.91 percent and program authorizations by 5.62 percent. Combat aviation potential will be maintained through an order for 30 Mirage 2,000 fighters, according to Mr. Hernu.

Navy operating expenses are to be boosted by 10.71 percent, payment credits by 7.06 percent and program authorizations by 9.9 percent. Navy activities are to remain at 1982 levels: 86 days at sea for all ships, 100 days for the combat fleet and 15 hours flight time per month for Navy pilots.

Two anti-aircraft Corvettes are the only new vessels planned, although Mr. Hernu said that previous programs for Corvettes and nuclear submarines would be carried out.

PCF'S MARCHAIS WILL CONTINUE HIS RESPONSIBILITIES

PM061453 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 1 Oct 82 p 3

[Unattributed report: "G. Marchais: A Congress Has Just Been Held"]

[Text] Questioned yesterday morning on leaving the Lariboisiere Hospital, [PCF Secretary General] Georges Marchais said that Prof Robert Slama who had carried out his health check was "very satisfied" and had told him to "continue his responsibilities and tasks" as before.

When a journalist asked him his opinion on the rumors that he was preparing to "abandon his responsibilities," Geroges Marchais replied that those who are waging that campaign "forget that a congress has just taken place" and that it was that congress which elected him to his responsibilities.

"That campaign," Geroges Marchais added, "which is not new but is now being stepped up, can probably be explained by the fact that the adversaries of change, the right and the false left are not satisfied with the activity of the PCF and its leadership alongside the workers and in the majority aimed at achieving progress." The PCF secretary general promised the instigators of that campaign "great disappointment."

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES ROLE IN BEIRUT ARRESTS

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 7 - The Italian Foreign Ministry announced today that neither the Italian troops nor the other contingents in the multinational peacekeeping force participated or contributed to police operations ordered by the Lebanese Government in the Beirut area in the last few days.

In a statement on reports of mass arrests in Beirut, the ministry said the liaison committee of the three nations taking part in the multination force -- United States, France and Italy -- and the Lebanese Government, had asked last Saturday, at an Italian request, for specific guarantees on the police operations and their conduct to avoid tensions.

The statement went on to say that the problem of a large Palestinian community in Lebanon, which in the past had direct agreements with the Lebanese Government, can be resolved only through further negotiations in the same framework.

The statement said that on learning of the first reports of the arrests in the Palestinian camps, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo immediately discussed the matter with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and French Foreign Minister Claude Chevsson at a NATO meeting in Montreal earlier this week.

The issue was also discussed by Colombo on his return from Canada with U.S. Mideast envoy Philip Habib in Rome.

BERLINGUER READS REPORT TO PCI CENTRAL COMMITTEE

LD071748 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0700 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] The Communist Party Central Committee resumes its session today. It was opened yesterday by Enrico Berlinguer's report. Here is a dispatch by Gian Batista Fenu:

The 16th national congress to be held 23-27 February 1983 and the building up of the democratic alternative are the main themes of the discussions. These proposals were made by Enrico Berlinguer on behalf of the directorate to the Central Committee, which has been in session since yesterday in order to summon the national congress. The discussions are meant to develop on the basis of a political document, subject to amendments, which will be elaborated on by an appropriate commission to be appointed today and which will be presented at a new meeting of the Central Committee. This meeting will be held around 10 November before the precongressional discussions start.

Making his report, Berlinguer said it was a starting point for the preparation of the pre-congressional document. The report is divided into ten chapters and mainly deals with the democratic alternative, the policies, the social and political alliances and innovations to the party's action for implementing that deep turning point which the Communist Party advocates in opposition to the system of power established in Italy by the Christian Democrats. This system has continued for many years through various alliances and today through the five party coalition.

Berlinguer insists that the alternative -- and the first people to speak in the discussions ranging from (Capistrana), Lombardo Radice, to Libertini, Roasio and Peggio, did the same -- is now a reality and exists with the indispensable contribution of the Communist Party and the other left wing forces, the Italian Socialist Party in particular, the lay, Catholic and progressive forces.

The tone used by the Communist Party secretary in speaking of the Socialist Party appeared calm but also precise. Confronted by what the Communists regard as the failure of the five-party coalition and the possibility of early political elections -- and consequently of a likely decision tochange the date of the congress -- and also confronted by the role played in that coalition by the Italian Socialist Party, the Communist Party believes that the Socialists are at a crossroads: either continue in the competitive alliance with the Christian Democrats, with all the negative consequences inherent in that, or contribute in a particular and original way to building up the leftwing democratic alternative. The Communist Party believes that the Socialist Party is moving in the direction of the alternative. The Communist Party sees no prospects of cooperation in a government with the Christian Democrat Party. However, there is need to liquidate the attitude within the Communist Party which advocates, almost obsessively, the Communists joining the government. However, one must not exclude the need or the possibility of convergences with Christian Democracy in order to safeguard the democratic regime. For Berlinguer, it is necessary to distinguish between the Christian Democrat question and the Catholic question, a distinction sometimes blurred in the Communist Party, even if one is aware of the strong links between the Christian Democrat currents and the Catholic world. References were also made to foreign policy and to relations between the communist parties of the East and West. The political discussion of the alternative prevailed, however, while Berlinguer underlined that the precongressional debates will have to work out ways and means of developing internal democracy with the firm rejection of factions or organized currents.

POLICE ARREST 30 SUSPECTED NEOFASCISTS

[Text] Rome, Oct 6 (AFP) -- Italian police have arrested about 30 suspected neofascists, including the son of a government official, in a nation-wide operation that also netted documents and weapons, well-informed sources said today. Marco Lombardi, 22, son of a Christian Democratic secretary of state for justice, is among those accused of belonging to the [Lavallini band, one of Italy's most wanted right-wing terrorist organizations. A Turin industrialist, Giuseppe Maggiora, 53, known as the Italian candy king, has also been questioned by legal authorities for having [words indistinct] his villa at Val di Susa, 80 kilometers (50 miles) from the French border, available to terrorists. Mr Maggiora's son was among those arrested.

[Rome ANSA in English at 0850 GMT on 6 October reports that five of the arrests were made in Rome, four in Milan, four in Turin and one in the central city of Perugia. Another terrorist suspect was thought to have been taken into custody in the Sicilian city of Catania. All were charged with subversive association and membership in an armed band. The leading neofascist terrorist suspects captured were identified as Alessandro Scaletti of Rome, 22, and the brothers Massimo and Stefano Procopio,"] [passage indistinct]

INTERIOR MINISTER ROSON ON COUP ATTEMPT

OW071800 Paris AFP in English 1702 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, Oct. 7 (AFP) -- A coup planned for the eve of general elections later this month and uncovered Saturday would have had "truly bloody consequences," Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson said today, as he pledged to get to the bottom of the plot.

Lieutenant-General Jaime Milans del Bosch, a ringleader of the failed February 23, 1981, putsch attempt, was the "apparent instigator" of the new plot, which was "much better prepared" than the first, Mr Roson said. [Paris AFP in English at 1617 GMT on 7 October reports the minister also said a number of civilians appeared to be implicated in the basically military conspiracy, called Opertion Cervantes, which was to unfold on the eve of general elections which the Socialist Party is tipped to win. The plotters were seeking to dissolve political parties and set up a military regime to end democracy, Mr Roson added."]

Unusual troop movements were reported by the Spanish press today in several garrisons close to Gibraltar, Lt. Gen. Milans del Bosch was transferred to an isolated residence in the region Sunday from Madrid.

The daily paper DIARIO 16, citing military sources, said that several regiments had been put on alert "by precaution and for security reasons" and confined to barracks for eight hours yesterday.

The Spanish news agency EUROPE PRESS reported movements and "unusual measures" linked to regiments at Linea de la Concepcion, San Roque and Tarina in the Gibraltar region as well as saying that pro-Milans del Bosch slogans had suddenly appeared on walls in the area.

A Defense Ministry spokesman denied the reports.

The ministry also warned the media against a number of false lists of soldiers allegedly involved in the latest coup bid, saying this might be a propaganda maneuver aimed at stirring up unrest in anticipation of the October 28 elections.

Mr Roson said preparation of the latest coup plot had perhaps begun before that of last year. The investigation would continue until all aspects were cleared up, he stressed. But, he warned, "the matter is a delicate one and must be handled calmly, without haste and by examining each step minutely."

Meanwhile, several city councillors in Algeciras, near Gibraltar, have strongly protested against the living conditions of Lt Gen Milans del Bosch. The house where he was now held -- normally the summer residence of the region's military governor -- was both luxurious and totally devoid of security, the councillors said, urging that he be transferred to a prison where security could be ensured.

Coupists Remanded in Custody

[Text] Examining Judge Colonel Jose Munez Sanchez, military judge in the 1st Military Region, has issued indictments against and remanded in custody the three military officers arrested last Saturday in Madrid for conspiracy to rebellion, according to information given to EUROPEA PRESS late this afternoon by reliable sources. The same sources added that the examining judge decided to issue indictments in view of the fact that there are reasonable indications of criminal conduct by Colonels Munez Gutierrez and Jesus Crespe Cuspinera and Lt Colonel Jose Crespo Cuspinera, the brother of the latter.

The sources told EUROPEA PRESS that the men were remanded in custody because the charge laid against the three officers is that of conspiracy to rebellion, which carries a sentence of more than 6 years. It is expected that the officers will continue to be detained at the military centers where they are at present.

Meanwhile, the lawyers of the three men have told EUROPEA PRESS that they intend to appeal against the examining judge's decision.

Further Details

[Excerpt] Madrid, Oct 7 (AFP) — Sources close to Spanish military justice said that Col Munoz Sanchez's decision to lay charges was based on "the existence of rational proof pointing to misdemeanor." The charge of conspiring with a view to rebellion is punishable by a minimum six-years-and-one-day jail term. The charges were communicated to the officers' lawyers, who are expected to appeal.

Political parties here, currently in the midst of the campaign for the October 28 general elections, have urged for a full-scale inquiry on the plot and the arrest of all those involved. The inquiry, however, carried out jointly by the Defence and Interior Ministries, is likely to be extremely complex.

Documents seized in the homes of the three officers include lists of officers who, depending on their political views, were to be asked either to take part in the coup attempt or were to be neutralised to stop them from countering the military takeover bid.

FIVE GRAPO MEMBERS ARRESTED IN PONTEVEDRA

[Text] Pontevedra, Spain, 6 Oct (EFE) — Spanish security forces arrested five presumed terrorists today in Pontevedra, northwest Spain. The arrestees, a woman and four men, are presumed to be members of the 1 October Antifascist Resistance Group, GRAPO, which made itself known 45 days before the death of Francisco Franco, the previous head of state, by killing three policemen in Madrid. The arrestees' ages range between 25 and 30. It seems that these arrests result from Tuesday's placement of a package bomb near the Pontevedra municipal building. The bomb caused the injury of an 11-year-old boy.

INDONESIA'S SUHARTO ARRIVES FOR 4-DAY VISIT

[Excerpt] Madrid, Oct 7 (AFP) — The Indonesian chief of state, General Suharto, arrived here today for a four-day official visit to Spain aimed at promoting bilateral trade relations. Gen Suharto was greeted on arrival by King Juan Carlos, who visited Indonesia in November 1980. Gen Suharto is scheduled to spend 48 hours in Madrid for talks with the king and with Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo before visiting Granada, in southern Spain, on Saturday and Sunday.

In Madrid, Gen Suharto, who is accompanied by a large delegation, plans to tour the headquarters of the National Industry Institute, the Casa Aeronautical Construction Firm and the Centunion Engineering Company, which recently obtained several large contracts with Indonesia.

The Indonesian leader was expected to sign today a technical cooperation accord, reliable sources said.

Political relations between the two nations are generally considered to be good, although President Suharto's visit brought a protest from Communist members of the Madrid Council, who decided to boycott a reception for him tomorrow hosted by the city.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE VIEWS FRG CHANCELLOR CHANGE

PM070707 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 2 Oct 82 p 8

[Editorial: "A New Chancellor"]

[Text] The West German Bundestag yesterday produced -- after a passionate debate -- the first changeover of chancellors not preceded by an election. Not without reason was it an act which fired minds. The Bundestag dismissed a chancellor who is considered the world over to be Europe's most significant politician. And in his place it appointed a chancellor with limited experience and a limited mandate. But the handover of power was a political necessity. Helmut Schmidt lost his ability to act when he split the Social Democratic-liberal coalition after one year of decline in its government cooperation, and renewal was needed if Germany was once again to have a stable government.

It would have been more clear-cut, if less practical, if the German political parties had accepted Schmidt's challenge to create a new government's political foundation through new elections now. The liberal party, which made the handover possible, was elected to the present Bundestag on the express promise that it would keep Helmut Schmidt in power and prevent Franz-Josef Strauss from taking over. This half-broken promise will be a question to be decided between the party and its voters in the next election, and it could cost it dearly. But by transferring government power from Helmut Schmidt to Helmut Kohl now without new elections, the liberal leader has perhaps done more to ensure stable government power in Germany in the coming years than a flight from responsibility could have done. There is no guarantee that an election this fall would have created a more durable foundation for the formation of a government. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe that an election now would lead to a Bundestag without a majority capable of governing, and this would lead to four unstable years in German politics.

The German voters need a cooling-off period after the last few animated weeks and the new government has allowed itself 5 months before it will call an election. It is still doubtful whether there will be an election in March. The German Constitution does not give the chancellor an automatic right to call elections during the lifetime of a Bundestag if he is still able to govern and it could very well be that Federal President Carstens will reject a request for elections in the spring, so it is possible that Helmut Kohl could continue in office until fall of 1984. It would be in his own interest and in that of the FDP if things turned out this way. Kohl needs more time than a crisis winter to show his ability as chancellor after the many years in opposition. And the FDP will need even longer to overcome its internal divisions and convince the voters that the promise to keep Strauss out of office has been kept. A beginning has been made by the fact that the new government is calling itself a "regierung der mitte" [middle of the road administration] and that Strauss is remaining in Bavaria and keeping well away from Bonn. But more time is needed to subdue the past and ensure a future.

LABOR PARTY CHAIRMAN REVIEWS NATO DUAL DECISION

PM071315 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Oct 82 p 2

[Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland article: "Norway and the NATO Dual Decision" -- words in capitals appeared in italics in original]

[Text] At the joint meeting of the Labor Party's National Executive and its Storting group, 1 October, I also dealt with this central topic in my introductory remarks on the political situation. I reminded the meeting of the two crucial conditions which Norway stressed in 1979, and which were made clear in the foreign minister's report to the Storting that fall: That there should be no automatic deployment, but that the need for new missiles should be evaluated in the light of the concrete results achieved through negotiations and that special importance will be attached to the dominant views in those NATO member nations which will be directly affected by the dual decision.

Just as much importance should be attached to this latter condition today, almost 3 years later.

The analysis and the views presented provided a foundation for broad agreement on a conclusion: It would be a break with our security policy traditions if we were in any way to urge or exert any other form of pressure on other NATO nations, which unlike Norway will be directly affected if deployment is implemented. It is also important that in the present phase of this difficult affair, Norway should adhere firmly tothis attitude. We SHOULD NOT AND WILL NOT APPEAR as some sort of spearhead on this matter.

"It is our decision that we will not have nuclear arms on our soil -- and we have always wished to safeguard detente. This calls for thoughtfulness and caution from Norway. However, we are forced to note that this reflective thoughtfulness -- fully in line with our security policy traditions -- has not yet set its stamp on our new government's treatmentof the affair.

"Several of the countries directly affected have not yet reached decisions, either about deployment on their territory, or on the actual allocation of special funds for NATO's joint budget for the preparations for possible future deployment.

"In the light of this, it would be neither natural nor correct for Norway to lead the way and make specific allocations of earmarked funds.

"It would be reasonable for Norway to here adopt a more wait-and-see attitude, in line with the principles the Norwegian Government used as a basis for its decision to support the 1979 dual decision."

I think that it is right that these main points should emerge clearly, partly because the NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report and several of the press reports and comments, including those in AFTENPOSTEN, contain either a partial or a directly misleading picture of a complicated, but immensely important issue.

The Labor Party has been particularly active on this issue and has stressed in particular the negotiations side of the 1979 dual decision. Our government was also an active advocate within NATO of ensuring that the negotiations were a fully equal part of the decision -- and that the zero-solution -- NO DEPLOYMENT -- was the negotiations' stated target. We were also involved in the decision that a high-level political body should be created to discuss the preparations and thereafter follow the progress of negotiations on a regular basis. We saw this as very important if we, including Norway, were to be able to achieve our clear political goals of reaching the necessary results through negotiations. Norway has a constant responsibility to look at all of the problems in this context. Assertions, including some from the prime minister, that the Labor Party has done a turnabout have no foundation.

When this issue was discussed in the Storting last spring, the Labor Party stressed the conditions which formed the basis of the 1979 dual decision, and emphasized that "We will attach the very greatest importance to assessing whether the preparatory work for possible future deployment could reach such a size or take such a form that it would undermine the negotiations section of the dual decision."

We concluded our remarks by formulating our demands for the government's further work on the matter as follows:

"These deputies have noted that the government will return to the Storting with concrete proposals for the allocation of funds to be included in future draft budgets. These deputies EXPECT that the government will AT THE SAME TIME present its assessment of whether the preparatory work could reach such a size or take such a form that it would undermine the negotiations section of the dual decision."

The Storting and opposition have not been given such an assessment: Not even in the comprehensive Storting report No 101 on security and disarmament, which was published early this summer. The situation in other NATO countries and the internal debate and decision-making processes taking place there are also an important part of such an overall political picture.

A defensible and thoughtful treatment of this issue, in line with our security policy traditions and our clear national interests, requires much more detailed treatment and a much wider perspective than those which the government is now adopting. It also requires a stronger desire, especially on the part of a minority government, to maintain close contacts with Storting.

It is not necessary for Norway in the present phase of this affair, to adopt a position so that we could to some extent be seen as a spearhead or a pressure in relation to more directly affected countries which have still not taken any steps toward making actual earmarked allocations of funds in their parliaments.

In 1979, before giving its support to the final decision taken by NATO, Norway waited until all the countries which in the event, would accept new weapons had reached their decision.

We should continue to follow this line.

There is no reason to describe this -- as has been done -- as some sort of break with Norwegian security policy and in our attitude to NATO membership. On the contrary, it might be that our choice of such a cautious line is most in accord with Norway's security policy traditions and position.

IRANIAN ENVOY REQUESTS, RECEIVES ASYLUM

[Text] Oslo, Oct 7 (AFP) -- The Iranian charge d'affaires in Oslo, Parvi Khazai, has asked for political asylum in Norway, it was announced here today.

Mr Khazai asked for Norwegian protection against the Iranian Government, which he described as "inhuman and medieval."

He said he hoped to join the leftist Mojahedin movement headed by Mas'ud Rajavi, who lives in exile in France, and the "National Council of the Iranian Opposition."

Mr Khazai charged that 20,000 people had been executed in Iran after summary trials and 50,000 people, including many children, had been imprisoned since Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni came to power.

He termed the Iran-Iraq war as "senseless" and said it had cost the lives of 200,000 people.

Norwegian Foreign Ministry spokesman Greir Grung said later that asylum would be granted to Mr Khazai.

Norway has in the past condemned human rights violations in Iran.

Meanwhile, the Norwegian news agency NTB said that MR Khazai's successor had already arrived in Oslo, but the Foreign Ministry said it was not aware of this.

SWEDEN

SEARCH FOR 'SUBMERGED OBJECT' CONTINUES

[Text] Stockholm, Oct 8 AFP -- The Swedish Navy dropped new depth charges near its top-secret Muskoe base early today in a new bid to flush out a suspected spy submarine, hours before newly elected Olof Palme was to take office.

Officials said the attack, following the dropping of two batches of four depth charges yesterday, indicated searchers were closing in on their target. A full-scale national alert began a week ago after a periscope sighting was reported.

But officials also warned that if a foreign vessel were forced to surface, Mr Palme, a Social Democrat returning to power after elections last month, could face an unusually delicate international situation.

Sweden has been highly sensitive to the possibility of foreign submarine intrusions in its waters since a Soviet Whiske-137 submarine ran aground near its Karlskrona base in the Baltic last October.

There was new speculation today that the latest "intruder," officially called a "submerged object", may have been approaches by one or even two submarines in a diversionary tactic. But officials refused to comment.

According to unconfirmed reports, it was also thought the suspected spy submarine, and one of the newcomers, may have tried and failed to force a way through metal barriers shielding part of the waters near the base.

The official general staff spokesman, Lieutenant Colonel Evert Dahlen, said early today that the overnight depth charging indicated the search was narrowing. "We are aiming nearer," he said.

He refused to indicate the total or strength of the new charges. Yesterday's charges included some of 100 kilos (220 lbs).

Swedish Armed Forces, on full alert along the entire coast with all weekend leave cancelled, were thought to have prepared for a possible emergency surfacing of the vessel, whose crew were assumed to be suffering from shock.

An internment centre was also reported to have been prepared for any crew rescued in this way, and hospitals alerted to prepare for possible injured seamen.

The massive sea and air search was being followed from a specially installed press centre near the base.

The chief of the general staff, Admiral Bror Stefenson, warned during the night that the "intruder" could in fact escape, as it was never certain that the metal barriers had completely sealed off the region close to the capital.

But time was on the side of the Swedish defences, he added.

According to the Stockholm daily, DAGENS NYHETER today, submarines operating off the Swedish coast could be looking for possible sites from which intermediate nuclear missiles could be fired in an international conflict.

The Swedish coastal area offered possibilities for Warsaw Pact forces to aim at southern Norway, and to NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organisation) forces to aim at Soviet and Polish naval bases, a military commentator suggested.

Foreign Minister on Search

LD071628 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] [Question] Is the submarine search a mere fabrication, Ola Ullsten?

[Answer] No, naturally it is not so. What is concerned here is that we have very many signs to the effect that there may be a submarine in Haarsfjaerden, and thus it is our duty to try to force this submarine to surface. And we shall pursue this goal until we either have it on the surface, or in the worst event, it has managed to disappear, or we can confirm there was nothing there. But such speculations that it is a bluff are built on [word indistinct] theory which is totally unrealistic in Swedish conditions in any case.

[Question] But the fact that TASS, the official Soviet news agency, spreads such comments, could this not show that the Soviet side means to say this is not a Soviet submarine, that it must be some other country's submarine?

[Answer] This is not a denial in itself. But, above all, we can say it is a press comment which TASS has published.

[Question] But it is an official comment.

[Answer] (?This is like) a press statement in Sweden and in other countries; it is not a government statement, nor is it a statement addressed to the Swedish Government.

[Question] What are our political relations like with the Soviet Union since last year's submarine incident?

[Answer] It is clear that if we obtain proof that a foreign power, in this case the Soviet Union, is spying on Swedish territory -- and it was obvious that this was the purpose in the Blekinge Archipelago incident one year ago — then we must protest strongly, and it is clear that this will worsen relations with the country concerned.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET ON NEED FOR 'STRONG DEFENSE'

PM071353 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 4 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "To the Defense Minister"]

[Text] Defense staff spokesman Maj Borje Johansson has confirmed that a foreign submarine is once again being hunted with depth charges in the Stockholm Archipelago: this time in the Muskoe area. It would seem that the hunt has been going on for several days.

Now that less information is being released to the public in order not to make it easy for foreign powers to build up a picture of our defense capacity and methods, the Swedish people are also finding it more difficult to form a picture of how the defense forces operate. Nevertheless, one thing is clear -- our ability to keep a foreign power at a distance has been called into question abroad. That is why the submarines are here.

The latest submarine is not a moderate coalition party invention. The election campaign is over, but the moderates' warnings of insufficient defense capacity remain. When moderate leader Adelsohn raised the alarm about shortcomings in our defenses against submarines, he was mocked for Soviet hysteria. The Center Party leader sang with a shaky voice a Solomon's Song of indignation over the fact that the moderates had been relying on information from the defense minister. Such words will now be seen in their correct light.

The new defense minister, Borje Andersson, has announced that he is ignorant of defense issues. He would do well to learn a first-hand lesson by listening to the message Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung delivered in the "Focus" column in Sunday's SVENSKA DAGBLADET. In it the commander states that Sweden is being drawn increasingly into the superpowers' sphere of interest. The repeated and serious violations are not only violations of Swedish territory; they must also be seen as preparations for action against Sweden in the event of a war situation, the commander in chief wrote.

Some foreign power or powers -- it does not matter which -- are playing games with us at present. In such a situation our leading politicians should make it clear that the Swedish people will not tolerate such treatment. They should also refrain from speaking of insufficient knowledge of defense issues or of the need to take money from military defense [to be used in civilian defense]. A strong defense force is the foundation of our nonaligned foreign policy.

Laments Navy's Decline

[Editorial: "In Peril On the Sea"]

[Text] When the nuclear-armed Russian submarine was aground outside Karlskrona last year, Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Leif Leifland was rightly worried by the somewhat thin presence the Swedish Navy was able to produce -- one or other of its surveillance vessels. For his part Leifland would have preferred to see a number of frigates and destroyers.

The reason why the under secretary's justifiable wishes could not be fulfilled is quite simply that the vessels he called for no longer exist. In a sad announcement from the Defense Materiel Admnistration we can read the following under the headline "Vessels Scrapped":

"The destroyers Ostergotland, Sodermanland, and Gastrikland, the frigates Visby and Sundsvall, motor torpedo boats T49 and T52, and submarines Draken and Gripen, the mine vessel Alvsnabben and the picket boats Hano and Uto are remoed from service as of 1982-07-01."

Recently the newspapers were able to report that the last remaining destroyer, Halland, is to be withdrawn from service after making an important contribution to the Sydfront exercise; after a few years in mothballs in Karlskrona, it will be turned into scrap.

The significance of this cannot be argued away, either for Swedish public opinion or opinion abroad. Our Navy is losing yet another weapons system of considerable strength and importance, a system which will not be, which is not even planned to be replaced. Beginning now, the commander in chief has at his disposal no ships suited to providing the shipping protection which has long been considered to be an essential task for our defense forces in a war; nor is he able to produce an emphatic demonstration of strength in peacetime of the type the under scretary was right to call for.

The official reasons for the fairly undisturbed rundown of our naval defenses is the principle of "the light fleet." As a principle, it is simple and correct enough -- dividing the resources between a larger number of smaller vessels instead of between a smaller number of heavier vessels. Not putting too many eggs in one basket, in other words. Unfortunately, this clever rule has one serious limitation -- frigates and destroyers have actually undertaken tasks which carnot immediately easily be taken over by patrol boats or missile boats, no matter how excellent and necessary these are.

What is even more important is that the fundamental principle of the light fleet -- "more [word in original in italics] lighter vessels -- has not actually been applied. Undeniably, vessels have become smaller, but there are also fewer of them.

The embarrassing submarine incidents in the last few months should by this time have been a sufficiently emphatic lesson for the Swedish people that the Naval rundown has now passed the point at which the Navy's men, despite all their efficient and dutiful endeavors can no longer actually perform the tasks given to them, simply because they have not been given the tools which these tasks unavoidably require.

This circumstance is deeply worrying for Sweden. In the international context it seems almost lunatic. If anything emerges clearly and unambiguously from the last decade's military developments, it is the growing importance the West and especially the East are attaching to naval forces. Sweden -- in military-geographical terms almost an island, as former Navy chief Bengt Lundvall pointed out -- should not strictly need any pointers from outside to understand that.

KIPRIANOU ADDRESSES UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

NC072222 Nicosia Domestic Service in English 1452 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Speech delivered by Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou before the UN General Assembly in New York on 7 October -- live]

[Excerpts] Mr President: At the outset, I would like to warmly congratulate you on your election to the high post of president of the 37th session of the General Assembly and to assure you of our full cooperation and support. Having known you personally for a long time and being in a position to appreciate your outstanding qualities, I am confident that under your most able leadership, the Assembly will conduct fruitful deliberations and will successfully pursue the many important issues which are pending before it. In paying a well deserved tribute to you on this occasion, I recall the excellent relations we maintain with your country, Hungary.

At the same time, I would like to express our sincere feelings of appreciation to your predecessor, Ambassador Kittani of Iraq, for the exemplary way in which he presided over the deliberations of the 36th session of the General Assembly and the intervening, resumed and special sessions.

We are in the midst of such a depressing deterioration of the world political and economic situation that the possibility of general conflagration looms menacingly on the horizon. Detente is not nowadays a feature in the international situation. It is the opposite that prevails. We are living in a world characterized by continuous insecurity and crises, where the use of force is the order of the day. And what is even worse is that aggression, the violation of human rights and terrorism remain unpunished and unremedied because of the failure of the members of the United Nations to give the Security Council the necessary means for the enforcement of its resolutions. The failure of the United Nations to effectively deal with world problems causes a serious crisis of confidence which erodes the very usefulness of the organization.

The above crisis of confidence was recently further accentuated by the failure of the second special session devoted to disarmament to call a halt to the ever-escalating arms race and to conform to the directives of the final document of the first special session for the creation of an effective collective international security system concurrently with disarmament. The final document is emphatic and clear in asserting that genuine and lasting peace can only be created through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the UN Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces.

The nuclear arms control talks between the two superpowers, which were resumed last week in Geneva following their 2-month summer recess, justifiably attract the attention of all peoples in all continents, for upon their outcome lies to a considerable extent the so-much desired return to detente and, consequently, to the securing of conditions for the peaceful solution of international problems. Their success would be a major contribution to peace; that is why Cyprus joins all peace-loving countries in urging that utmost effort be exerted for their success.

Mr President, the present bleak picture dictates that the state of world affairs cannot and should not remain unchecked. It has consistently been the position of Cyprus that the Security Council be given the means for enforcement action for the maintenance of peace and security through the availability of a United Nations force as called for in Article 43 of the Charter. Such development would act as a catalyst [as heard] to the arms race and would make the decisions of the United Nations binding in a real sense. We have maintained all along that we should concentrate not merely on the adoption of resolutions and declarations, but also -- which is certainly more important -- on their implementation.

This is an absolute necessity if the United Nations is to perform the task entrusted to it by humanity. Let us listen to the voice of our distinquished secretary general and commence without further delay the process toward remedying the situation. If we fail to do so, we will not be doing our duty and the very future of the United Nations will be at stake, with the net result that anarchy and chaos will continue increasingly to prevail in the world instead of the rule of law and the principles of the Charter.

Recent debates on the question of Palestine and Lebanon brought to the foreground and demonstrated, in a crude and tragic way, the inability of this organisation to fulfill its paramount responsibility of maintaining international peace and security. Ten Security Council resolutions went unheeded whilst the tragic siege of Beirut and the indiscriminate bombing and shelling were going on. The world organisation stood literally helpless when the Palestinians were targeted for extinction.

Mr President, in expressing my deep concern in this respect, I made a proposal in the past for the convening of a special sesion of the General Assembly to deal with the question of the implementation of the United Nations resolutions. Developments since then, as boldly and clearly elaborated upon in the report of the secretary general, have strengthened my conviction that it is imperative that the General Assembly, as a matter of urgency, consider in depth this question with the aim of producing definite and positive results. While repeating my proposal for a special session, for which consultations may commence, I today propose the inscription on the agenda of this current session of a special item entitled "Implementation of the United Nations Resolutions," and have instructed the delegation of Cyprus to immediately enter into appropriate consultations in this respect. I urge the General Assembly to accept the inscription of this item and to attach to it the importance it deserves. I am confident that a full and constructive debate on this item will have the result of setting in motion the proper process toward finding the right answer to this extremely serious and outstandingly significant issue.

Equally, I wish to stress the significance of the continuation of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the application of all the principles and provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, to which Cyprus reaffirms it commitment. Together with the other neutral and nonaligned countries of Europe, we are doing our utmost for the success of the follow-up conference to be reconvened in Madrid in November, which will substantively contribute to genuine detente in Europe and enhance the prospects of peace throughout the world.

Mr President, the Middle East crisis continues, confounded and bedevilled as never before, and it will not be solved without the withdrawal of Israel from all terrories it has occupied since 1967 and without the solution of the Palestinian question with the participation, on an equal footing, of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. We hold the view that the Middle East problem is one of the most serious problems facing the world today threatening international peace, at the core of which is the Palestinian question. The inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to dignity and freedom must be recognized, and the aspirations of the Palestinians for the creation of an independent and sovereign Palestinian state must be realized.

This has been our consistent and principled position on the Middle East, and we shall keep striving within the context of the United Nations, along with the other members of the Nonaligned Movement, to contribute to a just and lasting solution of this problem. It is in line with the is brotherly solidarity with the peoples of Palestine, Lebanon and Syria and the Nonaligned Movement that we hosted recently in Cyprus the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the nonaligned countries on the question of Palestine.

In the same spirit, Cyprus participated in the ministerial committee framed at the above meeting, which had a number of constructive contracts aiming at the promotion of the rights of the people of Palestine.

We reaffirm our full support for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of the much-tormented Lebanon. The abhorrent massacre of Palestinian civilians, women and children has appalled and brought unparalleled shock to our people and has underlined the need for effective measures for the protection of all the population in Lebanon.

The war between Iran and Iraq continues unabated, causing much loss of life and property to two member states of the Nonaligned Movement. This is another tragic example of the inability of the world organization to meet its primary objectives of maintaining peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes between states.

Mr President, there is hardly any other issue in international relations in regard to which the world community has been able to arrive at a higher level of understanding and agreement than the imperative need for the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination and, in particular, of its worst manifestation, namely, the odious doctrine of apartheid. And yet this abhorrent doctrine is still alive and so are other practices of racial discrimination, emanating either from internal oppression or from foreign aggressive designs. South Africa, most notably, persists in its defiant attitude toward the United Nations by flouting and ignoring the decisions of this organization, by denying every single tenet embodied in the Charter and by failing to respect the basic principles of equal rights of individuals and self-determination of peoples without distinction as to race, religion or sex.

I wish to reiterate once again our solidarity with the people of South Africa, and indeed, all oppressed peoples under colonialist regimes and foreign domination who continue to struggle for their freedom, equality and justice. We also reiterate our wholehearted support for the people of Namibia and express our conviction that their just struggle will succeed. To this end, it is necessary that Resolution 435 (1978) be strictly and urgently implemented as a whole to enable the people of Namibia to take their rightful place as an independent state. We also again voice our solidarity with the frontline states in southern Africa and condemn South Africa's acts of aggression against those countries, which are shouldering a major part of the struggle for the eradication of the evil of apartheid.

Despite the formidable achievements and the concerted efforts continuously exerted for decolonization, there are still territories under colonial or neo-colonial rule. I take this opportunity to declare once again that Cyprus fully supports all the efforts of the United Nations for the eradication of the last vestiges of colonialism in various parts of the world as well as for the adoption of measures aimed against the revival of colonialism. In the above context, I would mention the case of the Western Sahara, where the principle of self-determination has not yet been applied. Contrary to the numerous General Assembly resolutions on this subject, the Saharawi people have not yet been allowed to exercise their inalienable rights.

Mr President, the problem of Cyprus continues to be one of the most serious international problems threatening peace and security in the sensitive area of the eastern Mediterranean. This situation is yet another example of the inability of the United Nations to act by implementing its own resolutions. Eight years have elapsed since the Turkish troops invaded Cyprus and occupied more than 36 percent of its territory. Eight years of agony after the devastation and pillage. All human rights have been and continue to be violated by Turkey. Eight years of crude act of occupation.

Cyprus has come through many tribulations throughout her proud 7,000-year history, but it has never experienced such a sinister operation -- an operation whereby the occupation is coupled with the systematic attempt to change the demographic character of the occupied sector; an operation whereby the indigenous population of the occupied territory was savagely ousted from its birthplace. A birthplace does not belong to any given generation of people. It is perennial in character, it belongs to history. So the aggression of Turkey against Cyprus is not only a present-day violation of sovereignty and territorial integrity, it is also a sacriligious trespass on one of the oldest recorded histories of the world.

The Turkish aggression and occupation brought upon Cyprus many scars which cannot be healed as long as the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity persists, as long as the Turkish Army of occupation is on our territory. Eight years have elapsed and we are still trying to trace the fate of more than 1,600 persons missing since the invading forces set foot on Cyprus. In spite of unlagging efforts, in spite of a number of resolutions adopted by this Assembly, no progress has been made on this purely humanitarian issue. We call upon the international community to make its voice heard clearer and louder in Ankara so that a workable arrangement may be achieved to trace the fate of the missing persons in a proper manner.

Mr President, I stand before this rostrum once again to convey to you the protest of the people of Cyprus at the continued Turkish occupation and, in general, at the contemptuous way which Turkey has been treating the resolutions of the United Nations on the question of Cyprus, and to reiterate our demands for their strict and full implementation. The words of the secretary general in his report, which still reverberate in this hall, are really scathing and severely censorious of those who failed to comply with the United Nations resolutions against those who try to win an international objective by force.

The facts with regard to the Cyprus problem are well-known to this Assembly. Although we are victims of aggression and occupation, we have mustered all our good will in the quest for a lasting solution and permanent peace. The international talks, which have been going on in Cyprus for a long time, have produced no results of any substance due to the intransigent and negative attitude of Turkey. It is incumbent upon the international community, and particularly those who possess the necessary influence, to make Turkey remove its forces of occupation, abandon its sinister designs against Cyprus and fully comply with the resolutions of the United Nations.

Together with my assurance that we shall continue on our part to strive hard for a peaceful solution in conformity with the resolutions of the United Nations, I must categorically state once again that under no circumstances shall we accept the results of the crime committed against Cyprus or any solution which directly or indirectly might lead to the division and partition of Cyprus or which may amount to abandonment of the inherent rights of the people of Cyprus, such as the right of the refugees to return to their homes and properties. We envisage a completely independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, united, demilitarized and nonaligned Republic of Cyprus in which all the citizens, whether Greek Cypriot or Turkish Cypriot, Maronite, Armenian or Latin, will be able to fully enjoy their human rights and fundamental freedoms and cooperate for a happy and prosperous future in peace and freedom for generations to come. Our aspiration is to turn Cyprus from a place of conflict into a place of peace, something which would be a significant contribution to the cause of international peace and security. We aspire to turn Cyprus into a bridge of understanding and cooperation between three continents. I have no doubt whatsoever that if foreign intervention and interference cease and the unity of the country and the people are restored, there would be no problem which could not be overcome.

In the genuine desire to ensure lasting peace in our much-tormented country, some time ago I put forward the proposal for the total demilitarization and disarmament of Cyprus. I declare that we would be prepared to agree to the stationing in the Republic of Cyprus, for as long as necessary, of an international United Nations police force which would supervise a united Greek Cypriot-Turkish Cypriot police force composed in accordance with the population ratio. I reiterate once again my proposal. The Greek prime minister, Mr Papandreou, offered to withdraw from Cyprus the small Greek contingent stationed under the 1960 agreements, provided, of course, that all the Turkish troops are withdrawn, in which case Greece would be prepared to pay for the additional expenses for an increased international force of the United Nations. We support this generous proposal of the Greek prime minister which was set out before this assembly again a few days ago in the statement of the foreign minister of Greece.

Mr President, the time has truly come for the international community to act resolutely in order to give effect to its verdict in regard to Cyprus. This unacceptable situation cannot go on indefinitely. It is because of the lack of any progress toward a solution of the Cyprus problem and because of Turkey's continuous disregard of the United Nations resolutions that we have asked for a new debate on Cyprus by the General Assembly in an effort to employ ways and means and take any steps and measures necessary to promote the implementation of the UN resolutions. I call upon this assembly to act effectively so that a potential source of danger can be removed in the interests of peace and international security and for the sake of the most sacred principles that the United Nations stand for.

Mr President, I fervently hope that mankind will come to its senses before it is too late; before the international anarchy to which the secretary general referred becomes a way of life on this planet with all the grave implications this would entail for the very survival of humanity. We trust that, under the guidance of the UN leadership, a new mentality will prevail and that, with the full support and cooperation of each and every member state, a new era will dawn, not of anarchy and conflict, but of peace, justice and international legal order in accordance with the principles of the United Nations. To this noble objective we, on our part, pledge our dedication and full support.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTER RETURNS FROM EGYPT VISIT

[Excerpt] Communications and Works Minister Khristos Mavrellis has returned from a visit to Kenya and Egypt from 26 September to 3 October. During his visit, he was accompanied by Mr Yeoryios Khatzianastasiou, director general of his ministry, and by Mr Royiros Mikhailidhis, telecommunications officer.

On his trip back from Kenya, the communications and works minister stopped over at Cairo together with the director general of his ministry and met with Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali with whom he discussed in detail and in a cordial atmosphere questions referring to the relations between the two countries.

Mr Mavrellis also met with Egyptian Minister of Tourism and Civil Aviation Isma'il, with whom he discussed questions of competency. They settled some pending issues that refer to air links between the two countries.

DENKTAS SAYS ARMS IN SOUTH DETRIMENTAL TO CYPRUS

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the concentration of deadly arms in southern Cyprus cannot be tolerated forever. Replying to reporters' questions in connection with Greek Cypriot press reports on the Turkish peace forces being reinforced with new arms and on an arms concentration in the north, Denktas recalled that since 1955 the Greek Cypriots have been spreading such rumors in a bid to conceal their own efforts at armament. Denktas pointed out that the Greek Cypriots have now begun spreading lies in connection with the Turkish Cypriots in a bid to diffuse the unpleasant atmosphere created by the arms they displayed on 1 October and to reduce the negative effects of a show which proved their bad intentions. He added: We are very closely following what they are doing and intend to do behind this screen they have created through these false reports.

Recalling in a statement made by the PEO secretary general to the effect that Cyprus can become another Lebanon and that the Greek Cypriots can be massacred by the Turkish Cypriots, Denktas said that this statement can be assessed as an effort to conceal their own goals.

Denktas noted that the arms concentration in the south will be of no help to the Greek Cypriots but that, on the contrary, it will be detrimental to the whole of the island. He added: The concentration of deadly arms in the south cannot be tolerated forever.

FOREIGN MINISTER SAID TO RESUBMIT RESIGNATION

NC071926 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 7 Oct 82 pp 1, 9

According to the same information, Mr Kharalambopoulos declared that his faith in the person of the prime minister and his devotion to the party are well known and that their personal relations will not be affected.

Fearing the dangerous consequences that the announcement of Mr Kharalambopoulos' resignation might have for his party -- at a time when PASOK is being rocked by conflicting factions and the repercussions on the deputies from the abolition of the cross of preference -- Mr Papandreou recommended that the foreign minister temporarily remain in his ministry and that his case will definitely be dealt with following the municipal elections.

Mr Kharalamopoulos' reaction to Mr Papandreou's recommendation is not known. In any case, however, it does not seem possible that he would refuse to respond to the prime minister's request so that he will not become involved in the crisis facing PASOK and be accused by the intransigents in the Executive Bureau, who are plotting against him, of betraying the change.

As is known, according to an exclusive report by AKROPOLIS, some days ago Mr Kharalambopoulos verbally submitted his resignation at Kastri and stopped going to his office under the pretext of recuperating from influenza.

This was so because he had been deprived of almost all of his responsibilities concerning the handling of political affairs, to which Mr Kapsis had been promoted, as is exemplified in the case of his undertaking the negotiations for the "moratorium." Mr Kharalambopoulos has also been deprived of his responsibilities in handling Common Market affairs, the responsibility of which had been exclusively undertaken by the other deputy minister, Mr Varfis.

However, the fact that Mr Kharalambopoulos' scheduled meetings with Mr Shultz and Mr Turkmen were forthcoming and in order not to give the impression that the Greek foreign minister was leaving his ministry because of disagreements with the prime minister over matters pertaining to the framework of his talks with his foreign counterparts, it was persistently suggested to him that he remain in his position at least for as long as was required for those meetings.

START OF U.S. BASE NEGOTIATIONS SET FOR 27 OCT

[Text] The negotiations on the U.S. bases in Greece will begin on 27 October. This date was fixed this morning during the meeting held between Deputy Foreign Minister Ioannis Kapsis and U.S. Ambassador Monteagle Stearns.

Spokesman on Base Talks

[Excerpts] A time schedule for the removal of the U.S. bases will be discussed during the negotiations that will open in the last 10 days of October and a time limit will be set, at the end of which, if no agreement is reached between the Greek and U.S. Governments, the status of the bases now in force will be terminated. The government spokesman referred to recent statements by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou -- who also touched on this issue in his speech on Saturday at the "sporting" club -- after the announcement of yesterday's meeting between U.S. Ambassador Monteagle Stearns and the Greek prime minister at Kastri.

Answering questions from newsmen, the government spokesman said:

Certainly, the time schedule for the removal of the bases to which Prime Minister Andreas Papandeou referred last Saturday will be a subject of the negotiations. Mr Papandreou has stated: "The negotiations, which will begin at the end of October, concern the time schedule for their removal and the duration of their presence, the safeguarding of our national security and the highest possible degree of control of the bases activities."

Mr Stearns will not participate in the negotiations.

None of the Greek demands related to the regulation of Greek-U.S. relations have been settled.

KLIRIDHIS LEAVES FOR LONDON AFTER ATHENS TALKS

NC071752 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 7 Oct 82 p 12

RIZOSPASTIS Denounces Kliridhis

[From the "Radical" column: "Imperialism's Mouthpiece"]

[Text] Great publicity was given to the visit and talks extreme rightest Cypriot politician Kliridhis held in Athens. And it is clearly understood from the government spokesman's statement that the protector of the coupists in Cyprus did not leave Athens "empty handed," because his proposal for the convening of a "pan-national conference" was not rejected by the Greek Government. With his proposal, Kliridhis seeks to downgrade the basis of the Cypriot state and especially wants to prove that the Cypriot Government is allegedly not handling the Cyprus problem correctly and is following the "wrong course!" Consequently, according to extreme rightist Kliridhis, a "pan-national conference" should be convened in Athens to "chart the correct policy" for the Cyprus problem. The role Kliridhis has played and is continuing to play in Cyprus is very well known. It is a disastrous role that facilitated the plans of the coup for Makarios' overthrow and the Turkish invasion. Currently, his party shelters accountable coupists and he has become the main lever for the imposition of a U.S.-NATO solution of the Cyprus problem, a solution that aims at abolishing the Cypriot Republic and transforming the island into a U.S.-NATO bridgehead. As the government spokesman in Nicosia has charged, Kliridhis is implementing the same undermining tactics to which the Ioannidhis junta and fascist Sampson resorted to overthrow Makarios. After all this, the question that easily arises is: What positive thing for the Cyprus issue can emerge from the government's consultations with Kliridhis?

MARITIME TALKS WITH SOVIET DELEGATION CONCLUDE

[Text] The fourth session of the mixed Greek-Soviet maritime committee concluded its work today. The session discussed various maritime problems as well as the progress made in maritime relations between the two countries. Proposals were also made for the further strengthening of Greek-Soviet relations in this field. The secretary general of the merchant marine and the deputy minister of maritime fleet of the Soviet Union, who were the heads of the two delegations, signed a protocol on the last day of the session.

DEMONSTRATION AGAINST GREEKS' PLIGHT IN ALBANIA

[Text] About 2,000 demonstrators marched on the Albanian embassy on Wednesday to protest the plight of ethnic Greeks in Albania.

Spokesman for the organizers, the Student Committee for Solidarity with Greeks in Northern Ipiros, said that "persecutions of Greeks residing there have increased" following recent reports from Tirana on an alleged landing in Albania.

The official Albanian news agency reported last month that a "gang of criminals" landed in eastern Albania but were "totally wiped out" five hours later.

Former Greek residents of northern Ipiros, an area in southern Albania, claim the region should be restored to Greece. Greek organizations here claim that 400,000 Greek-origin residents of the area are suffering persecution ranging from deprivation of ethnic rights to imprisonment.

The spokesman said that a protest, calling for the release of 25,000 Greek political detainees, and the re-opening of Greek schools and orthodox churches, was posted on the embassy's door when Albanian officials refused to accept it.

The demonstrators were carrying banners reading "Hands off the Greeks" and "No to a new genocide."

Police said the demonstrators dispersed peacefully.

PAPANDREOU INSPECTS ARMY UNITS AT KOZANI 8 OCT

NC081220 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1200 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Andreas Papandreou visited this morning the 1st Army Corps headquarters at Kozani, within the framework of his closer contacts with armed forces. Mr Papandreou traveled from Athens to Larisa on board a transport plane and from Larisa to Kozani by helicopter and car because of bad weather conditions in the Kozani airport area. The prime minister was accompanied by Deputy National Defense Minister Dhrosoyiannis, General Army Staff Chief Lt Gen Panagopoulos, and 1st Army Commander Lt Gen Kourkafas. The prime minister attended a briefing at 1st Army Corps headquarters with the participation of staff officers. He addressed a gathering of officers and attended a luncheon given in his honor by Lt Gen Kasapidhis, 1st Army Corps commander.

In a statement to newsmen, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou expressed pleasure over visiting Kozani and promised government support in overcoming the problems of the city and the province.

Ulusu Returns

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, who concluded his 4-day official visit to Tunisia, along with the delegation accompanying him, has returned to Ankara. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure for Ankara, Ulusu said that provided the parties are willing, the Islamic countries have common points whose power might greatly contribute to establishing peace and stability in the Middle East and Mediterranean regions.

Ulusu said: The visit for the first time of a Turkish prime minister accompanied by two of his ministers to Tunisia has been received with satisfaction and happiness by the brotherly Tunisians. In my talks with the government officials of Tunisia, with whom we share a common culture and history, I saw that we have similar expectations regarding world peace and the happy future of our nations. As you know, Turkey has for a long time taken care to maintain good relations with its neighbors and the Islamic countries. The fact that on the one hand we are a member of the North Atlantic alliance, and on the other, we are a member of the Islamic community, has not only increased our stategic significance but also our responsibility toward friendly and allied countries. Primarily, we have to secure domestic peace and increase our economic power in order to fulfill our ever increasing historic and social responsibility.

Referring to the significance of supporting through economic cooperation, Turkey's political solidarity with the Islamic countries, Ulusu concluded by saying that his visit to Tunisia had been beneficial and positive from all points of view.

MILLIYET ON PLOT AGAINST CYPRIOT PRESIDENT

NC080920 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 5 Oct 82 p 5

[Akay Cemal report from Nicosia]

[Text] Greek Cypriot Interior and Defense Minister Veniamin has confirmed reports that a plan to assassinate Greek Cypriot leader Kipranou has been uncovered.

In a statement to KHARAVYI, organ of the Greek Communist Party AKEL, Venianmin admitted that information had been received to the effect that there was a plot to assassinate the Greek Cypriot leader and that certain precautions had been taken last week by the security forces. The Greek minister added that no incident of any kind had occurred until Saturday, the day of Kiprianou's departure from the island.

Acting on the information, the Greek Cypriot security organization cancelled all leave. A series of operations were carried out in the homes and offices of many suspects in Nicosia and Limassol, but they failed to obtain any worthwhile clue.

On the other hand, the AGON newspaper stated that certain groups observed to be in collaboration with foreign forces have intensified their efforts to create unrest in the Greek Cypriot sector in recent months. The paper added that reports about the plot to kill Kiprianou should be evaluated within this framework.

LABOR MINISTER ESENER ON WORKERS IN FRG

[Text] Labor Minister Turhan Esener has said that the views of the new government in the FRG on Turkish workers are being followed with care and concern. Esener said: Our government believes that it will be beneficial and appropriate for the FRG Government not to make unilateral decisions. Our government is therefore always ready for bilateral talks on the issue.

In a statement to Turkish radio and television, Esener said that the policy of the new FRG Government on the issue is to prevent the flow of foreigners into the country, to make returns attractive and to thus encourage them.

Noting that bilateral talks on the issue have until now been conducted in an atmosphere of mutual understanding, and that they have been directed to positive results, Esener added that the talks have been very beneficial especially from the viewpoint of the conditions for the return to Turkey of workers encouraged to do so, and of determining the extent of employment in Turkey. Esener said that the Turkish workers went to the FRG upon the invitation of the government and the firms in accordance with bilateral agreements, and added: Our workers should not be viewed as production tools or as a labor force reserve to be employed when necessary and to be discarded in times of economic difficulties. Esener said that the Turkish workers have some adaptation problems, and that these cannot be put forward as an excuse. Noting that FRG Chancellor Kohl's statement that humanitarian measures in line with social justice will be taken in connection with the return of workers to their countries was satisfactory, Esener said that these measures should not be a factor of pressure. Esener concluded by saying that the government insists that all possibilities should be secured so that the workers are able to decide whether they wish to return of their own free will, that all their financial rights be fully paid on time and that their future be guaranteed.

DEATH PENALTY UPHELD FOR LEVON EKMEKCIYAN

[Text] Ankara, Oct 6 (AFP) -- A military appeals court today ratified the death penalty against Armenian Levon Ekmekeiyan for the machine gun attack at Ankara airport August 7 in which nine people were killed, it was announced here.

Ekmekciyan was captured alive after the attack, but his accomplice was killed. Another 72 people were hurt in the incident.

Ekmekciyan yesterday denounced in a statement to press "the dogs" of ASALA, the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia, for preventing his family from coming to Ankara from Beirut to see him, in spite of efforts by the Turkish Government to arrange a meeting.

Ekmekciyan also held ASALA responsible of creating enmity between Armenians and Turks.

TRIAL OF 19 DISK EXPERTS BEGINS IN ISTANBUL

TA071149 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] The trial of 19 Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] experts has begun at the 1st Army and Martial Law Command's Second Military Court in Istanbul. The indictment, which was prepared by the military prosecutor's office and which was read at today's hearing, says that the suspects were in unity with the goals and actions of DISK, and that they wanted to overthrow the constitutional order by force in a bid to replace it with a Marxist-Leninist proletarian dictatorship. The military prosecutor demanded various sentences for the suspects.

LIBERALS, ECOLOGISTS MAKE GAINS IN ELECTIONS

[Text] Brussels, Oct 11 (AFP) -- The liberals and the ecologists were the two big winners in Belgium's municipal elections yesterday, confirming the trend in last year's general elections. Analysts noted that the widely predicted increased polarization along French and Flemish lines had not taken place. According to the latest results from the Interior Ministry, the liberals gained in popularity throughout the country, the Socialists held their own with varying regional results, while the Social Christian Party, which rules with the liberals, gained French Belgium but was down by five percent in its stronghold of Flemish-speaking Flanders.

The ecologists made remarkable progress, winning an average of seven percent of the vote and 10 percent in such areas as Antwerp in Flanders. They will sit on many town councils, where they are expected to take on the role of arbitrator between the traditional political parties.

The opposition Socialist Party held its own or made slight progress in French-speaking Belgium, benefitting in recession-hit cities like Liege and Charleroi from party President Guy Spitaels' policy of "uniting the left". The Socialists regained second place in Flanders, a position they lost in the parliamentary elections. The Democratic Union of Respect for Work (UDRT) failed to gain a foothold in the French-speaking regions, although UDRT members made their way onto several councils in Brussels. The Communist Party suffered losses, especially in French areas. Moving up in influence with the liberals was the People's Union (VU) regionalist Flemish party.

The Burgermeister of Brussels will once again be a liberal, confirming a tradition dating from the creation of Belgium in the nineteenth century, while the French FDF Party remained the main party in the capital.

'GOOD PROGRESS' IN FOREIGN POLICY CONSULTATIONS

PM081527 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Unnamed "own political correspondents" report: "Good Progress in Government Formation Negotiations; No Nuclear Arms"]

[Excerpt] The Hague, 6 Oct -- The Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) are making good progress in consultations with government formation negotiations leader Scholten on nuclear arms and foreign policy. It is likely that tomorrow the distribution of ministerial posts will also be discussed.

A spokesman for the government formation negotiations leader said early this afternoon that the talks are still going according to schedule. CDA and VVD circles are not ruling out the possibility that Scholten will present conclusions on a draft peace and security policy to negotiators Lubbers and Nijpels before Saturday [9 October].

This morning there were also talks about overseas cooperation and development, European problems and policy toward South Africa. This afternoon, Scholten is to hold talks with Cooperation and Development Minister van Dijk.

As far as peace and security policy is concerned, the main question is how the Netherlands' preparedness for nuclear missile deployment is to be formulated in a government accord. The CDA is not prepared to state at the present time that the cruise missiles must be deployed automatically if the Geneva negotiations produce no results or unsatisfactory one.

PROVISIONAL FINAL ELECTION RESULTS FOR BAVARIA

[Excerpt] [No dateline given] -- These are the provisional official final results of the Bavarian elections:

Number entitled to vote: 7,956,116.

Turnout: 6,231,517: 78.3 percent; (76.6) [percentage from previous election].

Valid votes: 12,166,021 [Bavarian voters may vote directly for a candidate and also for a party list]

Party	Votes	Percent	Previous Election
CSU	7,090,936	58.3	(59.1)
SPD	3,877,032	31.9	(31.4)
FDP	429,832	3.5	(6.2)
Greens	558,087	4.6	(--)

Division of Seats

LD110016 Hamburg DPA in German 2342 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Text] Munich, 10 Oct (DPA) -- According to the official provisional results, out of a total of 204 seats in the 10th Bavarian postwar regional parliament, the CSU will take 133 seats, which is 4 more than 4 years ago. The Social Democrats will receive 71 seats in the regional parliament, 6 more than in 1978.

PARTY LEADERS DISCUSS BAVARIAN ELECTION RESULT

[Text] Bonn, 10 Oct (DPA) -- FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher had admitted that his party suffered a 'heavy defeat' in the Bavarian elections and called on Free Democrats to regain future electoral prospects by showing cohesion. Speaking in a television program of party chairmen on the election result in Bavaria, Genscher said that only by regaining its cohesion could the FDP master its difficult situation and prove itself as a vigorous political party. A party fighting against itself, as it has done, is bound to confuse the voters. The FDP must make it clear to the electorate that the changes in Bonn had been deliberate and that the party supported it. The FDP must use the weeks ahead to rediscover its identity. The FDP congress, to be held in early November, must make matters clear to the electorate. At the congress, the minority in the party must respect the majority decisions.

Federal Chancellor and CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl said that the Bavarian election result, in spite of the FDP losses, provides a clear confirmation for the middle of the road policy pursued by the new CDU, CSU and FDP government. Kohl supported Genscher's remarks on the FDP election performance. A party in which one section is daily quarrelling with its party leaders could not be surprised at the reaction of the voters.

The Bavarian election result, the chancellor said, showed that the hope of SPD Chairman Brandt for a new majority by the SPD and the Greens had not been borne out. There could be no question of a new majority.

SPD leader Brandt said that his party's electoral success in Hesse 2 weeks ago had not been contradicted by the Bavarian result. In Hesse, the SPD had almost achieved the same result as in the previous diet election, while in Bavaria it had even done a little better than 4 years ago. Brandt thought that the 'weight' carried by the CSU in national politics, if anything, appeared to be greater after its performance in Bavaria. The other coalition partner in Bonn, the FDP, had again suffered painful losses at a regional level.

Strauss on Election Results

[Text] Hamburg, 10 Oct (DPA) -- According to Bavarian Minister-President Franz-Josef Strauss (CSU), the Bavarian voters have clearly supported the new coalition in Bonn. The result of the Bavarian elections will help to stabilize the situation in Bonn. In a television program tonight, he said that the FDP failure to clear the 5 percent hurdle will not influence the government coalition in Bonn. However, after the Bavarian elections, the political fate of the FDP was wide open. Without the turbulence in Bonn, the CSU would probably have done even better and the SPD probably worse.

Regarding the Greens, who will not be represented in the diet, Strauss said that the electorate had acknowledged the good work done by the Bavarian government and had halted the triumphal advance of the Greens.

Further Comments

[Excerpts] Munich, 11 Oct (DPA) -- According to CSU Chairman and Bavarian Minister-President Franz-Josef Strauss, the method and circumstances of the switch of coalition in Bonn contributed to the FDP's defeat in the elections in Hesse and in Bavaria. After a meeting of the regional executive of his party on the consequences of the CSU's "magnificent" performance, Strauss said in Munich on Monday that the FDP would have cleared the five percent hurdle "without trouble" if FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher had led the movement for fresh elections following the breakup of the coalition.

Were it not for the change of coalition in Bonn, the CSU would have polled "more like 65 percent" of the vote in the opinion of Strauss, but he said the "position we have maintained is more than enough." The CSU's 58.3 percent is a good sign for continuity and stability in Bavarian politics. Strauss saw the failure of the Greens to clear the five percent hurdle as a success. It is not a normal party. "The nucleus of the Greens is made up of leftwing radicals of various types," he stated. "I do not welcome the fact that the FDP has been thrown out of the diet assembly," said Strauss, adding however, "there are always casualties on the battlefield."

CDU PRESIDIUM ASSESSES BAVARIAN ELECTIONS

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 11 Oct (DPA) -- In a first statement, the CDU Presidium has assessed the result of the election for the Bavarian state parliament as a vote for the Christian-liberal coalition.

The CDU Presidium views the CSU result as a confirmation of the successful regional policies of the Bavarian sister party, and also as unequivocal clear support for the policies of Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl. Regarding the FDP situation, the CDU Presidium is convinced that following the internal party discussions, a "policy of the majority under Hans-Dietrich Genscher will prevail." The CDU/CSU Bundestag group chairman, Alfred Dregger, said that the FDP had been fully hit by the "campaign of lies about treachery." If the party does not achieve unity soon, its future existence must be in doubt.

SPD leader Willy Brandt expressed pleasure after a meeting of the Executive that the SPD was able to improve its position considerably in the Bavarian cities. The elections in Hesse and Bavaria have shown that the trend in the electorate for a seeming swing toward conservative forces have been broken. The Bavarian electorate had also disapproved of the FDP's wobbling and change of course and had thus confirmed that the FDP lacks the political legitimacy for the present government coalition.

BAVARIAN FDP MEMBERS TO BE POLLED ON POLICY

[Excerpts] Munich, 11 Oct (DPA) -- A referendum of all members on Bonn's new course is to be used in preparation for its special party conference on 24 October and for the discussions leading up to the Berlin national party congress at the beginning of November by the Bavarian FDP leadership. On Monday, the regional executive decided to ask all 8,000 members in Bavaria three written questions following the clear failure by the FDP to surmount the 5 percent hurdle.

The questions are:

1. Should the Bavarian FDP support a continuation of the new CDU/CSU and FDP coalition in Bonn?

2. Do you recommend that the Bavarian FDP delegates should reelect Hans-Dietrich Genscher as national chairman if he stands again?

3. Do you consider the criticism, also within the Bavarian regional party, of the leadership of the national party in recent weeks as justified?

ERTL: FDP 'VICTIM' OF SPD SLANDER CAMPAIGN

[Text] Munich, 10 Oct (DPA) -- Josef Ertl, the Bavarian FDP chairman [and federal food minister], said that the FDP in Bavaria had been the "victim of an infamous SPD slander campaign." Speaking over Bavarian radio, he declared his support for the changeover in Bonn. A liberal party needed convinced liberals, he said. He conceded that the image of dissension projected by the FDP after the change of government in Bonn had harmed the party.

FDP DELEGATES BLAME LEADERSHIP FOR PARTY DECLINE

[Excerpts] Schwaebisch Hall, 9 Oct (DPA) -- More than 400 delegates to the Baden Wuerttemberg FDP special party conference began their discussions about the pros and cons of the party's change in coalition with emotional clashes. Previously, the FDP land chairman, Juergen Morlok, spoke against condemning the federal chairman, Hans-Dietrich Genscher in a speech which received only moderate applause. At the same time, Morlok pointed to the overall responsibility of all the leading bodies in the party and Bundestag group for the change of coalition, for which he also accepted responsibility.

In the first contributions to the discussion, the delegates sharply criticized the leadership style of Morlok and Genscher and demanded the replacement of the leadership team which had betrayed the party. The change of coalition called into question the credibility of the FDP and initiated a "catastrophic" development into a splinter party with only 3 percent of the votes, delegates said.

KOHL, GENSCHER REAFFIRM MARCH ELECTION PLEDGE

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 10 Oct (DPA) -- In a television program tonight, Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher confirmed the pledge made in their coalition agreement to seek fresh elections to the Bundestag on 6 March. "Of course I will keep my word," the chancellor said. He said that talks should take place shortly with all parties and party groups in the Bundestag about fresh elections,

They should also discuss the future of Hesse, where an SPD minority government is in office. With regard to constitutional misgivings about the procedure to arrange new elections, Kohl said that elections were certainly possible. He said he wanted a solution in conformity with the Constitution and would submit proposals to this end.

KOHL TO STATE ELECTION DATE, ECONOMIC MEASURES

[Text] Bonn, 9 Oct (DPA) -- According to information acquired by WELT AM SONNTAG, Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl (CDU) will give a personal assurance in his government statement to the Bundestag on Wednesday that elections will be held on 6 March. The chancellor will also call on the German people to regard the elimination of the country's crisis situation and the necessary sacrifices this entails as a "national duty." This is reported by the paper in an article prereleased to DPA.

The paper adds that in his 1 and 1/2 hour long statement Kohl will outline the country's present financial situation and explain how his government will tackle the mountain of debts and what sort of investment is to stimulate the economy. In this, Kohl will draw on the independent estimates of Gerhard Stoltenberg, the new finance minister (CDU), according to which the number of unemployed will reach 2.4 million in 1983, rather than the 2.1 million reported by the former Federal Government.

According to Stoltenberg's calculations, the 1983 budget deficit will amount to the record sum of DM45 billion without further saving measures, rather than the DM28 billion as predicted by the former coalition. According to the paper's information, further severe savings measures are announced in Stoltenberg's paper.

TRADE UNIONS CRITICIZE ECONOMIC POLICY

[Text] Bonn, 10 Oct (DPA) -- The trade unions' massive criticism of the government program of the new Christian-liberal coalition is continuing. Karl Hauenschild, chairman of the chemical, paper and ceramics industrial trade union, said on Deutschlandfunk today that the measures agreed upon by the new coalition thus far do not seem promising for a speedy reduction in unemployment. Moreover, the planned savings measures lack any social balance since many of the restrictions affect only the employees and not the employers.

Hauenschild announced that at the end of this month the trade unions would make it clear at regional demonstrations that the coalition paper contains several points that must be condemned as "much more insupportable and unacceptable" than the contents of the old coalition's 1983 budget. It is hoped that the Bundestag will make changes in these plans.

The trade union chairman also rejected the planned 6-month delay of wage increases proposes by Labor Minister Norbert Blum (CDU). It is wrong to believe that firms will invest more if wage costs increase less steeply. Businessmen will only invest if they can sell their products. At the same time investment buying power is promoted, incentives must also be promoted.

GENSCHER ON FDP, FOREIGN POLICY PROBLEMS

DW081253 Bonn DIE WELT in German 8 Oct 82 pp, 1, 3

[Interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and foreign minister, by Editor Herbert Kremp in Bonn; date not given]

[Excerpts] WELT: You are the foreign minister in the new government and at the same time FDP chairman. Will you give up the party chairmanship at the Berlin FDP congress in November so you can devote your full attention to foreign policy?

Genscher: No, I have always represented foreign policy in addition to my responsibilities as party chairman. This should also be possible in the future.

WELT: According to statements by some opponents within your party to the change of government, a leftist-liberal organizational merger is to be expected. Do you think you can guarantee the unity and new orientation of your party?

Genscher: Yes. It is not basically a new orientation but the necessity of now implementing the policy we outlined in the 1980 election program within the new coalition. This is because the Social Democrats were no longer in a position -- particularly in economic and finance policies -- to implement the decisions necessary to fight unemployment. Those who are criticizing the coalition decision ought to express this criticism within the party and justify their approach to the party. I believe it would be proper, so as to create clarity, if the opponents of the current coalition decision were to nominate their own candidate as party leader. In this way, they would offer someone as an alternative.

WELT: The differences between the FDP and the CDU/CSU are surely stronger than those between the FDP and the SPD in recent years. What is there to indicate the continuity of your basic features?

Genscher: We do have experience in cooperating with the CDU/CSU which dates back to the fifties and sixties. It was already seen then that as far as justice and domestic policies are concerned, the dividing line between the two parties -- meaning the FDP and the CDU/CSU -- is more prominent. This will continue in the future. This will not be surprising to anyone who keeps in mind the principles of a liberal party, on the one hand, and those of a Christian conservative party, on the other.

There are also different positions regarding specific questions of economic policy, yet not with respect to the fundamental support of the social market economy. This is something that unites the CDU/CSU and the FDP, whereas in his 1980 government statement, the chancellor at the time, Helmut Schmidt, could no longer support the social market economy despite our urging. He obviously realized even at that time what the course of his party would be. This anxiety was confirmed by the SPD congress in Munich in April this year.

WELT: You have just come from New York where you represented the new Federal Government in numerous talks. What you are stressing is continuity. Does this mean that all aspects of foreign policy in all fields will be pursued as before?

Genscher: The basic lines of German foreign policy are fixed. This is also in the interests of our country. They are also fixed because the basic lines of our foreign and security policies have been established as a part of European political cooperation and within the foreign policy common interests of the Western alliance.

Predictability and reliability are particularly important in the foreign policy of a country situated on the dividing line between East and West. In this respect, we must not run a slalom course, and in my talks in New York I found that my contacts in East and West, as well as in the South have welcomed with great satisfaction the clarity of the new Federal Government's foreign policy course.

WELT: Your agreement with your coalition partner refers to "genuine" detente. Does this term mean "realistic" or "constructive"? Does it modify a noun which lends itself to very broad interpretation?

Genscher: It has been shown that various meanings were attached to the term detente during discussions in the seventies. This is why I spoke of a realistic detente policy right after I assumed the office of foreign minister. The term "genuine" detente has become common in the Western alliance. This basically makes no difference, and this is why this term, which has been used repeatedly by NATO, has been included in our coalition agreement.

WELT: How is this specific concept of detente affected by the situation in Poland which is becoming more intense at present?

Genscher: I used my talks in New York to make it clear, particularly to the people I talked with from the Warsaw Pact -- who included a Polish deputy foreign minister -- that it is a foregone conclusion that the situation in Europe is influenced by developments in Poland.

WELT: You had your first talk with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz. Do you have the impression that there will be perfect harmony of German and American interests regarding the fundamental assessment of Soviet policy, concerning the U.S. reaction to Soviet expansionism and regarding technology transfer?

Genscher: All the questions you just raised are covered by two significant documents. One of them is the decision of the Versailles economic summit and the other is the communique of the NATO summit conference in Bonn. These documents are relevant for the policy of the Federal Government as well as of the U.S. Government. Since this is the case, I can respond in the affirmative.

WELT: Were there any discussions about the natural gas pipeline deal and the U.S. Government sanctions imposed on companies in Germany?

Genscher: No. The U.S. Government naturally proceeds from the premise that the Federal Republic will remain loyal to its contracts in this particular case as well.

WELT: What will be on the agenda when Foreign Minister Gromyko comes to Bonn in response to your invitation?

Genscher: The date for his visit has not yet been fixed. Regarding this visit, it will be important for us to be able to discuss the international situation, East-West relations, and the state of arms control and of disarmament negotiations. In addition, the Soviet foreign minister should have an opportunity to obtain a direct impression of developments in the Federal Republic since the government change -- not only during talks with the foreign minister but also with the federal chancellor and the other parties represented in the Bundestag. In this connection it can be seen that the Soviet leadership, just as the leaderships of the other Warsaw Pact states, are adjusting realistically to this changed situation and are finding that the formation of governments is an internal FRG affair.

GENSCHER CONDEMNS BANNING OF SOLIDARITY UNION

[Text] Bonn, 9 Oct (DPA) -- Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has called the banning of the independent trade union Solidarity by the new trade union law in Poland a serious violation of the Helsinki Final Act. This ban also contradicts all the assurances of the Polish leadership since the imposition of martial law in December last year, Genscher said in Bonn on Saturday.

Since then, the Polish leadership has again and again issued statements justifying the expectation that Poland will return to the path of reform and dialogue with all social groups involved, including the Solidarity trade union, and that the Polish Government will lift martial law and release the prisoners. "The expectation that these assurances would be fulfilled has once again been bitterly dashed by the new trade union law," the foreign minister said.

The government is deeply worried, according to Genscher, about the effect that the banning of a trade union, which was founded and supported by the majority of Polish workers, will have on mutual trust and thus on the policy of security and cooperation in Europe and on international relations. Together with its friends and allies, Bonn will continue to work for a return to the path of reform and dialogue, for the lifting of martial law and the release of the detainees in Poland.

KOHL RECEIVES ITALIAN FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO

LD081652 Hamburg DPA in German 1313 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl today receives Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. Colombo is in Bonn for a 1-day working visit at the invitation of Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. After political talks in the chancellor's office, Genscher and Colombo began their exchange of views on European question and East-West relations.

Further on Colombo Visit

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl intends to travel to Italy "if possible" even before the German-Italian consultations in Florence at the end of November, a government spokesman stated in Bonn on Friday. Kohl emphasized this intention to make a visit during a 30-minute conversation with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Kohl emphasized on this occasion the excellent state of relations, which he wishes to cultivate "quite personally." The federal chancellor also declared his full support for the German-Italian Europe initiative to improve political cooperation and (?noted) with satisfaction the agreement of both governments on their attitude to both parts of the NATO dual decision.

At the center of the exchange of views between Colombo and his German counterpart Hans-Dietrich Genscher stood the "European Act," which both want to bring before the European Parliament in Strasbourg on 14 October as a contribution to the strengthening of West European political cooperation. Among other topics discussed was the followup Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe which is due to resume on 9 November in Madrid. Genscher and Colombo also agreed on intensifying dialogue between the West Europeans and the Americans. Both foreign ministers expressed their concern about the situation in Poland.

A government spokesman emphasized the closer relations between Bonn and Rome by referring to the fact that Colombo was the first foreign minister to make a visit to the federal capital since the change of government.

KOHL, GENSCHER TO VISIT LONDON 19 OCT

LD081824 Hamburg DPA in German 1639 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl will go to London on 19 October for a short visit. According to the Federal Press Office on Friday, he is going at the invitation of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Kohl will be accompanied by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

USSR'S SOLOMENTSEV OPENS TRADE EXHIBITION

[Excerpts] Duesseldorf, 8 Oct (DPA) The Soviet Union sees good prospects for trade relations with the Federal Republic. At the opening of the Soviet trade and industry exhibition in Duesseldorf today, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the RSFSR Mikhail Solomentsev said he hoped that this, the biggest Soviet exhibition in the Federal Republic to date, will create a fresh drive toward the further development of contacts between the two countries.

In a greetings message to visitors at the exhibition which Solomentsev read, Soviet party and state head Leonid Brezhnev said that the exhibition was a joint contribution to the further development of goodneighborly, mutually advantageous relations between the countries. He gave the assurance that the Soviet Union is prepared to do everything possible to prevent a nuclear catastrophe, to curb the arms race and to consolidate the foundations of peace on earth.

North Rhine-Westphalia Economics Minister Prof Reimut Jochimsen said that despite an increasing rigidity in international economic relations, it is possible to speak frankly with one another. He gave assurances that this continuity in foreign and detente policy was guaranteed, and not only by Social Democrats, pointing out that the new Federal Government had stated its commitment to it, also. With regard to Washington's recent criticism of trade with the East, Jochimsen stressed the land government's legal interpretation that contracts must be honored. It is false to use trade and economics as instruments of political pressure. At the same time, it is not possible to ignore the political causes of the so-called embargo policy, namely Afghanistan and Poland.

FRG'S WOLFF, SOLOMENTSEV SPEAK ON COOPERATION

[Text] Duesseldorf, 11 Oct (DPA) -- Otto Wolff von Amerongen, chairman of the Eastern Committee in German Industry, has warned against a further politicization of world trade. Foreign policy problems should not be solved by economic measures, stressed Wolff, in referring to the U.S. sanctions against the gas pipeline deal with Moscow. Trade partners throughout the world have to recognize that their partners in the Federal Republic are reliable. Wolff was speaking on Monday in Duesseldorf at the USSR-FRG commission, held in conjunction with a Soviet trade and industry exhibition.

Wolff regards economic relations with the Soviet Union as being far from exhausted, despite the differences in political systems, and even though the FRG is already the USSR's most important Western trading partner. In view of the increasing concentration on the energy field in German-Soviet trade, it is also desirable to expand imports of industrial and consumer goods from the USSR.

According to Mikhail Solomentsev, chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers, the Soviet side is also interested in strengthening economic cooperation. It is known that in the case of German firms, one is dealing with partners "who stand by their word and their commitments," Solomentsev said.

WOERNER VIEWS ON 'ZERO SOLUTION' FOR EUROPE

[Excerpts] Bonn, 11 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Defense Minister Manfred Woerner (CDU) hopes that the Soviet Union will take some action at the Geneva disarmament negotiations on medium-range missiles. In a DEUTSCHE WELLE interview, Woerner said on Monday that the West is firmly in favor of a zero solution. That is, East and West should not station nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe. Woerner made clear, however, that if the Soviets did not take any action, they could be sure that the West would station medium-range missiles.

Britain has already declared its readiness to accept 160 cruise missiles. Italy wants to station 112. Woerner said that he believes that the other alliance partners would also stand by their agreements. Much depends on the example of the Germans. "If we break away, then indeed the others will also no longer participate." The Federal Government stands "united and unreservedly" by the dual decision.

In the interview, Woerner also expressed his "fundamentally positive" stance on American wishes to move more U.S. units closer to the intra-German border. But he emphasized that this could only happen step by step over a lengthy period. In addition, it is clear "that the Germans cannot finance this alone or even the greatest part of it." This is a task for all NATO.

With reference to the Bundeswehr, Woerner said that now the men had to be put into the foreground; the soldier and his quality. He saw training and leadership as priorities and he intends taking firm action against lack of discipline.

LAMBSDORFF HOPES FOR LIFTING OF U.S. SANCTIONS

[Text] Cologne, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff hopes that the U.S. sanctions against four German firms in connection with the natural gas pipeline deal will soon be lifted. On Deutschlandfunk today he stressed however that this will not "happen very quickly." He said that the settlement of the dispute between Washington and its four partners -- France, Britain, Italy and the Federal Republic -- must take place within the framework of the OECD.

Lambsdorff expressed in this connection the conviction that the United States does not want to wage a trade war against the Soviet Union. "We know the opinion of Secretary of State Shultz in such matters." He said that Shultz is a determined supporter of free world trade.

Last Wednesday, the Washington administration imposed punitive measures against turbine manufacturer AEG-Kanis and against three Mannesmann concerns.

MITTERRAND CONDEMNS POLISH BAN OF SOLIDARITY

NC112110 Paris AFP in English 2049 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 11 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand today condemned the decision Friday by the Polish parliament to ban the Solidarity independent trades union federation.

On return from a week-long African tour, Mr Mitterrand said: "I condemn this intolerable regression of rights which, despite appearances, stems less from circumstances than from the very nature of the system.

"This decision constitutes a new and dramatic attack on human liberties and rights in Poland. Furthermore, it is contrary to the engagements of the Polish head of government on December 13, 1981 (when martial law was imposed) and to the Final Act of the Helsinki agreement," Mr Mitterrand said.

"It is therefore this very system one must consider when making such a condemnation.

"France will do what it must to aid the Poles, in whatever circumstances, to continue to live without abandoning hope," he said.

Government Issues Communique

LD091340 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] "Total reprobation," these are the two words officially used in the communique issued by the Ministry of External Relations to condemn the dissolving of the Polish trade union Solidarity. The French Government also expresses its deep anxiety, the communique adds. The new laws will, in practice, lead to a suppression of Solidarity and of two of the Gdansk agreements' essential achievements: trade union pluralism and the right to strike.

French-Polish Dialogue Suffers

[Text] Paris, Oct 9 (AFP) -- The French Government has expressed "great concern" over yesterday's adoption of new trade union legislation in Poland which banned the Solidarity union, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today.

The legislation, he said, would lead to the suppression of two essential gains of the 1980 government-worker agreements in Gdansk which led to Solidarity -- the right to strike and the plurality of trade unions.

The French Government had on numerous occasions asked Polish authorities to lift martial law, free detainees and hold genuine discussion with Solidarity and the Roman Catholic Church, the spokesman said.

The measures "obviously pose a new stumbling block to French-Polish dialogue," the spokesman added.

LEBANON: TROOPS NOT INVOLVED IN SEARCH OF HOME

NC091332 Paris AFP in English 1309 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 9 (AFP) -- The French Defence Ministry today denied today that French paratroopers of the Beirut peace force had searched the home of a "leading Lebanese figure" yesterday.

The denial followed reports that French troops had searched the home of Walid Junblatt, president of the Progressive Socialist Party.

MITTERRAND ASSESSMENT OF AFRICAN POLICY

LD100910 Paris Europe Number One in French 0630 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Jacqueline Patet report]

[Text] The ninth French-African summit is over. The next meeting will be held in Paris in 1983. So, what can we deduce from this 48-hour meeting between 37 African countries and France?

First of all, the redefinition by Francois Mitterrand of his African policy. An untiring advocate of the north-south dialogue, France will help the countries that need help but will do so within the limits of its possibilities.

In the final press conference held yesterday evening alongside President Mobutu, Francois Mitterrand spoke very clearly and pragmatically on this specific point, not concealing the difficulties that France is experiencing at present and expressing the hope that he not be the only one to realize this. His statements, which he had already made in Burundi and Rwanda, were appreciated by the majority of the countries present because they had the merit of being frank, even though he may have shocked some of them.

And then, Francois Mitterrand also made a point of reassuring the French-speaking nations who are worried at the expansion of their original group, and some, like President Bongo, even displeased at not being able to speak any more of the problems specifically concerning the former colonies of France.

Begin Mitterrand recording: Grasp all, lose all. On the basis of the core of French-speaking nations that I spoke of yesterday and which we have to preserve, it is better to stick to widening established relations with a series of African countries that have been willing to participate, since 1980, and which have increased each time in 1980, 1981, 1982, at the invitation of the annual chairman of the conference.

Consequently, I have no intention of expanding unnecessarily. I think that the point that we have reached is a good one and that it is advisable to specify properly the formula that needs to be made secure so that we may be able to speak of everything that affects our common interests and that we may also know what consequences to draw in the policy of cooperation, which must remain a sort of privilege: privilege of the [word indistinct], political privilege, cultural privilege and privilege, of affection between France and Africa. [end recording]

[Patet] One can say that we shall all meet again in Paris next year, a more restricted formula. The decision has not yet been made by Claude Cheysson who I interviewed yesterday. Cheysson believes that there must be reflection on how to prevent a split in this French-speaking core.

Another positive step for the summit was the legitimization of Hissene Habre, introduced at the inaugural session as a head of state by President Mobutu without anyone leaving the room, and received that very evening for 55 minutes by Francois Mitterrand who promised to accelerate aid from France in the fields of health, food and telecommunications. The victor of Ndjamena is returning home as a full-fledged president.

Consequently, both in the sphere of political and of economic problems, Francois Mitterrand has endeavored to conciliate realism and generous ideas and, as he said himself: it is not always easy.

LE MONDE ANNOUNCES CHEYSSON WEST BERLIN VISIT

[Text] The Quai d'Orsay spokesman announced Wednesday, 6 October, that External Relations Minister Cheysson will make an official visit to Berlin on 2 December.

He will be received by the city authorities and will be guest of honor at a dinner given by the Berliner Pressekonferenz.

By Berlin, the Quai d'Orsay spokesman means the three Western-occupied sectors of the former German capital.

HERNU CITED ON NUCLEAR FORCES, ARMY ROLE

[Unattributed report: "Hernu Hints at Forthcoming 'Alteration' in Doctrine Governing Use of Army"]

[Excerpt] Speaking to the National Assembly finance committee and to the press about the 1983 draft defense budget in Paris this morning, Thursday 7 October, the defense minister hinted at a forthcoming "alteration" "in the concept of the use" of the Army. "Anybody who tells me that he prefers an additional division of soldiers to a nuclear missile-launching submarine is living in the wrong age," Charles Hernu commented.

Expressing the view that "France is the only country which has dared to draw all the necessary conclusions from its nuclear power status," Mr Hernu said that "it is to that priority -- nuclear arms programs -- that we have sacrificed secondary matters on which savings had to be made."

The defense minister referred without officially supporting them, to the rumors reporting the prospect of a reduction in manpower in the context of a new reorganization of the Army.

"I have heard here and there that some people are worried about the Army's future, its size and its missions," Mr Hernu explained. "Allow me to tell you that the people primarily concerned, the Army officers and Army chiefs, are not worried. They know perfectly well that if the future military planning law introduces alterations in the concepts governing the use of the forces, it will not be to the detriment of their branch of the armed forces. They support the idea of a well-equipped army with greater fire-power and mobility in which the versatility of the forces will be increased."

"The optimum size of such a body will be determined by strategic choices included in the planning law," which is being drafted and which is to cover the years 1984 through 1988. "A decision of that order," the minister added, "cannot simply be the consequence of finances which are, by definition, always limited."

After recalling that "the defense of France's European borders requires a strong battle corps based on armored units; deployed on both sides of the Rhine" and that "the means available for rapid overseas assistance must not be reduced," Mr Hernu said that "the task of defending the national territory by surface means must be effectively divided between the Gendarmerie and the Army."

"The Gendarmerie must be responsible for intelligence, protecting installations and neutralizing infiltrated commando groups," the defense ministry stipulated. "The Army must fight the main elements."

HERNU VIEWS ARMS SALES' REGIONAL CONCENTRATION

[Unattributed report: "Eighty-Three Percent of French Arms Sales Go to Maghreb and the Near East"]

[Text] Defense Minister Charles Hernu has described French arms exporters' dependence on their Near East and Maghreb clientele as "excessive." Indeed, more than 83 percent of French military equipment sales to foreign countries go to those two regions of the world.

Mr Hernu gave that verdict last week when he presented the most recent statistics on the French arms trade to the defense commission deputies.

Export orders recorded for the first 6 months of 1982 amounted to Fr 26.4 billion compared with Fr 20 billion for the corresponding period of 1981. Total sales in 1981 were Fr 33.8 billion and in 1980, Fr 37.3 billion.

According to the defense minister, the exports for the first 6 months of this year can be divided as follows: Fr 9.2 billion for the aeronautics sector; Fr 5.5 billion for surface equipment and Fr 1.7 billion for the naval sector. The geographical distribution is as follows: 83.5 percent to the Maghreb, Near and Middle East; 5.5 percent to Western Europe and North America; 4.5 percent to Black Africa; 3 percent to the Far East; 2.5 percent to South America and the Caribbean and 1 percent to various other places.

Two kinds of dependence can be noted: 83 percent of sales go to the Maghreb and Near East, and 73 percent of sales are aeronautical equipment. At present, these are mainly supplies of Mirage-2000 and Alpha-Jet aircraft to Egypt and supplies of Crotale surface-to-air missiles and Exocet surface-to-surface missiles to Saudi Arabia.

After describing as "excessive" what he termed "the concentration of exports to a given region," Mr Hernu asserted his intention to increase the export of warships, notably to Brazil and Peru.

PCF'S LAJOINIE HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE 4 OCT

PM081449 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Oct 82 p 5

[Unattributed report: "The PCF's Active and Original Commitment to the Majority"]

[Text] [PCF Politburo member] Andre Lajoinie, accompanied by PCF Politburo member Pierre Juquin, gave a press conference late yesterday afternoon [4 October]. After summarizing the broad outlines of the report which he had presented to the Central Committee on the Politburo's behalf that morning, Andre Lajoinie answered journalists' questions.

The Politburo report, Andre Lajoinie stated, centers on "a proposal to the Central Committee and a political observation."

The proposal is: "To launch large-scale national action for economic recovery, social progress and workers' rights." That prolonged action will be "of national and class importance." It will be of national importance "because there will be no solution to the country's problems unless we win that battle." It will be of class importance because it presupposes "pushing back capital's chaos and speculations," and at the same time it presupposes that full account be taken of "the need to increase the workers' purchasing power."

The political observation is: "In face of the pressures exerted by the rightwing and capitalist forces, we think that the leftwing course will only be maintained by the workers' intervention."

Finally, Andre Lajoinie stressed that the Central Committee "strongly reaffirmed its commitment to the majority. That commitment must be active and original and capable of winning the people's support."

Since many journalists' questions related to the remarks on, or criticisms of, the measures envisaged for financing the social security system, Andre Lajoinie added: "We are not yes-men; moreover if we were, we would be doing a great disservice not only to the workers but also to the whole leftwing majority."

"I noted major democratic achievements, some of which, moreover, still have potential." Citing the example of the nationalized enterprises, Andre Lajoinie stressed: "We want them to act differently from capitalist firms...."

In addition to those achievements and that potential, "there are some measures which do not correspond to the promises made. Just look at the way in which the right seizes upon them each time and uses any shortcomings which the majority might have."

"When we make criticisms," Andre Lajoinie continued, "they are always accompanied by reasonable, realistic and moderate proposals. We are in the government to improve the French people's situation."

Asked about the Communist deputies' final vote on the social security plan, Andre Lajoinie replied: "We are going to make proposals and will judge according to the government's attitude. We are prepared to discuss the matter."

The proposal for charging living expenses in hospitals is "a source of injustice," he said. Recalling that the employers' debt to the social security is more than Fr 20 billion, Andre Lajoinie specified: "I am well aware that part of that sum corresponds to bankruptcies, but others are not paying their contributions. That is where we can find the Fr 2 billion-Fr 3 billion which would make up for the planned charge for living expenses."

Questioned on a possible meeting with [National Solidarity] Minister Pierre Beregovoy, Andre Lajoinie confirmed that a working meeting would shortly be held between the PCF parliamentary groups and the government. That meeting will take place on 14 October in the National Assembly, in [Premier] Pierre Mauroy's presence, and should be attended by the ministers responsible for the economic and social spheres.

Questioned on the campaign announced by the PCF, Andre Lajoinie then said: "We will not win the national economic battle if the workers' interests are sacrificed. We do not share the idea that purchasing power is not the most important question."

Mentioning the "strong pressure" exerted by the right and the employeres, he added in particular: "If the workers do nothing there will be a problem."

In reply to another journalist, Andre Lajoinie recalled that "virtually all Communists want the Communist ministers to be in the government. But that must not lead them into a passive attitude...."

"I think that the workers' action has been inadequate for the past 16 months." The 10 May 1981 was accompanied by "many illusions." Citing the case of the laws democratizing the enterprise, Andre Lajoinie stated: "Those are important laws which represent a considerable step forward. But is that enough? No, and the Talbot and Citroen workers realized that immediately."

Andre Lajoinie concluded by reaffirming that there "is no inconsistency" in the fact that the PCF defines itself as a struggling party and a government party. "There is a commitment to the government. If that commitment is to be effective, it must be active. That is in the interest of the entire left."

PCF'S GREMETZ ON TIES WITH CPC, OTHER ISSUES

[Unattributed report: "The Progressive Forces Must Unite and Act in Face of Imperialism's Aggression"]

[Text] [PCF Politburo member] Maxime Gremetz, accompanied by [PCF Politburo member] Pierre Juquin, gave a press conference yesterday afternoon at Central Committee headquarters. First he stressed some points in the report on foreign policy which he presented [to the PCF Central Committee session on 5 October] and especially the Near East.

An analysis of the events confirm that they are a setback for the progressive and revolutionary forces in the world and we are drawing conclusions from that setback by shedding light on the areas which U.S. imperialism's aggression can be seen, he said.

Maxime Gremetz asked: Has the balance of forces in the world changed? According to our analysis, it has not changed. But, he continued, one of the main lessons we must learn in face of the resumption of imperialism's aggression, especially under Mr Reagan's leadership, is that the progressive and revolutionary forces must unite and act for peace and disarmament, for a just and lasting peace in the Near East and for a new international economic and political order.

The PCF asserts its intention to assume all its responsibilities in achieving that unity at national and international levels, Maxime Gremetz concluded.

In reply to a question, he stressed the PCF's desire to ensure that the French people make their contribution to the struggle for peace, disarmament, the independence and sovereignty of peoples and a new international order. Those are also lines already affirmed by the French Government.

Relations With the CPC

Questioned on China and relations between the PCF and CPC, Maxime Gremetz said: "We are paying sustained attention to what happened at the recent CPC congress. Following that congress, we consider that what we gleaned from our visit to China last spring has been fully confirmed. We welcome that.

"Can it be said that there are no longer any differences of opinion with the CPC? That is not how the question should be phrased. The Chinese Communists and we have a new concept of relations among Communist parties which takes account of each party's character and originality and takes account of and does not conceal areas of either agreement or disagreement."

During the visit by the PCF delegation headed by [PCF Secretary General] George Marchais which will leave for China 13 October, talks will be held at the highest level with the main CPC leaders, Maxime Gremetz said.

"We are watching with great interest," he continued, "the rapprochement taking place between China and the other socialist countries at the level of interstate economic relations. The fact that Leonid Ilich, one of those responsible for foreign policy in the Soviet Union is in Beijing is an event."

Questioned on the two parties' positions on Vietnam and Kampuchea, Maxime Gremetz recalled that the PCF determines its foreign policy in full independence and not in relation to the position adopted by any other party.

Against the Arms Race

With regard to the struggle against the arms race and for balanced disarmament, which many countries are demanding, whereas Mr Reagan is reviving the arms race, Maxime Gremetz stated that millions of French people could be united. "Areas of agreement are emerging, especially with the PS, with which we will hold a meeting to examine action to be taken in France," he said.

Stressing that young people throughout the world are in the vanguard of the struggle against the arms race and to ensure that the large sums of money it devours are used for other purposes, Maxime Gremetz stated: "We can progress toward disarmament if the peoples become involved. There are new possibilities for extending unity and action in that sphere."

LAGORIO SEES NO CHANGE IN ROLE FOR LEBANON FORCE

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 8 -- It is extremely unlikely that the Italian Government could accept a change in the role for the 1,170 Italian troops in the multilateral peacekeeping force in Lebanon because of difficulties connected to the situation in that country, Defense Minister Lelio Lagario said in the evening.

The defense chief's statement on the Italian contingent, which flanks French and American troops in the peacekeeping force, came as the latest in a series of responses to embarassment in the three nations to the Lebanese Army's large-scale sweeps in Beirut in search of arms caches and illegal residents.

The trilateral force was returned to the Lebanese capital following the worldwide outcry over the Israeli-inspired massacre of Palestinian civilians in the Shatila and Sabra refugee camps in Beirut in mid-September.

Lagorio declared, "our troops in Beirut were given the duty of safeguarding the Palestinian population and the pacification and consolidation of the Lebanese state".

After affirming that he did not believe the Rome government could accept a change in the role for the contingent, the minister recalled that this mission "was defined when the Lebanese authorities asked for our intervention. This is why news from Lebanon on searches of Palestinian camps has sparked unease and concern.

"I have expressed this thinking", he continued, "to the foreign minister and, as defense minister, I am following closely the diplomatic steps being taken". Lagorio said that the Italian military contingent "must not find itself in an untenable position".

Spadolini Voices Concern

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 8 -- Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini has called for broader powers for the liaison committee between the three nations in the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut and the Lebanese Government in personal messages to U.S. President Ronald Reagan and French President Francois Mitterrand.

The committee comprises the ambassadors of Italy, France and the United States in Lebanon and newly-elected Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil.

Spadolini also voiced his government's concern for the police operations of the Lebanese Army in Beirut and mass arrests in Palestinian refugee camps. Spadolini suggested that the liaison committee be given specific guarantees and be informed ahead of time on the nature and purpose of the police operations in areas patrolled by the multinational force.

The message stressed that the peacekeeping force's mandate is to facilitate the Lebanese authorities' task of restoring order and sovereignty in Beirut. Spadolini urged that Lebanese authorities speedily inform the committee of the identity of the people arrested and the reason for the arrest.

Cabinet Discussion

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 8 -- Lebanese Army police operations involving mass arrests and reports of brutality against Palestinians in Beirut were discussed today by the Rome cabinet in connection with the role of the multilateral peacekeeping force in Lebanon made up of United States, French and Italian troops.

Premier Giovanni Spadolini, the premier's office reported, briefed the cabinet on his letter to French President Francois Mitterrand and American head of state Ronald Reagan in which he voiced his deep concern for Lebanese Government police operations conducted in Beirut and called for upgrading the role of the liaison among the three nations' forces and between the peacekeeping force and the Beirut government.

The communique released by the premier's office said that Spadolini underscored Italy's desire to achieve precise guarantees on the nature and scope of these police operations.

On the request of the premier, Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio provided the cabinet with a detailed report on developments in Lebanon, speaking for Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo who is now out of the country.

In remarks to newsmen at the end of the cabinet meeting, the defense chief said that, in connection with the police operations "Italian diplomacy, alongside French and American diplomacy, is energetically pushing Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil to assure that all this is conducted within a state of law. The president offers guarantees. We are asking for further clarification".

Lagorio added that he has told the cabinet of moves to obtain guarantees that "there be supervision, international surveillance, in these concentrated areas where people are being arrested". [passage indistinct]

SPADOLINI, COLOMBO CONDEMN BAN OF SOLIDARITY

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 9 -- The Polish parliament's decision yesterday to ban the Solidarnosc independent labor organization, the first of its kind in Eastern Europe, met with harsh criticism from Italian Government officials this morning, with Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini describing the measure as a "disquieting factor for disturbance" in East-West relations.

According to a communique from Spaolini's office, the Rome government believes that, now, it is more necessary than ever for the Western allies to intensify joint actions to ensure that the Polish Government lives up to its pledges to respect human, civil and labor rights -- "as allowed in the final acts of Helsinki and other international conventions signed by Poland".

The communique also pointed out that the measure will embitter relations between the government, the Catholic Church and the "social forces" in the East European state, "pushing hopes for a real dialogue in the country further into the distance".

Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo was equally harsh, describing the Polish parliament's decisions as "of exceptional gravity". "In particular, these are facts which regard every civil man, in particular every European, since they contravene those norms for living together that all the European governments signed with the final acts of Helsinki", Colombo asserted. "Our protests must be raised up very firmly".

Meanwhile, Foreign Ministry sources disclosed that the Danish ambassador in Warsaw, acting on instructions of the EEC of which Denmark is duty chairman, contacted the Polish authorities before yesterday's note in an attempt to prevent approval of anti-union measures.

These sources, like Spadolini and Colombo, pointed out that the vote was in conflict with the pledges which the Polish authorities made when military rule was declared in the country on December 13 last year. In this context, the sources pointed out that the measure can only postpone the prospect of an improvement in our relations with the Warsaw authorities, an improvement which we would dearly have liked to see".

Pope Speaks Out

LD101442 Vatican City in Polish to Poland 0830 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Editorial Report] Vatican City in Polish to Poland at 0830 GMT on 10 October broadcasts a live relay from St Peter's Square in the Vatican of the canonization ceremony of the Polish martyr Reverend Maximilian Kolbe. The relay of the ceremony and the mass, which is celebrated by Pope John Paul II in Latin, is accompanied by intermittent comment and description in Polish by an unidentified announcer.

In his homily, delivered in Italian according to the announcer, the pope gives tribute to Reverend Kolbe for his sacrifice and notes that his canonization has been requested by the Polish and German bishops. The homily is followed by procession of pilgrims and clergy from various countries, including Poland, according to the announcer.

Following a brief greeting by the pope to the various pilgrims at the end of the mass, at 1116 GMT the pope makes a short speech in Italian which the Polish announcer translates as follows: "Events of the past few days in Poland, when the Solidarity trade union was deprived of its right to function within the law, are well known. These events are giving rise to resolute objections and protests by international public opinion in many quarters.

"What is being witnessed is a violation of the basic rights of man and society. The Holy See and the church in Poland have done everything in their power to prevent this violation. They will also continue to defend the legitimate rights of the working people. On this solemn day of the canonization of Saint Maksymilian Kolbe, I ask all people of good will throughout the world for prayers for the Polish nation:" [pope emphasizes the last four words]

The live relay from St Peter's Square concludes at 1120 GMT.

Calls for 'Return of Union'

LD111442 Vatican City in Polish to Poland 1100 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Speech by Pope John Paul II to delegation of Polish bishops on 11 October in the Vatican -- read by announcer]

[Excerpt] Recent years have brought about a movement of social and moral renewal in Poland, based on the correct striving to strengthen the dignity of man and human labor, a movement of renewal with which millions of Poles link their hopes for a better and more joyful tomorrow for Poland. It is important that the significant contents and values of this renewal not be wiped out from Polish reality.

I am enduring the present situation in Poland together with you and many others. I said to the leaders of the federation of trade unions from various countries at a special audience on 9 February of this year: I share your conviction that the return of true and full respect for the rights of the working people, and in particular their right to their own trade union, which has already been created and legalized, constitutes the only way out of this difficult situation. Work is the key to the life of society, work undertaken of free will and not imposed by force, work which brings with it toil but which at the same time can make people free and true believers of their community.

Intent on Visiting Poland

[Text] Vatican City, Oct. 11 (AFP) -- Pope John Paul II said here today that he had every intention of going to Poland next September for ceremonies marking the 600th anniversary of the Shrine of the Madonna of Czestochowa.

The pope, speaking before 10,000 Polish pilgrims who had come to the Vatican for the canonisation of Polish Father Maximilian Kolbe, said it was his "right and duty as a church leader and a Pole to make the journey."

The pontiff cancelled a planned visit to Poland last August, and new doubts have been expressed about the journey since Friday, when the Warsaw parliament adopted a new trade union law banning Solidarity.

There was some booing when the official delegation arrived for today's papal audience. But the crowd cheered when the pope expressed regret over the absence of Polish Primate Archbishop Jozef Glemp, who decided that it was preferable to remain in Poland because of the tense social situation in the country.

The pontiff expressed thanks to Polish bishops for their work with "internees, prisoners and their families."

Alluding to those who, because of martial law, have been forced underground, Pope John Paul II called on the church to continue to support them, "because they also are a part of the nation."

Urges Release of Internees

AU120841 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Vatican City, October 12 -- Pope John Paul II spoke to ten thousand Poles at the Vatican Monday while Polish workers in Gdansk, the city where the now-banned Solidarity trade union was born, staged an eight-hour strike and clashed with police.

Polish pilgrims were in Rome for Sunday's canonization Ceremonies of Polish priest Maximilian Kolbe, who gave his life in 1941 at the Auschwitz Nazi concentration camp to save the life of another Polish prisoner.

A large statue of imprisoned Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was placed prominently on the stage from where the pope spoke to the pilgrims. Some murmurs and sounds of protest were uttered by the crowd when the Polish Government delegation entered the hall towards the end of the audience.

Earlier, the pope stressed the absence from the canonization ceremonies of Polish Primate Archbishop Jozef Glemp. "We are all deeply touched by the eloquence of the fact that Archbishop Glemp could not attend the ceremony. We deeply feel the problem which forced him to remain in Warsaw, guided by a sense of his pastoral duties and those of primate".

In a recent letter to the pope, Glemp said he did not want to leave Warsaw in this difficult situation. Three days ago, the Polish parliament outlawed the Solidarity trade union.

Speaking without written notes, the pope addressed Polish authorities and urged the release of imprisoned union leaders "so that crying may cease" in Poland.

Speaking of his planned visit to Poland, already postponed indefinitely last August because of martial law, the pope said "it is my duty and my right, as bishop of Rome and as a Pole, to make this trip" and voiced the hope that "the necessary conditions" for the trip come about.

The delegation entered the audience hall after a meeting with Vatican roving ambassador in East European nations Msgr Luigi Poggi and with Vatican secretary for public affairs Msr Achille Silvestrini.

Before the audience, the pope had received forty Polish bishops in a private audience.

GOVERNMENT LEADERS CONDEMN ATTACK ON SYNAGOGUE

AU092002 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 9 -- Indignation, consternation and condemnation were unanimously voiced in messages which Italy's state, government, party and other leaders sent to Rome's Chief Rabbi Elio Toaff after this morning's bomb attack on the Roman synagogue.

President Sandro Pertini offered assurances that he would mobilize all the means of the state to track down the "criminals who have besmirched themselves with this ignoble crime, wherever they may come from".

Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, who went to the synagogue immediately after the attack to coordinate first aid operations, sent a telegram saying that the "disease of anti-Semitism must be removed from our country in the name of the ideals of tolerance, justice and liberty for which we have always fought".

Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo sought to break any presumed link the attackers may have thought they were indicating between the Italian Jewish community and the "tragic events" in the Middle East, describing this as "unacceptable', "unjustified", and "to be condemned". He also made it clear that Italy intends to protect its Jewish community "on a par with any other of the communities making up the nation".

Speaking on the [words indistinct] the lower house, Speaker Nilde Jotti recalled [words indistinct] World War II resistance, the Italians showed "active solidarity..." against the Nazis rounding up the Jews...".

She also (?warned) that maximum energy and all the institutions and democratic forces must be mobilized to prevent the spread of such dangerous germas as (?racism) and anti-semitic hate".

Rome's mayor, Ugo Vetere, also went to the synagogue as soon as he heard of the attack, voiced the Romans' indignation and convened a session of the city's Committee for the Defense of the Democratic Order (?in the afternoon).

All Rome Italian (?parties) and trade-unionists issued statements voicing solidarity with the Italian Jewish [words indistinct] condemning the use of violence and attempts to (?foment) racial hate and anti-Semitism in the country.

Pope Sends Message

[Text] (ANSA) Vatican City, October 9 -- Pope John Paul II today voiced his "firm condemnation" of this morning's attack on the Rome synagogue with a telegram to Cardinal Vicar of Rome Ugo Poletti whom he requested to pass the message on to Rome's Chief Rabbi Elio Toaff.

The message also said the attack was "all the more grave" because it was perpetrated against the Jewish community's place-of-worship. The pope added his "fervid prayers" for the victims, describing the attack as an "explosion of hate and blind violence" and urging "peace and fraternity among all men".

Condemns Attack in Sermon

[Text] (ANSA) Vatican City, October 11 -- Pope John Paul II asserted the "firm and irrevocable condemnation pronounced by mankind's conscience against anti-Semitic hate" in his traditional morning sermon to the crowd gathered in St Peter's Square Sunday.

The occasion for the condemnation was the terrorist attack Saturday morning against the Rome synagogue leaving one child dead and over thirty others injured.

Voicing his "deep pain and heartfelt solidarity" with the Jewish community in Rome, the pope placed the attack in the context of Sunday's canonization of Polish Friar Maximilian Kolbe, who died in the Nazi extermination camp of Auschwitz in the Second World War. On the Nazis' extermination fo the Jews, Pope John Paul said that the "tragic fate of so many Jews pitilessly suppressed in the concentration camps has already had its firm and irrevocable condemnation from mankind's conscience, but unfortunately, still in our times, criminal episodes of anti-Semitic violence are repeated."

'Arafat Condolences

[Text] PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat sent a message of condolence to President Pertini. The message expresses solidarity with the victims of the vile attack and their families. 'Arafat states: With deep sorrow I heard the news of the criminal act against the Italian Hebrew faithful. Personally and on behalf of the PLO Executive Council, I send my deepest condolences to you and the Italian people and the families of the victims. The Palestinian people, who suffered and still suffer because of similar criminal acts against women and children, consider these terrorist acts harmful to the whole of mankind.

Jews Plan Protest

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 11 -- The 13,000 Roman Jews will stop work, pull down the shutters of their businesses and shut up their homes this evening and tomorrow to attend the funeral of two-year-old Stefano Tashe, killed in the Saturday morning attack on the Rome Synagogue which also left 37 injured, (?four) of them gravely.

The attack called up a unanimous chorus of condemnation and indignation throughout Rome and Italy, while the Italian Jews attacked the "campaign of anti-Semitic hate" which Chief Rabbi Elio Toaff said had been permitted "almost totally" by Italian democracy, culminating with the visit which Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir 'Arafat made to Rome in mid-September.

But 'Arafat sent Italian President Sandro Pertini a letter as soon as he heard of the attack describing it as "base" and condemning "all the monstrous practises which are taking victims among innocent citizens both in Italy and in our camps in Lebanon."

"The Palestinian people, which has suffered, and is still suffering, because of similar criminal acts against its women and children, particularly during the recent massacres in Lebanon, thinks together with the PLO, that these terrorists acts are harmful to all humanity," 'Arafat added.

Apart from all the Italian political parties, the attack was also condemned by Pope John Paul II in his Sunday sermon in St Peter's Square and by Archbishop Hilarion Capucci, a member of the PLO's National Council, who described it as "sacrilegious, criminal, immoral and hateful."

According to the police reconstruction of the attack, the terrorists numbered five men plus possibly a woman, all certainly "professionals" and, according to eyewitnesses, presumably "Middle Eastern".

They were armed with hand-grenades and caliber-nine sub-machine guns. The latter were made in Eastern Europe and are one of the most common weapons in use in Lebanon. The four bombs all exploded and the terrorists covered their flight with the sub-machine guns. The hand-grenades killed the child and caused most of the other casualties.

The police, which have a summary description of all the assailants and what eyewitnesses say is a perfect photofit of one of them, tend to exclude all telephone calls so far received claiming responsibility for the attack. They have come from persons claiming to speak on behalf of the Red Brigades and the Revolutionary Armed Nuclei, this latter an extreme rightist urban guerrilla group.

The investigators have asked for help from other police forces in Europe to establish eventual analogies between the attack in Rome and other attacks recently made against the Jewish communities in France and Austria.

The closest analogy is with the August 1981 attack on the synagogue in Vienna. There, the assailants waited outside the building until the congregation started coming out and then threw bombs among them, killing two and leaving nineteen injured.

In Italy, there has been a certain increase in attacks on Jewish targets since the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, and especially after the massacre of the Palestinians at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps in Beirut.

Seeking a possible mastermind for the attack, many information sources have named (Sabri Halil al Banna), better known by his code-name, (Abu Nidal), the leader of the "Black June" terrorist group.

("Abu Nidal") was one of the founding members of the PLO, but was expelled from the organization after clashes with the other Palestinian leaders. According to Western intelligence sources cited here, he found a haven and support first in Iraq and, then, in Syria. The same sources blamed him for bloody attacks in London, the assault on the Vienna synagogue, the massacre at Rome's Fiumicino Airport, and the assassination of PLO officials in various European capitals.

He is believed to have about five hundred guerrillas under his command, and his signature is said to be the used PM-63 shells found on the scene of the attacks he has organized, precisely [words indistinct] at the Rome synagogue.

CABINET DISCUSSES STEEL INDUSTRY PROBLEMS

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 9 -- The crisis in the Italian steel industry sparked by a world-wide crisis for steel makers and EEC moves to solve the European steel crisis by ordering cutbacks in production was discussed by the Italian cabinet Friday.

The cabinet was called into session after an announcement that the steel mill at Bagnoli near Naples would be closed down brought workers and other demonstrators onto the streets. Naples, a city with myriad problems ranging from organized crime to high unemployment, cannot afford to lose the jobs which the steel complex provides.

In one move, the cabinet approved an EEC decision that production quotas for the Italian steel industry should be cut by forty percent in the fourth quarter of the year.

But it also agreed to restructure the Bagnoli steel mill while the workers there can still draw unemployment welfare because of the impact the factory's closure would have on Naples' social and economic fabric.

Explaining the decision to close down the factory, Public Sector Industry Minister Gianni de Michelis said "there was no other alternative, both in view of relations with the EEC and in view of the Italsider group's present situation."

Italsider is the state-run firm that owns the mill. According to De Michelis, the mill is made in such a way that it has to be closed down for a complete refit before it can be opened again.

JUSTICE OFFICIAL RESIGNS AFTER SON'S ARREST

[Excerpt] (ANSA) Rome, October 8 -- The Christian Democrat undersecretary at the Justice Ministry, Raffaello Lombardi, whose son was taken into custody earlier this week in a nationwide police dragnet which led to the arrest of 22 neofascist suspects, tendered his resignation with Premier Giovanni Spadolini today.

POLICE REPORTEDLY STAGE HIJACKING OF PLANE

[Text] Rome, Oct 12 (AFP) -- Italian Police are believed to have staged the seizure of an Alitalia plane in Bolivia overnight in a bid to capture a suspected rightwing Italian terrorist wanted here in connection with the 1980 Bologna railway station bombing that left 85 people dead.

The Italian ANSA news agency, quoting police sources, said that rightwing terrorist Pierluigi Pagliai, 28, accompanied by a strong escort of Italian police officers, was aboard an Alitalia DC-10, currently en route for Rome after refuelling at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

A spokesman for the airline company here said he had "no information" on the incident, initially reported to be a hijacking. But according to the latest information available, Pagliai, charged with involvement in the deadly 1980 Bologna railway station explosion, was seized in Bolivia by Italian police, who then commandeered the DC-10.

ANSA said that the officers also attempted but failed to capture Stefano Della Chiaie in Bolivia, believed to be an associate of Pagliai in the Bologna bombing.

Reports on how many passengers were aboard the plane were totally contradictory. A spokesman for Alitalia said that the plane, commandeered during a stopover at Santa Cruz, Bolivia, was carrying around 200 passengers.

But in San Juan, an official for the Puerto Rican company Aviation Services said that 16 passengers and 14 crew were on board, contradicting an earlier report from the company stating that a total 36 people were on the plane.

The plane was stormed by eighteen gunmen at Santa Cruz, Bolivia, on Sunday. They put Pagliai aboard after taking him from a hospital there, airport authorities reported earlier in La Paz.

Pierluigi Pagliai was wounded last Saturday receiving two bullets in the head in a reported revenge shooting.

The Alitalia DC-10 airliner had been forced down by electrical trouble at Santa Cruz 1,000 kilometers (600 miles) east of here on a flight from Recife, Brazil. The plane finally took off from La Paz for San Juan overnight.

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 9 -- Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio will visit Somalia on October 19-21 at the invitation of the Somali Government, an announcement said here today.

He will meet President Siad Barre and hold talks with Somali Government officials, including first deputy premier and defense minister, General Mohamed Ali Samatar.

THREE ARRESTED IN DALLA CHIESA MURDER CASE

[Text] (ANSA) -- Palermo. October 8 -- Three alleged members of a mafia family in Catania, in the southern Italian region of Calabria, were arrested Thursday in Palermo on charges connected to the mafia slaying of the Palermo prefect, Carabinieri General Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa, his wife, Emanuela Setti Carraro, and his police escort, Domenico Russo, in an ambush in the Sicilian capital September 3.

Palermo magistrates in charge of the investigation, according to judiciary sources here, do not think, however, that the three suspects took part in the killings. The trio, identified as Nunzio Salafir, 32, Salvatore Genovese, 37, and Antonio Ragona, 28, also had warrants out for their arrest for the killing of mafia boss Alfio Ferlito, shot to death in Palermo June 16 during his transfer to a higher security prison. Three carabinieri police escorting Ferlito and the driver of the automobile were also slain in the ambush.

A Soviet-made kalashnikov machinegun was used on the mafia chieftan and his escort, the same type of weapon Dalla Chiesa's killers wielded.

The three suspects are thought to belong to the Catania family headed by Benedetto Santapaola, also sought by police in connection with the killing of Alfio Ferlito, and of Dalla Chiesa.

Three others linked to the same mafia clan are also in custody on charges of drug trafficking and criminal association.

NEOFASCIST 'NAR' TERRORISTS ROB ROME BANK

AU082036 Rome ANSA in English 1942 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 8 -- A band of self-proclaimed neofascist terrorists shouting "we are the NAR" (Armed Revolutionary Nuclei) rushed a Rome bank today, hurled a hand grenade and fled with an undisclosed but reportedly large haul of cash. The grenade explosion left two persons lightly injured.

NAR grabbed the headlines earlier this week when a nationwide police operation led to the capture of 22 neofascists terrorist suspects, many of whom are alleged activists in this extremist organization.

PRESIDENT EANES BEGINS 4-DAY AUSTRIAN VISIT

LD111646 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The president of the republic today began a 4-day official visit to Austria. Although it has been described as basically a protocol visit, topical international issues and bilateral relations are expected to be discussed during Ramalho Eanes' stay in that country. The Portuguese and Austrian presidents are expected to discuss relations between European and African countries, bearing in mind the importance which Austria attaches to Portugal's contacts with some African countries. East-West relations,including the Conference on European Security and Cooperation, are also to be touched upon.

Eanes is accompanied by Foreign Minister Futscher Pereira and councillor of the revolution, Brig Pezarat Correia. Eanes' retinue also includes writer Natalia Correia, conductor Antonio Vitorino de Almeida, and the director of the newspaper DAIRIO DE LISBOA, Dr. Ruela Ramos.

General Eanes will hold talks with the Austrian president and with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky as well as with the leaders of the liberal and people's parties and industrial representatives.

Eanes is expected to return to Lisbon on Thursday evening.

ANGOLAN FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS COUNCIL MEMBER

LD102004 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Text] The Angolan foreign affairs minister has spent a few hours in Lisbon on his way back to Luanda from the United States. During his stopover in the Portuguese capital, Paulo Jorge met Lt Col Melo Antunes, member of the Council of the Revolution, with whom he discussed the situation in southern Africa, namely the negotiations over the independence of Namibia, and Portuguese-Angolan relations. Jorge was met at Lisbon airport by the Angolan ambassadors in Portugal and Italy, Fernando Franca van Dunem and Telmo de Almeida, respectively, with whom he also had a working meeting.

MINISTRY CONFIRMS SEVEN KIDNAPPED IN MOZAMBIQUE

[Text] The Foreign Ministry confirmed in Lisbon yesterday the kidnapping of seven Portuguese in Mozambique. The kidnapping was carried out by members of the Mozambican National Resistance [RNM] and constitutes, according to political observers, an act of retaliation on the part of the guerrillas against measures already taken by the Portuguese Government to curb the Lisbon activities of RNM spokesman Evo Fernandez.

DEFENSE MINISTER MAKES STATEMENT ON COUP PLOT

[Report by Defense Minister Alberto Oliart to the Standing Committee of the Congress of Deputies, detailing investigations into the attempted coup -- live]

[Excerpts] [Live relay picks up Oliart remarks in progress] In addition, the same reasoning expressed in the remarks concerning the investigations that are underway must be used when speaking of the judicial procedure. In this case, the public prosecutor is carrying out a thorough investigation, assisting the examining judge in clarifying the facts. Any indiscretion can cause difficulties and hinder the success of this judicial investigation. And, in order to gain complete knowledge of the facts, which we all desire, it is essential that the activities of the public prosecutor and the examining judge be conducted with the secrecy which the law not only offers, but imposes. As regards the secrecy of the summary proceedings demanded by the law, I wish to forestall those who, forgetting the legal imperative, demand of the government data, lists, documents and names which, as part of the summary proceedings, cannot be released without incurring the penalties contained in the penal code.

The military rebellion of 23 February 1981 and the present facts which the judicial authority has provisionally considered as representing a conspiracy to rebellion, have in common the fact that both projects, although in different stages of implementation, proposed to interrupt or radically change the democratic institutions in Spain and thereby go against the majority will of the Spanish people.

The plan which was due to be carried out on 27 October was based on a series of concerted actions, some taking place simultaneously, others linked to each other, aimed at neutralizing the principal centers of civilian power and military commands as well as those people who would probably have opposed the operation. Following this, martial law was to be declared and roadblocks set up in Madrid, closing access roads, and railway stations and Barajas Airport were to be occupied.

In outline, the possible consequences of the operation, as it was envisaged, would be as follows: the arrest or neutralization of people who would be presumed to oppose the coup -- this neutralization or arrest to take place in their own homes around dawn; and the taking over and neutralization of the top civil and military decision-making centers, the communications media and headquarters of political parties. This action was also planned to take place at dawn.

Synchronized to take place at the same time as the above actions, the captaincy general of the 1st Military Region [Madrid] was also to be occupied and the captain general neutralized. A lieutenant general was to be named as the new captain general who would take over command of all the armed forces. A state of martial law was to be declared throughout the whole of the 1st Military Region and an operation codenamed Marte was to be activated in all the other captaincies general.

As for the involvement of military forces, the action was to begin with the deployment of those men committed to the conspiracy in the military units who, after overcoming possible resistance to their action, would occupy predetermined targets. The plan envisaged the deployment of artillery pieces in positions which would allow them, if necessary, to fire on the Zarzuela and Moncloa Palaces and also on the headquarters of the joint chiefs of staff and the general staffs of the three branches of the armed forces.

The plan for Madrid envisaged using small units, squads, sections or companies, but not in the structured, organic way in which the military structure operates, and which the plan describes as committed to the objective of isolating and paralyzing Madrid on the basis of three concentric belts.

After an analysis of the best date and time to carry out this concerted action, the plan concludes that this should be carried out on 27 October between 0800 and 0830. The neutralization and occupation of the principal centers of political power and military command, as well as the neutralization of people who would probably be in position to obstruct or hinder the success of the possible action, would be carried out by small action groups, as I said, and by commandos called blind obedience commands.

Who would make up these groups? Military men, armed civilians? Well, at the moment we do not know exactly. In the documents seized from the arrested men there are no lists of civilians who could possibly be implicated in the coup plot, only those named as having to be neutralized. But we estimate that in some cases it was expected that these groups could be led by members of the armed forces coming from units or military centers distinct from the operational units. Every one of these action groups and commandos would have a precise, designated target, as well as, in some cases, a minute study of the personnel and weapons required to carry it out.

To summarize, we can say that as a whole the plan was carefully thought out and developed in the utmost detail. It reveals a careful examination of the possible targets, contains proper information for putting this into effect and, in short, appears to be sufficiently well drawn up to make its execution possible.

The plan as I have described it to you has a number of clear and fundamental differences from the attempted coup d'etat of 23 February [1981]. The most important difference is that the latter rebellion attempted to take over political power, so that that from that center of power democratic institutions could be smashed. On the other hand, the plan now under investigation aimed to neutralize and replace the military command as its first objective, and immediately afterwards, to likewise neutralize the political power, revoke it and replace it with the presumed victorious rebellion.

At this point we want to stress again that the first priority of the plan was the neutralization of the military commands, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, the head of the general staffs of the armed forces, the heads of the principal operational units in Madrid, and captiancies general of certain military regions. I think these details should be perfectly clear. It is also important to stress that the plan appears to have been drawn up around small armed groups, squad-type units, sections or perhaps companies, and does not count on any organizational or operational unit. This leads to the assumption that it was accepted that there would be a clash between army commands with unpredictable and unforeseen consequences.

The best assessment of what this plot entailed can be seen from the fact that charges have been pressed by the examining judge. This signifies the existence of sufficient reasonable indications that the men charged aimed to carry out an action of this kind. It appears evident that the men arrested are probably not the only ones implicated in the planned operation, and that people implicated in the various levels of the projected operation are still to be discovered. The state security services have for some time been devoting particular attention to a number of people close to or integrated in what can be called old regime groups who could, at the right time, take over the task of leading, organizing or financing things, although at the moment sufficient evidence to bring charges against them has not been gathered.

It is also true that we must exercise extreme caution in order to avoid prejudicing the success of subsequent investigations and intelligence, and this considerably limits us, even at the risk of giving rise to certain feelings of dissatisfaction among those who might hope for more information on these events.

At the moment, the investigation into the case is being conducted in parallel and in a coordinated way by both the Ministries of the Interior and Defense, and the Ministry of Defence intelligence services are working at full capacity.

An investigation is also being carried out by the Ministry of the Interior into the activities of a certain, very recently created political group to see whether it could be using the organization as a screen to cover up the conspiratorial activities of some of its members.

Meanwhile, a careful investigation is being carried out in each military region by the military commands. When this is over and the results are put at the disposal of the judicial authorities and the public prosecutor's office so that they can add this information to the judicial proceedings which have been or can be instituted, they will then adopt the requisite administrative or disciplinary measures.

Because the investigation is underway at the four levels I have described, because the plan is known and there cannot be any surprise, and because the organs of justice of both the government and the military command are now acting, I can affirm that the situation is under control.

In addition, ladies and gentlemen, I would like to assure you that the categorical statement from the Army Supreme Council reflects the indignation and grief of the overwhelming majority of generals, commanding officers, officers and NCO in the Spanish Army who view with concern the irresponsible behavior of a small number of their colleagues, which could cast a shadow of doubt over their irreproachable loyalty to the Constitution, to the institutions, to the legitimate government and to the supreme commander of the armed forces, his majesty the king.

Today, more than ever, the armed forces are a firm guarantee of the permanence and development of the democratic institutions in Spain, of this parliamentary monarchy which makes us the equal of and unites us with the countries of the free world with whom we belong and which to continue to belong. Today, more than ever, the sovereign will of the Spanish people, freely expressed through the polls, unites our rejection of those who want to muzzle that sovereignty with the feeling of the immense majority of these who don the uniform of the Spanish Armed Forces. Let neither vile conspiracies, evil intentions or rashness cloud this profound unity. I must, therefore, request that you refrain from unjustly and indiscriminately attributing to the whole of the armed forces the irresponsibility of some who represent very few or none, as opposed to those who daily do admirable credit to their military virtues, their professional competence and their dedication to the career of arms; who behave and will behave with discipline, loyalty and trust in their commanders; who have the firm resolve to take responsibility together for the defense of the prestige of Spain; and who have rejected with indignation this conspiracy against the freedom and the dignity of the Spanish people.

Finally, I wish to tell you that the government's action in this case was based exclusively and solely on the defense of the supreme interests of the state and the democratic institutions in order to prevent anything paralyzing or disrupting the electoral process which we are now going through. It is in the firmness of this conviction, and in trust in the democratic institutions and justice, that our guarantees lie and always will. Thank you very much.

Details of Coup Plan

[Excerpts] In 19 days and at this time of day "operation MN," "Operation (Marte)" -- not "Operation Cervantes" as the press has been calling it -- would have been well under way. Using the element of surprise, at 1000 a communique would have been read out from this radio station announcing the establishment of a military junta. The day of reflection [just before elections] 27 Oct, would have become a day of retrogression.

This is the objective cited in the 504 handwritten pages seized from Col Munoz Gutierrez after his arrest last Saturday. Five hundred pages. This is sufficient evidence for the examining judge to issue indictments and order provisional imprisonment on the grounds that there are reasonable indications of the offense of conspiracy to military rebellion.

Five hundred pages, a plan -- according to sources an as-yet incomplete plan -- to neutralize the power centers in Madrid, declare a state of war in the 1st Military Region and isolate the capital of Spain. Then, according to the (?text) by Munoz, the other military regions were to follow suit.

Operation "(Marte)" or "MN" -- perhaps National Movement [Movimiento Nacional] -- as it is called in the seized documents, would have been carried out by between 70 and 100 commando groups, each comprising from 4 to 40 men. The main places to be taken over were four ministries -- defense, interior, foreign affairs and culture -- the news media -- including newspapers, magazines, radio and television stations -- the Zarzuela [royal residence] and Moncloa Palaces [prime minister's residence] and the captaincy-general of Madrid. At the same time the main political leaders, members of the autonomous governments and public figures would be held at their homes. The possibility that arms have been used was not ruled out.

Interior Minister Roson said yesterday that it would not have been a bloodless coup. "Operation (Marte) MN" included a plan for the psychological orientation of the public via the creation of situations of instability and even (?unlimited actions) provoked by the conspirators as a result of any acts of terrorism that might taken place. However, it has been denied that the coup attempt had any connection with the rumors of preparations for alleged attack on Former Prime Minister Suarez. It is possible that the recent bomb attacks attributed to GRAPO [1st of October Antifascist Resistance Groups] could have been perpetrated by coupist elements.

There is no mention in the seized documents of either the air force, the navy or the state security corps -- in principle, support would have come exclusively from the army. Moreover, the signs are that neither Colonel Munoz nor the Crespo Cuspinera brothers were the ringleaders of "MN," but rather were links in a chain. The text of the plan speaks of installing a new captain-general in the 1st Military Region, but does not mention any name.

CALVO-SOTELO DENOUNCES DELAY IN EEC ENTRY

[Text] Madrid, 10 Oct (EFE) -- Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, who has returned from an official visit to Denmark, today voiced his dissatisfaction with what he termed an unacceptable delay in Spain's entry to the European Economic Community (EEC).

"Despite the repeated assurances that the EEC member countries have periodically given to Spain," he said, "the truth is that the negotiations have been characterized by slow proceedings and delayed decisions." "This delay," he noted, "is not acceptable to the Spanish Government. It cannot be explained to the Spanish or European publics, and it cannot be justified on political or technical grounds."

"It is not politically justifiable," he said "because Spain has an accepted and unquestioned right to take its place in the building of Europe. The technical reasons and arguments that have been given for the delay are no justification and are not convincing."

"The Community," he added, "would be assuming a serious historical responsibility if it did not accept, above all present difficulties, giving a new and decisive push for the entry of Spain."

Nonetheless, Calvo-Sotelo stressed that Belgium and Denmark have clearly demonstrated their political will to facilitate Spain's entry into the EEC and have expressed hope for progress in the negotiations.

FINLAND

NO INVITATION TO PLO'S 'ARAFAT FOR VISIT

PM111537 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Unattributed report: "Virolainen Will Not Invite Yasir 'Arafat]

[Excerpt] Finnish Eduskunta Speaker Johannes Virolainen will not be inviting PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat to Finland. Yesterday afternoon, Virolainen announced after discussing the matter with Foreign Minister Par Stenback that he does not consider himself able to act as host.

The speaker refused to comment in greater detail on his brief announcement, which merely stated that "after having studied the matter" he is unable to assume the task of inviting the PLO leader.

The decisive factor would seem to have been the announcement that the government does not expressly advocate an invitation to 'Arafat. According to the agreement reached Monday and yesterday among the foreign minister, the prime minister and the president, the matter will not be raised again within the government.

SORSA WELCOMES CSSR PREMIER STROUGAL ON ARRIVAL

[Text] Czechoslovak Premier Lubomir Strougal has begun his 2-day official visit to Finland. Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa welcomed his visitor at Helsinki-Vantaa Airport. Foreign Minister Par Stenback was also present. President Mauno Koivisto received Premier Strougal at the president's palace half an hour ago. A luncheon given by the president in honor of the Czechoslovak premier is to begin in a few moments' time. The talks between Premier Strougal and Prime Minister Sorsa will follow after the luncheon. A protocol designed to balance and develop trade between our countries in 1982-85 will be signed later today.

Cooperation Agreement Signed

LD112144 Helsinki International Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] A program aimed at balancing Finnish-Czechoslovak trade was signed just over an hour ago in Helsinki. The program was signed by Czechoslovak Premier Lubomir Strougal, who arrived in Finland today, and Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa. Premier Strougal is now describing the program to the media. Our reporter, Hannu Reime, is at the press conference.

[Reime] Premier Strougal concentrated chiefly on explaining the content of the agreement at a press conference in Helsinki which is still in progress. According to Strougal, this is the first agreement of its kind signed by Czechoslovakia with a market economy country. It applies both to bilateral economic and commercial projects, and to joint projects in third countries. The agreement forms a framework for the expansion and balancing of trade, but does not contain any detailed regulations or agreements on economic projects. Of these, the Czechoslovaks have presented the Finns with a list containing the projects of interest to the Czechoslovaks.

The agreement covers the period from the current year to 1985, and it includes, among other things, an agreement on trade credit which is to be increased five-fold.

Among individual deals, Premier Strougal mentioned the modernization of the machines at a paper mill in the town of Hostim in Eastern Bohemia. The value of the deliveries is about $4 million. The Finnish-Czechoslovak mixed commission will work to expand the list of cooperation projects and to confirm the projects. All in all Premier Strougal believes the agreement will balance Finnish-Czechoslovak trade, which so far has shown a considerable deficit for Finland.

Premier Strougal was also asked about the effects of the Polish situation on Czechoslovakia. According to him, events in Poland have no political effects on Czechoslovakia, although relations between the two countries are very close. Strougal regarded the recent development in Poland as positive from his point of view but added that he had no illusions about it.

RADIO, TV OFFICIAL DENIES USSR PROPAGANDA CLAIMS

[Text] The Finnish Broadcasting Company [Yleisradio] has refuted allegations published in a Tallinn afternoon paper that Finnish television programs are designed to influence the opinions of the Soviet people. The Tallinn afternoon paper says in its article published a few days ago that Finland has directed an ideological weapon against socialist ideas. The article says that Finland acts in cooperation with the United States. The article claims that the American RCA Company built the Finnish television transmission aerial in order to extend the coverage area toward the south.

Yleisradio Director General Sakari Kiuri notes that Yleisradio produces programs only for the Finns and does not try to influence other countries. Director General Kiuru says also that the transmitting equipment in question has been manufactured by German and Japanese companies and that its power level is in accordance with international agreements. The Yleisradio management is astonished at the article published by the Tallinn paper and empahsizes that the company's relations with neighboring countries are in good order in every way.

MINISTERS VOTE AGAINST ECONOMIC PACKAGE

[Text] The Finnish markka is to be devalued by 6 percent. Today's economic decisions have led to a government crisis, as the People's Democrats and Communists voted against them. Our political editor, Heikki Kymalainen reports:

We now have the news that at the session of the Council of State, which ended a moment ago, the government approved the devaluation and the economic package linked with it by votes 14-2. The two opposing votes belong to the Finnish People's Democratic League [SDKL], Ministers Jarmo Wahlstrom and Jouko Kajanoja.

A cabinet meeting is now in progress at which the documents and bills that have been drawn up over the weekend will receive their final blessing. By these economic solutions, the majority of the government believes it is able to carry on until March next year.

The information received in the afternoon that Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa has made the devaluation and the economic package into a government issue has not so far given rise to any conclusions. And thus, we do not yet know whether the behavior of the SKDL ministers can lead to a government crisis. Minister Kajanoja said a moment ago that the prime minister has asked the Finnish Communist Party and SKDL leaderships to participate in negotiations. Sorsa will, however, have to wait till the SKDL chairman, Kalevi Kivisto, returns home from abroad. This will probably happen tomorrow. The government will take 30 minutes to present its decision on devaluation at the banquet rooms of the Council of State.

NORWAY

SJAASTAD SCORES LABOR PARTY EUROMISSILE STANCE

PM081329 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Oct 82 p 3

[Norwegian Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad interview with Terje Svaboe: "The Labor Party Misinformed About NATO?"]

[Text] "Both Belgium and the Netherlands are paying their part of the NATO infrastructure program. It is wrong of Labor Party parliamentary leader Gro Harlem Brudtland to claim that Norway would be a 'spearhead' if we were now to begin to allocate funds to meet our share of the expernses incurred in the preparations for possible future missile deployment." This was stressed by Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad in an interview with AFTENPOSTEN. Sjaastad said that Norwegians were confusing the debate in the two countries about deploying missiles on their territory with the commitment to accept one's share of the joint expenses.

It was in connection with the Labor Party's "turnabout" on the missile issue that it was said that Norway would be moving ahead of Belgium and the Netherlands if a decision were now made to allocate funds for the possible future deployment of new missiles in Western Europe. Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad told AFTENPOSTEN:

"If Norway were not now to pay its share of the costs, Norway would be the only country not fulfilling the commitments laid down in the 1979 NATO dual decision. Thus Norway is not in a situation where it could find itself some sort of 'spearhead' but on the contrary, would be the only country not allocating the necessary funds."

The defense minister said that Norway would be meeting around 3 percent of the cost of the preparations for missile deployment. Belgium and the Netherlands are paying their share. He pointed out that it would seen this fact is being confused with the debate taking place in the two countries about whether the missiles should be deployed in Belgium and the Netherlands or not.

[Question] Does the new Labor Party position amount to a break with the 1979 dual decision?

[Answer] One of the foundations for the decision was that NATO would begin preparations for possible deployment to show that it would move to such a step if necessary. Such an approach lends the NATO dual decision greater credibility.

[Question] And this means that the Labor Party's national executive is moving away from commitments which the party's own governments have made?

[Answer] It could appear that way but I think that the move from the Labor Party is based on incorrect information about what is happening in the other NATO nations and not on a desire to run away from earlier commitments.

[Question] What coments do you have to make about the claim that the government is presenting proposals for fund allocations to the Storting in order to put the opposition in a tight spot?

[Answer] This is a claim that I thought we had done away with this spring. We have been giving regular reports on the costs of the NATO infrastructure program. [answer ends]

Since the Labor Party statement, there has been much interest in what effect it could have on the stances of the parties of the center. When the matter was discussed this spring, three deputies from the Christian People's Party and two from the Center Party voted against following up the dual decision. AFTENPOSTEN has spoken to several representatives of these two parties, but there is little to indicate that the Labor Party's "turnabout" will lead to more members from the parties of the center expressing opposition to the fund allocations.

Storting Deputy Ragnhild Q. Haarstad (Center Party) voted against the allocations this spring and told AFTENPOSTEN that she has not changed her mind. She takes the view that the government should now withdraw its proposal that funds be allocated. Ragnhild Q. Haarstad will not change her position even if this means that her vote could lead to the government's being faced with a majority against it in the Storting.

"This is not a question of tactics, but of realities. I am counting on Prime Minister Willoch having the wisdom not to make the life of the government depend on an issue of this nature," Ragnhild Q. Haarstad said.

LABOR PARTY PAPER ON FUNDS FOR MISSILE DEPLOYMENT

PM111451 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 2 Oct 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Missile Wisdom"]

[Text] At the joint meeting between the Labor Party National Executive and Storting group yesterday, there was full agreement that Norway should at the present time not make any allocations of actual funds for the possible future deployment of new NATO nuclear missiles in Europe. This means that the Labor Party will oppose a proposal from the government for such allocations.

The Labor Party's position is logical when viewed against the background of the issue's previous history and the developments which have taken place since the so-called dual decision taken by NATO in December 1979. It does not represent any break with Norwegian security policy, but is the result of the traditional role we have played on such issues. The point of departure for this role is Norway's base and nuclear policy.

It is well-known that the Nordli government attached great importance to the fact that the duel decision had two sides to it: The decision in favor of negotiations was just as important as the decision in favor of deployment. The Labor Party has seen it as its special duty to influence the negotiations section of the decision. The procedure to be followed is that before the end of 1983, when a final decision will be made about deployment, the results of the Geneva negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe will be evaluated. The question of deployment will be evaluated in the light of these negotiations.

We are dealing here with a delicate situation, a situation which at the same time is of vital importance to all of us. For the Labor Party an important point is that Norway must behave the whole time in a manner which will not reduce the chances of progress in the talks.

When the dual decision was adopted in December 1979, Norway stressed that deployment should not be automatic but that the need for deployment should be assessed in relation to the results of the Geneva negotiations. In addition, special attention should be paid to the assessments of the other NATO nations directly affected by the decisions. In other words, countries which -- unlike Norway -- are to have or already have nuclear arms on their territory.

The debate on nuclear missiles in Europe is not the same today as it was in 1979. The peace movement which has grown up both in Europe and the United States has had an effect on political life. It is a force which responsible politicians cannot simply ignore. The new situation is one of the reasons why countries like Belgium and the Netherlands, where some of the new missiles are earmarked for deployment, have still not made the constitutional decisions necessary and naturally have not allocated any money to this end. In the Netherlands the question is also on the agenda of the current government formation negotiations.

In such a situation, it would be a break with all Norwegian security policy traditions if we moved ahead and were a so-called "spearhead" on an issue such as this. We see no good reason why Norway -- of all the NATO nations -- should allocate funds to NATO's joint finances for the preparations for possible deployment before the countries which are directly affected take such a step. And so that there is no misunderstanding, we stress, as did Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland, that it is not the money which is the main concern here, but the political effect such a budget allocation could have.

In the present situation surrounding the missile question, it is the Labor Party's view that Norway should adopt a more wait-and-see attitude than the government is clearly planning. For this reason, the Labor Party Storting group will give its support in some form or other to attempts to have the question of fund allocation postponed this fall.

The Labor Party's position has been reached on the basis of a detailed assessment of what it is right for Norway to do on this issue. The party will attempt to win a majority in the Storting for such a view. We hope that none of the parties in the Storting -- and certainly not the governing party — will go on the defensive and refuse to look at the question afresh. In itself, the Labor Party position could unite the whole Storting behind it.

IRAN DIPLOMAT: IRANIAN EMBASSIES 'SPY CENTERS'

NC081416 Paris AFP in English 1357 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Oslo, Oct 8 (AFP) -- An Iranian diplomat in Oslo who asked for political asylum yesterday in Norway, said today that Iranian embassies in Scandinavia and elsewhere were used as spy centers against opponents of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni's regime. "These embassies are used as bases for Khomeyni's gestapo -- people without any diplomatic experience who see persecution of opponents of Khomeyni as their only job," the former charge d'affaires of Iran in Oslo, Parvi Khazai, told a press conference here today.

He alleged that the charge d'affaires at the Iranian Embassy in Stockholm, Kalanter Nia, had participated in the occupation of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, starting on November 4, 1979. Mr. Nia was described as a terrorist who had organised attacks on Iranian students in Sweden.

Mr. Khazi said he decided to defect after an ardent supporter of Ayatollah Khomeyni had arrived in Oslo from Stockholm on Thursday and was appointed the new attache at the Oslo embassy.

A spokesman for the Norwegian Foreign Ministry said last night that Mr. Khazai would have no problem in getting permission to stay. Mr. Khazai had spent two years with Iran's embassy in Oslo and prior to that one year in Stockholm. While in charge at the embassy in Oslo, he had sabotaged instructions from the Foreign Ministry in Tehran, Mr. Khazai said.

He alleged that many of the bombing incidents in Iran have been arranged by Ayatollah Khomeyni's people to hurt the resistance movement. Many of the death attempts were carried out prior to international conferences where criticism of the situation in Iran could be expected, he added. Iranian embassies were instructed to use these death attempts in their propaganda activities, he said. He said he had once received such instructions by Telex.

SWEDEN

STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER PALME TO RIKSDAG

LD081012 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 0800 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Government statement delivered by Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme at the Riksdag in Stockholm on 8 October]

[Excerpts] In accordance with the directions of the form of government, I will now announce to the Riksdag the names of the ministers who will form the government with me:

Deputy Prime Minister	Ingvar Carlsson
Minister of Justice	Ove Rainer
Minister of Foreign Affairs & Trade	Lennart Bodstrom
Minister of Defense	Borje Andersson
Minister of Social Affairs	Sten Andersson
Minister of Communications	Curt Bostrom
Minister of Economy & Budget	Kjell-Olof Feldt
Minister of Education	Lena Hjelm-Wallen
Minister of Agriculture	Svante Lundkvist
Minister of Labor	Anna-Greta Leijon
Minister of Housing	Hans Gustafsson
Minister of Industry	Thage Peterson
Minister of Civil Service Affairs	Bo Holmberg
Ministers without Portfolio	Gertrud Sigurdsen
	Bengt Goransson
	Anita Gradin
	Birgitta Dahl
	Roine Carlsson

The government will later, after talks in accordance with the codetermination law, make proposals for certain changes in the organization of the ministries. This is expected, among other things, to mean that the Ministries of the Economy, Budget, Trade and Civil Service Affairs will be abolished and that two new ministries [names indistinct], will be established. The Riksdag will be informed about this in the prescribed manner.

The government will firmly and determinedly observe the policy of neutrality. This independent policy supported by a strong defense contributes to peace and stability in Northern Europe. If war threatens, a strong defense will help us preserve peace. Swedish territory will be protected against violations with all available means. The trust in our will and ability to preserve our neutrality must be maintained. Neither fears nor expectations must be created that Sweden will give up its neutrality even under strong external pressure.

The Swedish nation stands united by the basic lines of this foreign policy, it is an invaluable resource which must be preserved.

In the Nordic countries there are no nuclear weapons. The government regards it as important that this situation continue. The government is striving for agreements which, among other things, will make the North a nuclear-free zone. Such agreements will reduce tension between the blocs and lessen the risk of the Nordic countries becoming objects of nuclear attacks.

The arms race continues and is increasing. It swallows a frighteningly large part of the economic and technical resources required for the fight against mass unemployment and mass [word indistinct]. The government will conduct an active policy of peace, which among other things, aims at promoting real disarmament.

Violence rules in many parts of the world. International law is violated by attacks across borders. Agreements banning the use of torture and providing protection for civilians are deliberately broken. The decisions of the UN Security Council are ignored. For a country such as Sweden, this is a dangerous development. The government will strongly maintain the principles of coexistence between nations written in the United Nations Charter.

It will work for a strengthening of the possibilities of the United Nations to eliminate the threats against peace and to intervene in the violations of peace.

We want to show openness toward the rest of the world, and we are prepared to take part in extensive international cooperation. With our Nordic neighbors, we want to further develop the lasting, close and extensive contacts. We want to investigate what can be done to promote further cultural exchanges. Through our joint efforts we want to obtain the greatest possible benefit from our economic and technical resources.

The government intends to promote all-European cooperation with the European Security Conference, and work to continue the policy of detente in Europe. Expanded cooperation between the European countries is necessary in order to break the economic crisis and to reduce the frighteningly high unemployment. On the basis of our cooperation in the North, within EFTA and our free trade agreement with the EEC, we want to increase the exchange of experience and seek agreements for mutual benefit.

Many Third World nations are still fighting for independence, and fighting against internal and external oppression; these nations have our support. Distress prevails in the large majority of the developing countries. The richer countries have a duty to take part in the fight against distress. We must do this in a spirit of solidarity, and also because we know that the anxiety and despair created by distress and injustices threaten to lead to violence and war. The North and South have a common interest in promoting economic development and a more just world order.

A generous policy with regard to refugees is an important expression of international solidarity translated into practical action. The government will strongly work against those tendencies toward racism and discrimination against immigrants which have recently manifested themselves in the Swedish society.

The government will implement the 1982 defense decisions, an immediate analysis will be made of the economy of the JAS project [planned new military aircraft].

Mr Speaker. The new government takes office in a situation that is extremely serious for the country. The economy has weakened over several years, and during 1982 the downward trend has grown stronger. There is no brightening on the horizon in either the domestic or international economies.

The situation in the Swedish economy is marked by basic structural imbalances. Our exchange of goods and services with the rest of the world continues to show a deficit. The deficit in the state budget continues to grow. Since the middle of the 1970's, industrial employment has decreased by 160,000 persons. The volume of investments had decreased by one-third. Industrial production development has been weaker than in any other comparable country. The continuing industrial decline means that the base on which our prosperity is built is being undermined at the same time that our ability to repay foreign loans is being reduced.

The employment situation is now deteriorating most rapidly. Unemployment will reach new record levels, the number of available jobs is falling. [Words indistinct] not yet seen the full effects of the past few years' policy of savings and cuts. For a considerable time to come, the labor market will have lingering effects from the policy conducted until now.

To go further along this path would mean a continued rapid increase in unemployment. To counteract this the authorities would be forced to undertake massive support measures to keep industry alive. Sweden would to a growing degree have to [word indistinct] with an economy maintained by state subsidies. Sweden as an industrial nation would be threatened and the growing foreign debt would gradually undermine our national independence.

The economic policy must now be reorganized. We must try to stop the present decline and put wind in the sails of the Swedish economy.

The economic policy now recommended by the government has as its goals: First, to mobilize the whole nation and all our resources in the fight against unemployment; of particular importance is to limit youth unemployment. The majority of the people in our country should agree that one of the most important things in our society is for young people to have work. It is important that young people should not have to feel as if they are standing outside society. Second, to create a balance in our economy and reduce the need to borrow abroad. A central link in this work is to strengthen and develop the industrial basis of our economy. The burdens that will be necessary to safeguard employment and our economic independence, must be borne by all groups in society and must be shared. Third, to fight inflation. The other goals of our economic policy cannot be reached in the long run unless we get the high price (?increases) under control.

Mr. Speaker. The board of governors of the Bank of Sweden decided this morning to lower the value of the Swedish krona by 16 percent. This measure aims at creating confidence in the Swedish krona, and at improving the competiveness of the economy both in the international markets and the domestic market. Together with an aggressive policy of investment, this will properly stimulate Swedish industry. The devaluation means that the level of costs and profitability of the enterprises will improve greatly. The elimination of industrial capacity and employment -- which continues at present -- will be halted and preconditions will be created for increased production, investments and increased employment over the long run.

In order to achieve these goals and to make the devaluation acceptable [word indistinct], forms of profitsharing will be proposed, the taxation of property will be increased and the subsidizing of shareowning will be limited. Further, special measures to protect vulnerable groups such as families with children, will be considered. The devaluation will temporarily raise the (?rate) of price increases in the Swedish economy. It will lead to a certain lowering of real wages and consequently a lowering of the standard of living. This is a necessary precondition for an increase in production and employment in industry and for a reduction in our foreign trade deficit. It is proposed as a necessary sacrifice in order to repair the Swedish economy following the developments of the past few years. Attempts to compensate for the once-only adaptation resulting from the devaluation will only lead to lasting high inflation and falling employment. [sentence as heard]

The government has no doubts about the Swedish people's readiness to make sacrifices provided they give results and are equally shared. The reduction in the value of the krona must be followed by a tight finance and budget policy. The government intends to implement a strict scrutiny of expenditures in the coming budget work. Certain taxes will have to be increased; an important part in the work to improve the state finances is a reduction of subsidies to the economy. Through the devaluation of the krona -- and other measures which the government intends to take -- the preconditions will be created for us to free ourselves from the policy of subsidies.

The government intends to propose an extensive program of increased investments, mainly in the areas of transportation, construction, energy and environmental protection. A special program for the modernization of and additional construction to existing housing will be formulated. The government intends to invest in a better utilization of Sweden's own raw material resources. In order that the forestry industry will be able to obtain the raw materials required, measures will be taken to achieve increased timber-felling within the framework of lasting and economically sound forest management.

An investment and development program for the mining and minerals industry will also be formulated.

The government will contribute to a balanced growth of the public sector. Work will be resumed for an expansion and improvement of childcare and care for the elderly. In order to stop the increase in unemployment as soon as possible, the government intends to implement with all its strength, labor market measures. Above all, measures will be taken to reduce the high youth unemployment. The government wants to create good preconditions in order that the municipalities and the participants in the labor market will be able to contribute actively to the fight against youth unemployment.

A central part of the government's economic policy is that the temporary price increases, resulting from the devaluation, will be succeeded by a determined fight against inflation.

It includes the expectation of the development of costs and the fight against a speculation economy. A general price freeze is introduced in order to limit price increases in connection with the devaluation.

An increased accumulation of capital is a basic condition in the long run for the realization of a good economic development and for the safeguarding of future employment. Such an accumulation of capital can be realized only through the cooperation of the wage earners. In this respect, the wage earners will directly contribute to the new investments, which can ensure employment, incomes and the social welfare in the future. (?From) this it follows that the wage earners, through the wage earners' funds, must be able to influence the use of the resources.

The government will invite those connected with the labor market, economic life and others concerned, to talks regarding the formulation of an increased accumulation of capital with the cooperation of wage earners, as well as regarding the continued direction of the economic policy.

The small and medium-sized enterprises form an important part of the Swedish economy. A large part of the development and renewal, which is necessary in industry, will occur in the smaller enterprises. The government will make proposals for investments in the small and medium-sized enterprises.

While measures are taken to strengthen and develop existing industries, purposeful investments are necessary for the long-term development and expansion of industrial and technological expertise. High-level technical research and development work is a necessary precondition for such a development. This applies even to basic research within the natural sciences and biosciences. In a democratic society, research in social sciences is of great value. It is important that the resources intended for research and development are used in the best possible way. A thorough coordination of research resources will therefore be an important part of the government's work.

An important part in the work to reduce the trade deficit with the rest of the world is to reduce our dependence on oil. This task, together with the task of gradually abolishing nuclear power, will place great demands on the energy policy. Strong measures must be taken quickly to conserve energy and to develop new alternatives to replace nuclear power and oil. Swedish industry has an important role in this task.

Economic development over the past few years has caused worries even in the area of agriculture, both for certain farmers, especially newly-established ones, and for the consumers. It is now (?our) task to guide the different links in our food supply with the purpose of forming an overall food production policy.

The labor market is shaky in the whole country. The situation in Norrbotten is especially serious. Therefore, a development program for Norrbotten will be introduced.

There is no room for costly reforms in the social services. Therefore, the government's efforts must primarily be directed at defending those forms of security the dismantling of which has begun over the past few years.

Equal sharing demands that society makes sure that some people will not be able to escape their share of responsibility. The government will intensify the fight against economic crimes and tax fraud. A special commission will be appointed to lead this work.

An important task for the new government, even in times of economic crisis, is to support good social and cultural conditions for children and young people to grow up in. In order to coordinate the government's efforts for children and young people, a special delegation will be appointed.

Drug abuse is growing and has become an increasing problem for both individuals and the whole society. Strong countermeasures must be taken. The government will convene a special commission for the fight against drug abuse.

The protection of the environment, at places of work, in the home, in nature, is an important part of the government's policy. A commission on toxic substances and chemicals will be appointed to deal with problems resulting from the increased use of chemicals. Strong measures both on a national and international scale are required to fight against acidification as well as air pollution caused by industry and traffic.

The problems, anxieties and insecurities can be effectively met only through a uniting of forces to get Sweden going. We must increase production, we must increase productivity, we must work together more, in order to create a better future. These are good preconditions for political and economic progress.

NAVY DROPS DEPTH CHARGE ON UNIDENTIFIED OBJECT

[Text] Stockholm, Oct 11 (AFP) -- The Swedish Navy aimed a depth charge today at an unidentified object at the bottom of a fjord near the secret naval base of Muskoe, a military spokesman said.

Captain Sven Carlsonn said the Navy, which has been searching for a foreign submarine in coastal waters for the past 10 days, detonated an underwater explosion at a target outside the submarine trap.

The spokesman refused to give the exact location of the explosion or confirm whether the target was in fact a submarine, saying only that searches had undertaken an intensive examination of the explosion debris.

The latest Swedish Navy revelation heightened warning interest in the search for the mystery submarine, which is feared to have escaped the trap set in Hors Fjord.

Captain Carlson added that for the past 48 hours, searchers had received no sonar signal indicating the presence of the submarine in the area. Last night a high-ranking defense spokesman said the probability of the submarine still being in Swedish waters diminished daily.

ARMED FORCES' LENNART LJUNG ON STRATEGIC THREAT

[Swedish Armed Forces Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung "Focus" article: "We Are Increasingly Affected by Pact Interest -- passages in capitals printed in boldface]

[Text] There have been periods in our history when it has been natural to answer the question "who is threatening Sweden?" with an unambiguous reply pointing to a particular country or the leader of a particular nation as the party most closely responsible. Today things are not so easy. There is hardly a single country or a single individual who could be said to be the only or the major threat either to world peace or to our country.

The superpowers and the major military blocs doubtless do have various ambitions which in a given situation could also lead to tangible risks for small nonaligned nations. But their actions are to agreat extent determined by their relationship to each other. Even though you might want to increase your field of influence, you have in the majority of cases to take into consideration how steps to this end are viewed by the other superpower or power bloc.

NATO and the Warsaw Pact have built up a military security system in Europe which with all its weaknesses and inbuilt risks, nevertheless amounts to a balance which in many cases seems to function as a stabilizing and peace-preserving factor. This is a balance which cannot be weighed on sensitive scales and cannot be measured weapon against weapon; but it does still exist as a rough measure. We can regret the fact that peace and security have to be based on military materiel, and it is possible to work to find other solutions, but realistically we have to accept that this situation is going to last for a long time to come.

NATO-Warsaw Pact as a security system chiefly affects Europe. It is difficult to imagine that either side would DELIBERATELY start a war against the other in the present situation. Awareness of the appalling consequences of such a war in Europe is doubtless considerable on both sides and must therefore have a strong deterrent effect.

But a European war -- into which we could also be drawn -- could arise without fundamental intention or any desire to start it. It seems more correct to ask WHAT is threatening the peace in our part of the world than to ask WHO is threatening it. This does not, of course, exclude the possibility that one or other of the superpowers could be making a greater contribution than the other to the creation of situations which release the risk of war.

What is it then that could increase the likelihood of a military threat to Sweden? The list of causes could doubtless be made very long, and I will make do with pointing out some circumstances which could be of special interest.

Major tangible disturbances in the reciprocal total military balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact -- in both nuclear and conventional arms -- seem to involve particular risks. If one of the superpowers is given the idea that it would "win" a war in Europe with limited losses on its own side, the restraining factors decrease and then the superior party could seem a threat not only to its main opponent but also to countries outside the pacts.

Of course, it is generally sufficient that one side believe that it is greatly superior for danger to arise. This is one of the reasons why open and truthful reports of military strength on both sides are so important.

It must be pointed out that the preservation of this balance does not exclude the possibility of arms limitations. For obvious reasons such agreements are of the greatest importance.

The military balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact is important for us not only as a general stabilizing factor. With such a balance, the main opponents' forces are to a large extent, tied to each other in crisis and war situations and the conditions for major military actions against Sweden are reduced. This increases our chances of keeping out of a war, always assuming that we have a defense force which is strong enough. Thus in certain situations such a tangible imbalance also increases the direct threat to Sweden.

But even if the internal military balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact can be maintained, this does not exlude the possibility of open military conflicts in Europe and threats to the peace of Northern Europe. And there is also a great risk that extra-European conflicts, which one or both of the superpowers is participating in or is drawn into -- directly or indirectly -- is transferred to Europe.

It seems as if the superpowers are finding it more and more difficult to control conflicts in various parts of the world. Their ability to exert pressure does not seem as great as it was in relation to the situations which have caused the problems. The examples of Afghanistan, Central America, Iran-Iraq and Israel-Arab nations point clearly to a tendency toward "disobedience" with respect to superpower influence. There is a growing risk that such conflicts could escalate and spread. They could even constitute a threat to peace in Europe.

The degree of threat to Sweden's security is also dependent on the importance Swedish territory could have for NATO and the Warsaw Pact in the event of an open conflict in Europe.

Unfortunately we are forced to note that military interest in Northern Europe has increased. The Soviet naval buildup in the Barents Sea and the Baltic may be assumed to have a cause unconnected with the situation in our immediate area, but it does nevertheless have an effect on the military situation in the Nordic area.

Developments have also led to a situation in which NATO has increased its ability to establish an early military presence in the Nordic area through the measures for the contingency stockpiling of military equipment in central Norway.

The growing presence of nuclear-armed Soviet submarines in the Baltic is alarming.

The development of cruise missiles which could be operated across Swedish territory could in the long term lead to a new type of threat.

We are forced to take the surveillance and maneuver activity constantly taking place in and across the Baltic and North Sea areas from both the NATO and Warsaw Pact sides as an expression of strong interest in these sea areas and their immediate surroundings.

The repeated serious violations by submarines must not only be seen as extraordinarily threatening peacetime violations of Swedish territory: They must represent operations which foreign powers could find it useful to carry out against us in a war situation.

In the light of present circumstances, it is difficult to draw any conclusion other than that Sweden is affected to a greater extent than in the past by the interests of the military superpowers. It is also reasonable that this should influence our threat scenario and should require particular attention when we come to determine the size and shape of our defenses. Weak defenses, or defenses unable to instill respect during peacetime -- that is, seem credible in the eyes of outsiders -- increase the risk of threats being translated into facts.

Here I have touched only on a military threat to Sweden and included only some views on what could give rise to such a threat. This does not mean that I underestimate other types of threats to which we could be subjected -- those of an economic or psychological nat-re, for instance.

However, in my opinion, the military threat has dimensions different from those of other forms of threats. If the military threat is put into practice, our independence as a nation and our freedom as individuals are immediately and drastically put at risk. It is, therefore, necessary that measures designed to meet these threats be given the highest priority.

DECISION ON JAS WING CONFIGURATION NEEDED

PM111033 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 30 Sep 82 p 6

[Sven Svensson report: "Decision Now Needed on JAS Wing Design"]

[Excerpt] The new Swedish combat aircraft, the JAS, will be an immediate hot potato for the new Social Democratic government. In a few weeks' time, the government must decide what type of wing the new aircraft will be equipped with.

During the election campaign, Olaf Palme said that the Riksdag decision to build the JAS will not be scrapped. However, the project must be kept within its projected budget of 25.7 billion kronor up to the year 2000. Certain technical changes could be made to avoid overstepping the budget.

In the contract which has already been signed, there is an option for a so-called Rockwell wing. This would make the project more expensive by several hundred million kronor but would give the aircraft improved pursuit capability.

The group of firms collaborating on the JAS project will present a tender for the Rockwell wing to the Defense Ministry by 1 October. This tender is expected to remain in force for a month. For this reason the government will have to reach some far-reaching decisions about the JAS in the next few weeks, since the aircraft's wing construction plays an important part in determining the aircraft's configuration in several other respects.

A transition from the conventional wing being used in the basic model of the aircraft to a Rockwell wing for better pursuit capability will effect a number of subsidiary systems in the aircraft. If the wing type has not been chosen, it is impossible to decide which landing system should be selected or where various components are to be situated in the body of the aircraft.

KIPRIANOU MAKES STATEMENT ON RETURN FROM UN

[Statement made by Spiros Kiprianou, president of Cyprus, at Larnaca Airport on 9 October following his return to Cyprus from New York — recorded]

[Text] In New York, where, as is well-known, I addressed the UN General Assembly, I had a number of contacts on the Cyprus problem. I had a very long talk with the UN secretary general, exchanging views on the current stage of the Cyprus problem and on the steps that should be taken to promote a solution in accordance with UN resolutions. Final conclusions were not made; we will stay in touch with the UN secretary general and consultations will continue. However, the discussion was very useful and I must stress the UN secretary general's vivid interest in the Cyprus question.

The first issue we discussed with the secretary general was that of missing persons. Perez de Cuellar is very greatly interested in this issue and, despite existing difficulties, he is making every effort to overcome and finally find a way out of this problem so that the tracing of the missing persons' fate can begin as soon as possible. We discussed all aspects of the Cyprus problem.

We also talked with the president of the UN General Assembly, with whom we discussed the issue of the debate on the Cyprus problem to be held at this year's session of the UN General Assembly. There will be absolutely no difficulty for the General Assembly debate on the Cyprus problem that is planned for next March.

We discussed the latest developments with the Nonaligned Movement's contact group, and the contact group reiterated its full support for Cypriot positions. I expect the nonaligned summit conference, which will take place in New Delhi in early March, to be exceptionally interesting in every respect, especially regarding the Cyprus problem. I believe that the result will be satisfactory for Cyprus to such an extent that it will influence the debate and the outcome of the debate on the Cyprus problem at the UN General Assembly, given the fact that the conference will precede the General Assembly debate.

I had various other contacts with foreign ministers and representatives from different countries. Among these contacts, there was a meeting with USSR Foreign Secretary Gromyko, who reiterated his country's positions toward the Cyprus problem -- basically, support for implementing the UN resolutions. We exchanged various views both on the developments of the Cyprus problem and on international issues. I believe the meeting was very useful and that it will contribute to even further cooperation between the two countries.

I also had a meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz. It was our first meeting since he assumed his duties. I was given the opportunity to analyze the Cyprus problem for him in great detail -- all of the problem's aspects and our viewpoints. It was a constructive talk; it was a useful talk, I would say, as Shultz himself described it. During our meeting, Shultz expressed his country's appreciation -- which, after all, is a general appreciation -- of the role Cyprus played during the recent tragic events in the Middle East, especially those in Lebanon.

During my stay in New York, I met with the president of AHEPA [American Hellenic Educational and Progressive Association], the president of the Federation of Cypriot Associations, Archbishop Iakovos and other representatives of Greek Cypriots living in the United States; and with representatives of the mass media, to whom I put forth our thoughts and views on the Cyprus problem. I believe that this visit to New York was useful in every respect in promoting our national cause.

KIPRIANOU ANSWERS QUERIES ON UN TALKS, ASALA

NC082102 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou gave a press conference in New York last night during which, in reply to questions by reporters, he put forth the government's positions on the various aspects of the Cyprus problem. President Kiprianou was introduced to the press conference by Assistant UN Secretary General (Atashi).

In reply to reporter's noting that in a draft plan for a resolution at the nonaligned meeting no mention is made of the intercommunal talks, President Kiprianou said that, basically, the nonaligned countries are dealing with the Cyprus problem's external aspect, which concerns the issue of aggression, the termination of the intervention, the withdrawal of the occupation troops and the demilitarization of Cyprus.

In reply to another question connected with the intercommunal talks, the president said: The talks, which have been going on for a long time, have not produced any results. I do not think that the procedure is to blame. It is the fact that the Turkish side, and when I say the Turkish side I mean Turkey, is continuing to follow a partitionist policy and has not at all abandoned its partitionist philosophy. Consequently, it is obvious from the things that have been said, at least during the last stage of the talks, during which the positions of the two parties became very clear, that we have contrary aims. Whereas we have accepted federation as the internal structure of the Cyprus state and are working on the basis of a federation, the Turkish position has always demonstrated that they seek partition. Regardless of the fact that if one talks of two states with a loose union between them, of two completely separate states, or of division, in any case it concerns a form of partition or a form of solution that could lead to partition with unforeseen consequences for the Cypriot people and the area. The time has come to decide which is the best way to proceed to a solution of the Cyprus problem. I have had some consultations with the secretary general on this issue and we shall continue these consultations.

For our part, we have done everything we could. But let us be realists. In addition to the fact that we are under occupation, something that creates many difficulties, and the fact that the occupation is an unacceptable thing, the fact that Turkey is following a policy of division makes any progress in the talks impossible unless there is a change in its position. I think that a determined effort should be made in Ankara's direction so that it will abandon this position.

In answer to a question about the truth of press reports that President Reagan will perhaps propose his own plan for the solution of the Cyprus problem when the Middle East crisis has subsided, Kiprianou said: There is no plan. This is not true. We shall applaud any effort within the UN framework, especially any effort toward convincing Ankara to abandon its negative policy. It is no secret that the United States has a lever it can use to influence Ankara if it so wants, but this does not mean that initiatives outside the UN framework should be undertaken in the form of plans and so forth.

Then President Kiprianou was asked how he reconciles the positions of the two sides in the intercommunal talks. He replied: The fact is that the Turkish Cypriot leadership receives its instructions from Ankara, and they make no secret about it. Let us not forget that Turkish Cypriots are living in the area currently occupied by Turkish troops. Despite the fact that talks are being held between the two communities, it is absolutely clear that the Turkish Cypriot leadership receives its instructions from the Turkish Government. This is why we are talking of intransigence by Turkey. Let us put the issue another way. Let us suppose that Turkey decides to abandon the philosophy of partition and division. I do not think that any Turkish Cypriot, including Denktas, would be able to oppose this.

In reply to another question, Kiprianou said that the issue of the British bases in Cyprus concerns Cyprus and Britain and does not fall within the framework of the Cyrpus problem as it currently stands. He added that Britain owes Cyprus millions of pounds, not only for the bases but also for the facilities, millions that it has not paid. He also said that the Cypriot Government favors a Cyprus that will be completely demilitarized, but added that this issue is not part of the Cyprus problem.

In response to a question in connection with press reports about the existence on Cypriot soil of bases of the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia and whether he has had contacts with the Turkish Government on this issue, President Kiprianou said: We have been in contact with the United Nations and various governments. The difficulty with the Turkish Government is that, although Turkey has invaded our country, it does not recognize Cyprus. It is the only country in the world that does not recognize Cyprus, despite the fact that it is we who should not recognize it. This, however, is another issue. We are in contact with the United Nations. All the necessary investigations have been carried out. There is nothing of the kind in Cyprus and, of course, all measures are being taken so that nothing of the kind develops. There is an Armenian community that has always existed in Cyprus. There are no armed Armenians in Cyprus.

In reply to a question on whether he expects the Cyrpus problem to be discussed at the current meeting of the General Assembly, Kiprianou said: We intend to have a debate on the Cyprus question during this session, perhaps at a resumed session or an extended session, sometime in March. There are two reasons for this: One is that we shall have presidential elections in February and we do not wish this vital issue to be involved in domestic policy. The other is that the conference of the leaders of states and governments of nonaligned countries will be held in early March in New Delhi, and we believe it would be expedient that a discussion of the Cyprus problem during that conference precede a full discussion at the General Assembly.

Answering another question on why we want the Cyprus problem to be discussed by the General assembly this year while it was not discussed in the last 2 years, the president said: It was not discussed for 2 years in an effort to give as much time as possible to the intercommunal talks so as to ascertain whether progress could be achieved. This does not mean that discussion at the General Assembly is incompatible with the talks in any way. However, in order to avoid situations that could be taken or misinterpreted as creating problems, we thought: Let us not have it discussed for 2 years and let us see whether the talks can produce substantive results. Unfortunately, no substantive results have been achieved and it is our duty to inform the international community of recent developments, brief it on what is happening and try to find ways and means for new decisive efforts through the General Assembly, through the United Nations, toward the direction of a solution of the Cyprus problem in accordance with UN resolutions.

On the repercussions of the Middle East problem on the Cyprus issue, President Kiprianou said in reply to a question: Of course, the Cyprus issue is not part of the Middle East problem. We are very near and we feel the repercussions of the things that are happening in the Middle East, but Cyprus is not part of the Middle East problem. The Cyprus problem is a separate problem between Cyprus and Turkey. Despite the proximity, the situation in Cyprus has not been affected in any way. Of course, because of its geographical position, Cyprus has offered the help it could under the circumstances, and this demonstrates how useful Cyprus can be in this sensitive area of the world if it is completely free and peaceful.

In answer to a question on whether bringing captains who use the occupied Famagusta port -- which is illegal -- before Cypriot justice obstructs the reconciliation of the two communities, Kiprianou said: This is not an issue of reconciliation. Efforts for the legalization of the invasion and its results are something completely different from reconciliation. We are in favor of reconciliation, but let us not forget that the main obstacle to reconciliation is the fact that an occupation exists in Cyprus and that the two communities -- Greek and Turkish Cypriots -- cannot have contacts and cooperate as I am sure they would wish to. We support reconciliation, but this is not an issue of reconciliation.

It is another issue. For example, would it be reconciliation were we to close our eyes to the illegal efforts to sell the properties of the Greek Cypriots to colonizers from Turkey and members of the Turkish Army? This is not reconciliation, and we shall never accept such a thing.

GROMYKO CONFIRMS INVITATION FOR KIPRIANOU VISIT

NC110956 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 11 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou will definitely go to Moscow before the end of this month for talks with Soviet leaders. During a meeting President Kiprianou had with the friendly country's Foreign Minister Gromyko at UN headquarters, Gromyko reconfirmed the invitation for Kiprianou to visit.

This report was confirmed to us yesterday by telephone from New York and by senior diplomats of the Soviet Embassy in Nicosia, but details on the president's trip have not yet been learned. However, according to reports we have checked and verified:

First, a definite date has been fixed for the visit, which will be announced in the next few days (and in any case this week;

Second, the settlement of the final details of the trip, which will last about 4 days, has begun through diplomatic channels.

According to the same authoritiative reports:

President Kiprianou's talks in the Kremlin with President Brezhnev and other Soviet leaders will be determinative of the Cyprus problem, something that will be immediately apparent in the joint communique that will be issued;

Simultaneously, and parallel with the purely political aspect of the talks, President Kiprianou and Soviet leaders will sign a number of significant agreements on commercial, economic and cultural issues.

President Kiprianou will be accompanied to the Soviet Union by Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

KIPRIANOU DISCUSSES FAMAGUSTA ISSUE WITH SHULTZ

NC111034 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 11 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] During the meeting he had with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz in New York President Kiprianou raised the Famagusta issue separately, as a priority issue.

As we have been informed, the president said that, regardless of the search for a total solution, the Famagusta issue must be given the priority that had been agreed upon and that Turkey must be coerced to agree.

The U.S. secretary showed understanding of the whole problem and manifested positive intentions to carry out some activities in this direction.

President Kiprianou carried out other parallel activities specifically on Famagusta which will continue.

SPOKESMAN REJECTS DENKTAS CLAIM ON ARMS IN SOUTH

NC081847 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] The government spokesman has rejected the statement by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas in which he expressed concern because of the alleged accumulation of arms in the south, as he said, and in which he warned, as he said, that this will not be condoned.

In his statement, the government spokesman stressed that Mr Denktas' concern is definitely hypocritical and that it has propaganda aims. The spokesman's statement added: Apart from the fact that in no way could there be talk about an accumulation of arms in the free part of the Republic of Cyprus, those who can be justifiably concerned are the inhabitants of the free areas because Cyprus has been the victim of invasion and a considerable part of it has been under the occupation of 35,000 Turkish troops -- equipped with the most modern aggressive weapons -- for 8 years.

The National Guard's armament, the spokesman added, aims exclusively at defending the free areas. Therefore, he concluded, Mr Denktas' protest aims at misleading world public opinion as to who threatens whom in Cyprus.

I SIMERINI CRITICIZES KARAMANLIS FOR NOT VISITING

NC111111 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 11 Oct 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Karamanlis"]

[Excerpts] So Karamanlis is going to Canada. When will he come to Cyprus? Since 1959 when he signed in Zurich the agreement on the return of the Turkish Army to Cyprus, he has been avoiding Cyprus, tormented by most heavy feelings of guilt.

The Greek president has lacked sympathy for Cyprus' struggle for a long time. Sometimes justifiably, sometimes unjustifiably, sometimes instinctively he has seen the Cyprus problem as a great annoyance to the nation [Hellenism] and Greece. At this point we should stress something which very few people noticed: Karamanlis was denounced for the Zurich agreement. In Greece, Zurich was branded as treason.... Karamanlis has never been able to understand why Makarios was considered the national leader and hero while he was judged to be a national traitor because they signed the Zurich agreement together.

For us, the leader of the Greek state and the Greek prime minister, together with each Greek Government, are sacred. We may disagree, we may criticize, we may be in anguish, but our intention and our goal is to save ourselves, and our salvation will come from Greece. For this reason, it is impossible for us to accept fear of responsibility, regardless of its origin and Karamanlis' rejection to at least be photographed with Cypriot opposition leader Kliridhis was a manifestation of his fear of responsibility. Karamanlis used Kliridhis in 1974 to arrange his own installation in Greece. But then he almost rejected him within the framework of the convenient fashion of that era....

The issue, however -- always and now -- is not the relevant history and behavior. The issue is Cyprus and its salvation, Greece and the nation's future. The leader of the Greek Republic is showing a cool stance on this issue. It is his right to want to end his political history with Greece's accession to the EEC as his achievement. However, it was during his era that the nation suffered certain amputations and history will be unreserved in its verdict. Nations live and progress through visionary leaders. Declines and falls come through fear of responsibility, pseudoluxuriances and dispirited leaderships. Only if he comes to Cyprus will he understand what we mean and the demand the nation and history have had of Greece's leader for many years. Only then will he understand what it means to have left us at the Turks' mercy "because of distance" in the electronic era....

Spokesman Scores Criticism

[Text] The government spokesman expressed severe disapproval over today's I SIMERINI article criticizing the president of the Republic of Greece, Karamanlis. The spokesman stated that Karamanlis not only has no lack of sympathy toward the struggle of Cyprus, as I SIMERINI alleges, but has always demonstrated his love and strong interest in the struggle of the Cypriot people whom he has supported and assisted in many ways.

The government spokesman added that any attempt to sling mud at Karamanlis, to degrade his personality and devalue his great offer to the Cypriot cause and to Hellenism more generally degrades not Karamanlis but his accusers.

Slandering the president of the republic of Greece, the spokesman added, coming after the recent attack by I SIMERINI against Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, only confirms that this newspaper tries not only to undermine but also to neutralize and render useless the relations between Greece and Cyprus by creating feelings of suspicion and displeasure among the Greek Cypriot people against Greece.

DAILY SAYS SECOND PLOT AGAINST KIPRIANOU FOILED

NC111026 Nicosia KHARAVYI TIS DHEVTERAS in Greek 11 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Today our newspaper reveals -- and simultaneously denounces -- to the Cypriot people that there was a second plan to assassinate President Kiprianou. The plan was nipped in the bud by the state security authorities and the gang of conspirators was broken up.

The plan was woven by elements with a criminal record. According to verified reports, the focal point of the conspirators -- all of whom are Cypriots -- was Limassol.

Certain reports on the movements of the criminals were conveyed to the security authorities. Following this the coupists' prospective murderers were put under surveillance. As a responsible source told this newspaper, "such measures were taken as to make implementation of the plan impossible." The source did not specify what measures or activities were taken to foil the conspirators and their criminal plans.

Additionally, we mention that the events took place in March-April 1981 and for obvious reasons were kept absolutely secret all this time.

Political circles who were invited to comment on our revealing reports -- only 1 week after the publication of our exclusive report about a recent plan to assassinate President Kiprianou -- observed that in essence AKEL's consecutive warnings and denunciations that illegality has raised its head have once again been tangibly confirmed and that at last all those who care for the country and its future should push aside election campaign hatreds and passions and look up -- the danger is not imaginary.

The enemies of Cyprus and of our people's just cause are moving -- and have moved -- to create a new anomaly and abnormality. They are aiming at abolishing the country's democratic institutions and completely disolving the Cypriot state. This is the bitter but objective truth.

Minister of Interior Khristodhoulos Venaimin, under whose consideration we placed our reports, described them as "very correct." The minister added that it concerned "a most grave case" and that he had no doubt ("I am 100-percent convinced," he said) of the existence of a conspiracy and a plan to physically eliminate President Kiprianou.

Spokesman Confirms Plots

[Text] In reply to a question connected with a report published today that in March 1981 there was a plan to assassinate the president of the Republic, the government spokesman said that there had been specific and positive reports that an attempt would be made against the president. The spokesman added that the conspiracy was foiled shortly before it was to be implemented, following the taking of precautionary measures by the security forces under the personal guidance of Minister of the Interior and Defense Veniamin. He also said that reports concerning similar movements exist even now and that the situation is being watched closely.

FORMATION OF PANCYPRIOT UNITY MOVEMENT ANNOUNCED

NC100859 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 10 Oct 82 pp 1, 10

[Text] The founding of the Pancypriot Unity Movement was announced yesterday. It "unreservedly" supports "the repositioning of the Cyprus issue" as undertaken by the Greek Government and, at the same time, calls upon the people to support Yeoryios Ioannidhis as a candidate to the presidency, describing him as "a nonpartisan political personality, a wise and experienced politician who is inspired by democratic sentiments and love for the people."

The declaration of the Pancypriot Unity Movement states:

"1. Cyprus is still confronted by the dire consequences of the coup and the invasion. Turkish intransigence and the weaknesses of international diplomacy did not permit any positive progress toward a solution of our national issues. Occupation, the tragedy of the missing persons and the plight of the refugees continue.

"The domestic front appears fragmented as never before. The militant spirit has been dangerously weakened. The catholic unity of spirit and cohesion have been replaced by division and bigotry. Strong party rivalry, instead of helping democratic dialogue and cooperation, leads to unavoidable political clashes. Polarization appears as a threat with unforeseeable consequences for the country's future.

"2. Under these conditions which surround our national issue and our domestic affairs, the fate and future of our country is at a critical juncture.

"The search for a just and viable solution requires correct and coordinated action and planning. If this is to be achieved, it is essential to have unity and brotherhood among the people as well as a collective spirit in the planning and handling of the militant course toward survival and justification.

"3. The above conclusions, concern and a sense of duty to serve, were the only reasons encouraging the founding of the Pancypriot Unity Movement for the sole purpose that it may contribute toward a cleansing, toward dealing with the dire dilemmas which today confront Cypriot Hellenism and, because of the forthcoming presidential election which appears as a means and a starting point for the Cypriot people to lay the correct foundations for unity and collectivism.

"4. The movement believes in and sincerely and unreservedly supports the repositioning of the Cyprus issue by the Greek Government. In the difficult times through which our country is passing, agreement on positions and tactics on the Cyprus issue with the metropolis of Hellenism -- which is the support of our struggle -- is a historic obligation as well as the uncompromisingly correct course to follow.

"5. The movement believes in democracy and the existence of political parties, which are an imperative element for democracy and contribute toward promotion of national cooperation and unity among all the forces of the country in the collective handling of national problems.

"Despite this, the movement believes that under the current situation and under the present political party situation in Cyprus, the claiming of the presidency by any one political party cannot produce the desired solution. The tensions, fanaticism, foreign and domestic inspired hatreds and differences cannot possibly provide a solution to the question of the presidency which could unite and bring cohesion to the people.

"The movement supports the idea that the only course for the fighting Cypriot people lies in the support of a nonpartisan political personality who enjoys the confidence of the political parties. This option is, today, the best solution which could neutralize polarization, lead to a strengthening of the militant spirit and contribute to the creation of a firm and strong domestic front which is the imperative prerequisite for the survival of Cyprus and its people.

"The salvation of our country is a primary obligation and duty and this is, it must be, the quintessence of the goals of every political party, of other organizations and of all of Cypriot Hellenism.

"6. The movement lauds the offer of Yeoryios Ioannidhis to serve the people. The election to the presidency -- with the support of all -- of a wise and experienced politician who is experienced and inspired by democratic sentiments and love of the people like Ioannidhis will serve in the best possible way the cause of Cyprus.

"The Pancypriot Unity Movement was founded in order to promote national unity and it believes that the election of Ioannidhis to the presidency will not only strengthen the domestic front but will also furnish the Cypriot struggle with the necessary strength and authority on the international scale.

"7. The movement will work selflessly in every direction, with faith. It calls upon the people and the political leaders as well as on all the political personalities of the country to consider the crisis through which the country is passing; it calls on them to unite in brotherhood for a new start based on peoples unity, collective effort, cooperation an on the offer of the services of everyone who can give in order to strengthen the bastions of our struggle.

"The movement calls upon all those who, irrespective of political affiliation, wish to fight for the neutralization and lifting of the current impasse to consider that such a struggle for the survival of our half-occupied fatherland is not incompatible to their party affiliations.

"8. We address ourselves to all the parties -- leftwing, rightwing, socialist or center -- and to all the patriots who are concerned over the current situation, who listen to the cries of pain arising from the oncoming calamity and who believe that responsibility, patriotism and love for the country can allow us to be optimistic for a better tomorrow.

"The movement believes that the people can be led away from hatreds, fanaticism and narrow party interests, to join hands for a new, militant and responsible start."

DENKTAS ON 'UNCONCILIATORY ATTITUDE' OF GREEKS

TA091128 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that it is doubtful whether the Greek Cypriot leadership wishes to reestablish a partnership administration in Cyprus.

Speaking at the Islamic Banking Institute this (?morning), Denktas gave extensive information on the phases of the Cyprus problem. Noting that the Turkish Cypriot community, which was displaced three times between 1963 and 1974, believes in a solution based on a federation founded on a historical and geographical [word indistinct] as a guarantee against the denial of its existence and massacres, Denktas said that the talks are continuing in this direction. However, statements by the Greek Cypriot leaders and the unconciliatory attitude of Greece are preventing the desired progress. Pointing out that it is doubtful whether the Greek Cypriots want a partnership administration, Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots, who are no longer able to carry out armed attacks against the Turkish Cypriot people will defend themselves against the economic and political pressures and attacks. He added that they will prevent the expansion of the Greeks and Greek Cypriots on the island and the annihilation of the Turkish Islamic existence and culture.

CAGATAY DEPARTS FOR OFFICIAL VISIT TO TURKEY

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, as well as the delegation accompanying him, left Cyprus for Ankara last night. The Turkish Cypriot delegation, which is paying an official visit to Turkey, was received at Esenboga Airport by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara, chief of the Turkish Cypriot desk at the Prime Ministry Vahit Guneri, as well as other Turkish officials and the Turkish Cypriot representative in Ankara.

TURKISH CYPRIOTS PROTEST JOURNALISTS' RESTRICTION

TA090930 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0500 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot authorities have protested the fact that the Greek Cypriot administration has prevented two Saudi journalists from crossing to the north. It has been announced that the director of the minorities desk, Erol Ertuga, invited the UN political affairs advisor to his office yesterday and submitted the Turkish Federated State's protest of this inhuman act by the Greek Cypriot administration officials, who frequently make speeches on freedom of movement. Ertuga asked the UN official to take the necessary steps as soon as possible.

KARAMANLIS UNABLE TO ACCEPT REAGAN INVITATION

NC081744 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] In answer to questions from newsmen on press reports about an invitation from President Reagan to President Karamanlis, the Press Bureau of the Presidency of the Republic has announced, among other things, the following:

U.S. President Reagan has invited Mr Karamanlis to visit Washington on the occasion of the holding of a congress there from 4 to 6 November jointly sponsored by the U.S. Department of State and the U.S. Institute of Political Research. According to the invitation, Mr Karamanlis was to be the main speaker at this White House function and was also to be the guest at a luncheon given by the U.S. President, with whom a private meeting was to be held.

The president of the republic thanked Mr Reagan for this honorary invitation and expressed regret that he could not possibly respond. Mr Karamanlis is not able to make the visit because he will be paying an official visit to Canada from 14 to 18 October, dates that cannot be altered. Thus, if Mr Karamanlis were to respond to this invitation, he would have to either prolong his absence from Greece for more than 20 days or visit the American Continent twice within a short period of time.

SPOKESMAN DENIES FOREIGN MINISTER RESIGNING

NC081734 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Oct 82

[Text] "Unfounded, ridiculous and worthless" is how the government spokesman described the AKROPOLIS report that Foreign Minister I. Kharalambopoulos has twice submitted -- the second time the day before yesterday -- his resignation because of disagreements with Deputy Foreign Ministers Kapsis and Varthis. According to the AKROPOLIS report, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou suggested to the foreign minister that he continue in office until after the municipal elections.

SPOKESMAN REASSURES KKE'S FLORAKIS ON U.S. BASES

NC101955 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Text] In a statement he made today, KKE Secretary General Kharilaos Florakis claims that U.S. officials' consecutive visits to our country worry the democratic forces regarding the course of the negotiations on the U.S. bases. He wants the framework for the negotiations to be discussed in parliament.

In reply to Florakis, the government spokesman said the following: Florakis should not worry. The government will negotiate the issue of the bases within the political framework mentioned in the declaration of the PASOK government policy published before the elections and in Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's policy statement in the chamber. Consequently, the political framework of the negotiations is both given and known. The government will proceed with the negotiations, whatever the result may be, it will bring the issue to the chamber, which is the sovereign body according to the Constitution.

A debate will be held there and decisions made. Consequently, Florakis has no reason to worry now that the PASOK government is implementing a nationally proud and independent foreign policy.

I KATHIMERINI on Bases

NC101656 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 10 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] The critical problem of finding the necessary capital to finance the country's economic rebound now seems to have been included within the framework of Greek-U.S. relations, and its solution is almost certainly linked to the fate of the negotiations for the bases and the purchase of new weapons systems that will guarantee a balance of forces with Turkey for the next 4-5 years. As the Greek Government's options and possibilities for drawing foreign capital and attracting foreign invesmtents are daily being limited in view of the international banking system's crisis and our economy's unfavorable development, dependence on U.S. supply sources becomes greater.

Economic observers claim that the great deficits that will be created in the 1983 balance of payments -- of course, provided that in accordance with its declarations, the government will proceed with a bold investment program -- will require foreign loans of at least $2.5-$3 billion in order to cover them. Such colossal sums cannot be found in the international money market by a country such as ours, which has been beset by an economic recession for 4 years. In order to find such sums, we need support from a strong power or a group of rich countries.

These tough dilemmas stiflingly demarcate possible maneuvers by the Greek Government and attach a new and important dimension to its efforts to multilaterally defend and safeguard national interests. Therefore, it is certain that in these circimstances, the country's economic priorities will decisively dominate:

1. In the negotiations for the status of the U.S. bases in Greece, the first stage of which will begin in Athens on 27 October. Unofficial reports insist that provided the entire issue -- as is expected -- is resolved satisfactorily for both sides, Greece will receive a lump sum (in addition to the rent) approaching $1 million. It has not yet been clarified whether this sum will be free or a long term loan by a large U.S. bank under such favorable terms as to be tantamount to free aid.

2. In the selection of the type of fighter planes that will cover the Greek Air Force's needs for the next 5 years. Latest reports mention that whereas the dominant idea until a short time ago was to apportion the relevant orders among many airplane producers, the American F-16 now appears to be the great favorite.

The United States has reacted positively to the approaches toward U.S. sources of supply which the Greek Government has made in the current state of affairs and on the basis of impeccable national criteria. There is a pervasive impression in international economic circles that the United States will offer both its own forces and, above all, its influence on rich Arab countries and the international banking system so that Greece may deal with its critical economic problems.

Saudi Arabian and Kuwaiti banks have already been encouraged by large U.S. banks, with which they are closely linked, to deposit Eurodollars in short term or time deposit accounts with Greek banks, thus strengthening our country's weak exchange reserves.

Furthermore, special interest has been manifested by the Americans and by Secretary of State Shultz personally for the success of the Greek prime minister's trip to Kuwait, which will begin tomorrow. Before assuming his current office, Shultz headed a huge construction company which even now has great projects under construction in Kuwait.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA on Bases

NC081602 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Oct 82 p 4

[From the "Views" column: "New Yes to the Change"]

[Text] Thirty-eight years were needed to erect the huge complex of dependence that was woven around and inside our national area by the English -- during the first stages -- the Americans, and NATO in cooperation with the Greek right, a complex that is incorporated in 108 agreements and an equal number of technical protocols.

The people were fully aware of this reality. The leader of the change was fully aware of this maze. It was for this reason that he made it clear during the election campaign that it was not possible to automatically rid ourselves of this complexity from one day to the next.

Now, before one year of the PASOK government has passed and despite the "belated faithful" and the self-appointed "guarantors of true change," the government has completed the reconnoitering stage as well as the stage of complete briefing and calculation of every move on the chess board and prepared the critical "game" of negotiation it is entering with clear goals and possibilities.

During this game, the other side will use all the ploys it knows. It will plot all the pressures it thinks it can exercise. It has willing pawns which in fact are in threatening positions opposite ours.

For this reason, the government needs its own front of support, which only the people can give and will give. In this critical October, the people will triumphantly renew their trust in the change, leaving behind old partisan dependencies and offshoots. A battle is now being waged so that Greece may belong to the Greeks and, as we proceed in this battle, the people will not allow anyone to present as "reduced" -- as many expect and attempt -- the popular foundation of the change vis-a-vis its negotiators.

On the contrary, the people will use the opportunity of the municipal elections to triumphantly confirm their support of the movement and the government of change, the movement and the government of national dignity and independence, the policy of responsibly and harmlessly -- for the people -- ridding the complexity of the 108 agreements with which the right tied us to Atlanticism's chariot.

PASOK DEPUTY EXPELLED FOR VOTING AGAINST BILL

[Text] In a letter to PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou, Deputy for the Messinia Constituency Aris [Aristodhimos] Bouloukos says that he disagrees with the abolition of the cross of preference and that he will vote against the pertinent bill in the Chamber of Deputies.

In connection with this, the government spokesman made the following statement: The PASOK disciplinary board held an extraordinary meeting and decided to dismiss Aris Bouloukos following his statement to the PASOK chairman that he will vote against the bill on the abolition of the cross of preference.

The decision of the disciplinary board says that the abolition of the cross of preference was one of the basic positions in the government program of PASOK which was approved and unanimously decided by the PASOK Central Committee prior to the historical victory in the October 1981 elections. The abolition of the cross of preference was a preelectoral commitment on the part of PASOK. It was part of the covenant of honor and was announced by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou both on television and at all the preelectoral gatherings.

RIZOSPASTIS DENOUNCES ANTI-SOVIET CAMPAIGN

[From the "Radical" column: "Collaborator of Secret Services"]

[Text] The collaborator of American secret services, Paul Anastasi, is continuing the serial of his planned provocations. Under cover of his role as "foreign correspondent," he conveys his bosses' dirty forgeries to THE NEW YORK TIMES, forgeries that are later brought into Greece by papers that are friendly to him in the extreme rightwing and by the well-known "nonaligned" paper. Drawing his evidence, as he says, from "Western diplomatic services" (!) the other day he published a slanderous dispatch against RIZOSPASTIS in THE NEW YORK TIMES. His recent appearance in the forefront is not coincidental, nor is his attack on RIZOSPASTIS on the eve of municipal elections. In general, his provocative reports are part of the cold war, anti-Soviet campaign which the American imperialists and NATO have launched. Again I AVYI is not absent from this dirty imported campaign. (Indeed, this time it has been overtaken by Anastasi and has lost...first place). In a front page report yesterday, it stressed the danger of buying off West European papers with "Soviet funds." Could it be that the simultaneous publication of anti-Soviet provocative reports by the collaborator of Western secret services, Paul Anastasi (his Greek name is Avlos Anastasiadhis) and the fresh, mean outburst of anti-Sovietism by I AVYI are mere coincidence? But even if it were a mere "coincidence," both the P. Anastasi "dispatch" and the I AVYI report are governed by the same crazy anti-Sovietism and antisocialism. As for P. Anastasi, the competent Greek authorities must make it clear to him that his "activities" have no relation with his role as foreign correspondent, particularly since he openly admits that he collaborates with foreign secret services.

BRIEFS

DELEGATION RETURNS FROM PRC -- The deletation of the Union of Greek Women has returned from China. This is the first women's delegation to visit China following an official invitation from the Federation of Women of China. The delegation, comprised of Kalliopi Vourdhara, Konstandina Yiannopoulou, Kharis Papayeoryiou and Efi Papakhristou, had as it main goal the exchange of views on matters of joint interest in the social and educational systems of the two countries. During its stay in China, the Greek delegation visited various cities and got acquainted with the federation's local organizations. [Text] [Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 10 Oct 82 NC]

TURKMEN COMMENTS ON TURKISH-GREEK RELATIONS

LD081738 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1230 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Ankara, 8 Oct (ANATOLIA) -- (?During a press conference in Ankara this morning) Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen reported that successful results had been obtained at the NATO foreign ministers' conference and said that there is a unity of views among NATO countries on all basic issues.

Foreign Minister Turkmen said: "The fact that we have had a meeting with the Greek foreign minister and issued a press release does not mean that Turkish-Greek relations have been settled.

"All problems are out in the open. And, naturally, future developments will hinge on the behavior of the two sides. It is absolutely certain that we shall carefully watch the behavior of the Greek Government.

"The talks between the Turkish and Greek foreign ministers do not constitute a new element. We have not yet established a procedure. We shall take up the question of procedure at the meeting to be held in Brussels in December. A Turkish-Greek dialogue has begun, but no procedure has been established. We have not established a procedure. We shall establish this at the next session. We did not take up this topic at this meeting. I had a very short meeting with the Greek foreign minister this time. We touched on relations between Turkey and Greece in general terms.

"The word moratorium is not in our dictionary. It is not a term we use. We came to agree on the need for maximum efforts to create an atmosphere of mutual confidence. It is natural that we shall continue within this framework. If a dialogue is to take place, if the two sides are to hold talks on issues, it will be necessary for them to mutually avoid provocative statements, provocative behavior and faits accomplis.

"We make no claim that we have solved all our problems with Greece. We have not let ourselves be carried away by an illusion that we have transformed the atmosphere between ourselves and Greece into an excellent one. We are aware of the attitudes and behavior of Greek parliamentarians in international parliamentary forums. This is a matter of record. When we mention this to the Greek Government, they say: We are unable to exercise control over this; we are also unable to exercise it over our own party. This is what they have always said; this is also what the previous government used to say. There are also other matters of Greek attitudes and behavior. We favor the creation of a calm atmosphere in the present conditions."

A journalist asked for the minister's comment on an advisory resolution passed by the consultative assembly of the Council of Europe asking for equal rights in the constitution for religious minorities. Foreign Minister Turkmen said:

"I see no need for comment as we are not members of the consultative assembly. We declared earlier that full equality between citizens of all religions in Turkey already exists in the constitution. If they have raised this kind of question, it is entirely superfluous and misplaced.

"We shall create our own constitution ourselves. We shall enact our own legislation ourselves. [sentence indistinct] Various views and various documents come into being in such forums. Don't let us exaggerate their importance."

At his press conference today, Foreign Minister Turkmen said the following in reply to a journalist's question concerning Armenian terrorism in Cyprus:

"We do not have information that terrorist organizations in Lebanon have based themselves in southern Cyprus. As you know, the Greek Cypriots have informed the United Nations that the latter are free to carry out any necessary investigation in Cyprus.

According to UN observations, there is nothing of the sort so far. We had earlier issued the necessary warning. We are very well aware that the Armenian terrorist organizations have set themselves up in Lebanon and that all their centers of activity are in Lebanon. (?I have said this) several times before. Before now, the Lebanese Government could not manage responsibility for its own country. From now on, Lebanon will be responsible for all events in its country. In this sense, we shall be dealing with the Lebanese Government on this matter."

Foreign Minister Turkmen gave the following reply to a journalist who said that the foreign minister had directly referred to Armenian terrorism on an international platform and asked whether this may mean that there is a change in Turkey's policy:

"No, it does not mean a change in Turkey's policy against Armenian terrorism, but I felt the need to provide a more extensive explanation about the extent and propaganda basis of this terrorism to help make the nature of this terrorist movement understood better. The object was to inform world public opinion; it was not to change the nature of the Armenian question."

Asked whether there had been an initiative at the NATO ministerial council to increase military and economic aid to Turkey, Foreign Minister Turkmen said:

"Talks at the NATO meeting were held within a wider framework. I had bilateral talks with the U.S. secretary of state. These talks touched upon issues of defense and economic cooperation between the United States and Turkey. I explained our views on these. He, in turn, underlined the importance his government attaches to the development of Turkey's defensive power and to Turkey's political and strategic importance."

Asked if Turkey will sign the treaty discussed at the International Law of the Sea Conference, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said: "We shall not sign the treaty."

Views UN, NATO Meetings

TA091108 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen statement at a news conference in Ankara on 8 October -- recorded]

[Excerpt] Every year the foreign ministers of all member countries explain their governments' foreign policy and express their views on the international situation at the UN General Assembly. The same thing is being done this year. All the foreign ministers are addressing the Assembly. Some have already addressed the Assembly and some will do so soon. I addressed the Assembly on 4 October and expressed Turkey's view of the international situation and various problems. In my address, I referred to the problems of the Middle East, Afghanistan and terrorism, as well as various Far Eastern problems, together with armament and the international economic situation. I also briefly referred to the Cyprus issue. I expressed our satisfaction over the continuation of the Cyprus intercommunal talks.

This year I talked more extensively on the problem of terrorism. I stressed the need for international cooperation in connection with international terrorism. Referring directly to Armenian terrorism, I tried to point out how this terrorism (?operates) and how the propaganda it uses is contrary to historical realities.

The UN meetings are beneficial not only from the viewpoint of the speeches made, but especially from the viewpoint of creating opportunities for meetings between the foreign ministers of different countries. Like many of the other ministers, I found the opportunity to meet many of my counterparts. I held bilateral talks with approximately 30 foreign ministers. Furthermore, I met with the UN secretary general and this term's Assembly president. Many issues were taken up. Views were exchanged on bilateral as well as international issues.

The NATO meeting was held at a site near Montreal, in Canada, on 2 and 3 October. This meeting was not organized as an official one. The foreign ministers arrived at the meeting alone. This gave them the continuous opportunity to hold meetings. All the ministers were very satisfied to hold such meetings. In this way, the talks were more sincere. At the end of the NATO meeting, the Canadian foreign minister announced the results of the meeting on behalf of all the other ministers.

We can summarize the results of the NATO meetings as follows: Primarily, the ministers shared the view that the meeting was successful. They stressed that this unofficial atmosphere was very appropriate for an exchange of views. It has once more become evident that there is unity of views regarding all basic issues among the NATO countries. On the other hand, although there are various problems within the alliance, almost all the ministers pointed out that their governments are determined to solve them. Another point which should be noted with satisfaction in connection with the NATO meeting is that more importance was attached to the issue of terrorism. There was a unity of view regarding the struggle against terrorism, and as a result a decision was made to continue work to secure an effective struggle against terrorism.

CYPRUS' CAGATAY MEETS WITH TURKISH OFFICIALS

[Text] Turkish Cypriot Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, who arrived in Ankara yesterday, began his official talks today. Cagatay visited Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu this morning. Later, Cagatay, as well as the delegation accompanying him, met with State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Beykara, who is also a member of the Cyprus Coordination Committee. The implementation of the Turkish Cypriot budget for fiscal 1983 as well as other economic issues were discussed during the meeting. Turkish Cypriot Economy and Finance Minister Salih Cosar and Public Works and Communications Minister Mehmet Bayram are accompanying Cagatay in his talks.

CONSTITUTION DRAFT SAID TANTAMOUNT TO CENSORSHIP

TA110752 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 0740 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 11 Oct (AA) -- A panel meeting sponsored by the Contemporary Journalists Association on Saturday heard one speaker charge that the proposed Turkish constitution would bring setbacks for the Turkish society. Mr Mahmut Tali Ongeren, a university teacher, said especially the clause permitting law enforcement officers to seize publications before distribution was tantamount to censorship. Other speakers said the draft was reactionary and did not befit the Turkish nation.

FIGURES ON OIL PRODUCTION FOR 1982 ANNOUNCED

TA091449 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1350 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 9 Oct (AA) -- Forty-five percent of the oil production plan has been reached in the first 6 months of 1982.

Production of some 2,514,000 tons of crude oil is planned for the year 1982. In the first 6 months of 1982, 1,152,000 tons, which constitutes 45 percent, have been produced.

During the January-June period of 1982, the Turkish Petroleum Corporation has produced 495,000 tons, Ersan Oil 2,600 tons, Mobil-Doew 118,000 tons and Shell 537,000 tons of crude oil.

Crude Oil Production Program

As is known, this year the Turkish Petroleum Corporation has planned to produce 1,118,000 tons of crude oil, Ersan Oil 6,000 tons, Mobil Doew 250,000 tons and Shell 1,140,000 tons.

Meanwhile, the refineries are planning to process some 16,185,000 tons of crude oil. Of this, 7,040,000 tons have been processed in the first 6 months of this year.

TURK-IS LEADER ON RETURN OF WORKERS FROM FRG

TA091124 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] The leader of the Turkish Confederation of Labor [TURK-IS], Sevket Yilmaz, has said that the inclination of the new FRG Government to send back, en masse, the Turkish workers employed in the FRG, is not compatible with humanitarian values. In a statement on the issue, Yilmaz said that sending back the Turkish workers, who have been contributing to the FRG economy extensively for over 20 years, would be contradictory to the agreements and historical ties of friendship between the two countries. He said: Annulling the labor of some 600,000 Turkish workers, who revived the FRG economy at a time when it was going through a most severe crisis from the viewpont of the work force, and who played a great role in bringing it to its current level, can create an international incident. Yilmaz noted that expelling over 1,700,000 persons, including families, because of superficial excuses is tantamount to forcing them into an unjust exodus. Yilmaz continued: If the FRG Government is going to lay off workers on the grounds of the country's unemployment or the economic crisis, and if this layoff is being thought of in the form of groups, it should meet with the Turkish Government first and reach the necessary agreement, as was the case for the employment of the workers.

Noting that the Turkish workers employed in the FRG have various rights and interests, Yilmaz said that these workers should be sent back with their consent, and that their social security should be insured.

THREE FORMER LEADERS TO APPEAR IN COURT

TA110738 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 0730 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 11 Oct (AA) -- Three of Turkey's former political leaders, Bulent Ecevit of the dissolved Republican People's Party, Necmeddin Erbakan of the National Salvation Party and Alpaslan Turkes of the Nationalist Action Party are to face martial law courts Tuesday for non-related offences.

Mr Ecevit faces charges of damaging the reputation of the Turkish Republic abroad by means of slandering statements. Erbakan is accused of exploiting religious feelings for his political ends and Mr Turkes faces the death penalty for criminal offences.

The three are being tried in separate cases, but all scheduled to face the same number one martial law tribunal Tuesday.

KREISKY ENDS TUNIS VISIT, COMMENTS ON PLO

AU121454 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Oct 82 pp 1-2

[Excerpts] Yesterday, Chancellor Bruno Kreisky ended his 3-day official visit to Tunisia and returned to Vienna late in the afternoon. The meeting with PLO leader 'Arafat that had been anticipated with keen interest did not materialize since 'Arafat did not return to Tunis in time from Jordan. However, Kreisky conferred at his residence with other leading PLO functionaries. Within the framework of his official visit to Tunisia, the chancellor met with Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba and with Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali as well as with Foreign Minister Caid es-Sebsi.

During his stay in Tunis, the chancellor dealt extensively with the Middle East problem. On Sunday, following a visit to the Arab League, where he had a talk of some 40 minutes with Deputy Secretary General Asad al-Asad, Kreisky met for a long talk with Abu Iyad [Salah Khalaf], a close associate of 'Arafat who is regarded as the number two in the PLO, as well as with the PLO representative in West Europe, as-Sartawi, who resides in Paris. It was the first meeting between Kreisky and Abu Iyad [Salah Khalaf], who is known to be rather reserved as far as contacts with the West are concerned. Both of them were obviously impressed after their talk, which focused on the changed in the U.S. attitude toward the Palestinian problem.

"Abu Iyad [Salah Khalaf], too, fully supports 'Arafat's policy of being ready for negotiations," Kreisky said after the talk. "That is why the PLO is intensively seeking support from the United States. In politics, there are often strange developments. This movement which, after all that happened could actually be full of hatred, is showing a different face. The PLO is aware that it has tried hard without having achieved anything, but that on the other hand, it has gained political prestige. That is why it now wants to open the door to the United States," the chancellor declared.

Not only the Reagan statement on the Palestinian problem but also Reagan's latest letter to Kreisky, in which he appreciated the chancellor's Middle East policy, strengthen the PLO's hope for winning support in the United States -- the more so as the Palestinians had to realize during the latest events in Lebanon that the superpower USSR did not have anything to offer them but sympathy. Kreisky is at present preparing a reply to Reagan and intends to explain in an enclosure everything he regards as important and appropriate in the current situation. "I will keep this deliberately short, as one should if one wants something to be actually read," the chancellor said.

Kreisky and Abu Iyad [Salah Khalaf] agreed that the PLO should not do anything that could disturb the current process. In a talk with WIENER ZEITUNG, Abu Iyad [Salah Khalaf] said in this context: "We are not killers."

However, Kreisky is certainly aware of the fact that this readiness for negotiations on the Palestinian side is being ignored by the current Israeli regime.

"But this attitude certainly cannot be maintained in the long run. However, there will be a long process of change of public opinion in Israel, last but not least because Reagan too, has already made statements along these lines," Kreisky said, expressing the opinion that the surprising Reagan statement is bound to touch off a process of forming public opinion in the United States as well, with a "deep rift in the Jewish population" already becoming evident. The PLO, according to Abu Iyad, also counts on an increasing readiness for peace in Israel, as has manifested itself during the Tel Aviv mass demonstration against the massacre in the refugee camp and even more so by the fact that the Begin counterdemonstration was simply called off.

Kreisky believes that Israel's Lebanon operation served three goals: To liquidate the PLO in southern Lebanon, to install in Beirut a regime which finds a basis for making peace with Israel, and to induce the Palestinians through massacres -- "this was tolerated by Israel," Kreisky said -- to flee from the country. Further massacres have obviously been prevented only by the protest of the world public.

Kriesky attaches no importance whatever to the fact that no meeting with 'Arafat materialized in Tunis. Abu Iyad had pointed out the reasons to Kreisky. "I consider it far more important for 'Arafat to have talks in Jordan with King Husayn than to meet here with me," Kreisky said. "There had been mortal enmity between Jordan and the Palestinians. If a new basis can now be found, this is highly useful." In this context, Kreisky declared: "Israel's Defense Minister Sharon told the Palestinians: 'Chase away the Jordanian king, then you have your Palestinian state.' This what has drawn the two together."

In the present situation, Kreisky does not belive, either, that Israel will withdraw from Lebanon. Should this nevertheless happen, the chancellor considers the present strength of the international forces as not adequate.

SPA Cites Kreisky

LD121406 Riyadh SPA in English 1212 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Riyadh, Oct 12 (SPA) -- Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky said in an interview that the war in Lebanon had led to important developments in Israel, forcing hundreds of Israelis to protest against their government.

In an interview published jointly today by 'UKAZ and AR-RIYADH newspapers, the chancellor reasserted Austria's "full support for the Palestinian people in the struggle to" recover their legitimate rights.

"There is an obvious change in the American stand, although this change is not enough yet to raise hopes to reach a peaceful settlement for the Middle East problem," Mr Kreisky added.

He noted that there were inevitably two super powers and said the Soviet attitude during the peak of the Lebanese crisis was "evidently a stand of sympathy."

The chancellor said: "There is a need to enlighten the American public opinion on the Palestinian cause because such a turn will lead to a change in the international stand on the cause."

Mr Kreisky denied he was involved in mediation efforts to resolve the Middle East problem.

"Israel will not recognise my role because of my friendship with the Palestinians and my support for their legitimate rights," he added.

PORTUGAL'S EANES ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

[Summary] Portuguese President Gen Antonio Ramalho Eanes arrived in Vienna yesterday for a 4-day official visit at the invitation of President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger. The Austrian president welcomed the guest and his entourage at Vienna-Schwechat Airport and accompanied them to the Imperial Hotel. At the airport, President Eanes was also greeted by Vice Chancellor Fred Sinowatz and Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr.

Yesterday afternoon, President Eanes and his wife paid a visit to President Kirchschlaeger and his wife at the Hofburg. Afterwards, working talks were held there which were also attended by Portuguese Foreign Minister Futscher Pereira and Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, the two countries' ambassadors and high-ranking officials. Last night the guests attended a performance of the Vienna state opera.

Today, General Eanes will visit Parliament, the Spanish Riding School and the Vienna city hall, and will have a talk with Chancellor Kreisky in the afternoon. On Wednesday, the Portuguese guest will inspect the Voest-Alpine corporation in Linz, and on Thursday he will visit Salzburg. Thursday afternoon, Eanes will return to Portugal by air from Salzburg.

GROUP AGAIN DEMANDS THAT ARMY HAVE MISSILES

AU121623 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 9-10 Oct 82

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] The "action for Austria group sponsored by Dr Piaty, chairman of the Austrian Physicians' Chamber, has again demanded that the Austrian Army be equipped with anti-tank and anti-aircraft missiles. The spokesman for the group, retired General Kragora, declared that the defense minister's rejection of this demand was made against his better judgement. Today missile weapons are part of the standard equipment of any army in the world, he said. To renounce such weapons because of the State Treaty ban means that the mandatory defense of the country cannot be carried out at all, or only with excessive sacrificies. Apparently, Kragora added, an appropriate arming of the Austrian Army runs counter to the strategic intentions of the superpowers.

TWO SUSPECTED OF 'INDUSTRIAL ESPIONAGE'

[Summary] On 5 October, Austrian police arrested two persons suspected of industrial espionage to the detriment of the nationalized companies Voest-Alpine AG and Chemie Linz AG. The two suspects -- 42-year-old Heinz Pascher, owner of an engineering and consulting firm in Linz, and his technical assistant, 28-year-old Edwin Maier from Nussbach, Upper Austria -- are believed to have acquired blueprints and data on technical installations from the two nationalized companies, inflicting on them an estimated damage of 120 million schillings, if the information has come into the hands of foreign competitors.

A search of the suspect's homes revealed 25 large folders full of technical documents or copies of such documents orginating from the two companies. It is not yet known whether any confidential technical information has already been passed on to foreign competitors. Police are currently also investigating several other persons who might be involved.

GOVERNMENT FORMATION AGENT SEEKS 2-PARTY CABINET

PM121127 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 5 Oct 82 p 3

[Unnamed "own correspondent" report: "Government Formation Negotiations Leader Aims for Christian Democratic Appeal-People's Party for Freedom and Democracy Cabinet"]

[Excerpt] The Hague -- Government formation negotiations leader Scholten wants to work quickly on the formation of a cabinet comprising the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD]. Monday evening [4 October] he appointed two working groups of Second Chamber members from both parties which must present reports by next Saturday.

There is a working party A for financial, social and economic policies and a working party B to ascertain the main problems between the CDA and the VVD in the area of "welfare policy in the broad sense." Scholten himself will go through the nuclear arms issue with Second Chamber group leaders Lubbers (CDA) and Nijpels (VVD).

Democrats '66 [D'66] were put out of the running Monday, the government formation negotiation leader's first working day. In turn, Scholten had asked Lubbers, Nijpels and D'66 Second Chamber group leader Brinkhorst whether they were prepared to investigate "positively and constructively" the possibilities of forming a CDA-VVD-D'66 cabinet. Only after a positive answer would there be further talks about the procedure to be followed.

Lubbers and Nijpels (whom Scholten had told of his desire to involve D'66) immediately replied affirmatively. Brinkhorst first consulted his Second Chamber group and then announced that he was unable to answer so general a question with a "yes." He first wanted some room for some evaluation of the policies which would make a CDA-VVD-D'66 cabinet possible; but this was a possibility which he had already told Scholten's predecessor, Van Kemenade, was extremely small.

Labor Party Second Chamber group leader Den Uyl also met Scholten Monday, because the latter thought it important to inform him personally that he would be devoting his attention to the possibility of a CDA-VVD cabinet, perhaps with the inclusion of D'66. The Labor Party will not be involved in the coming talks, and since Monday, this also applies to D'66.

DPA REPORT ON 13 OCT KOHL BUNDESTAG STATEMENT

[Excerpts] Bonn, 13 Oct (DPA)-- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl has spoken in favor of a policy of the middle way and renewal. In his government statement to the Bundestag on Wednesday, two weeks after the political changeover in Bonn, Kohl blamed the Social Democrats for the fact that not only an economic crisis but also deep insecurity, fear and helplessness are spreading in the FRG.

As a way out of this situation, Kohl announced a four-point program of urgency, which has as its aim the fight against unemployment, the securing of the social net, the realization of a humane policy with regard to foreigners and the renewal of foreign and security policy bases.

Kohl also appealed, as he expressed thanks to the trade unions, to all parts of the population to support the new government in its attempt to master the crisis outlined by him and to awaken fresh confidence. He added that this request was also expressly directed at the opposition. Kohl stressed: "Our nation needs new hope, new confidence, new trust in itself. We know that our fellow citizens have high expectations of our policy of renewal."

Concerning new elections, Kohl confirme the named date but left the means of achieving them open. He said that the CDU/CSU and FDP agreed to let the voters decide on 6 March. "This is the view of the Federal Government." He said he knows that it is not simple, from a constitutional viewpoint, to realize this view. But he said he assumes that a solution could be found. The chancellor expressed the expectation that all parliamentary groups and parties will participate in such a solution.

Kohl announced talks in the near future on the possibilities offered by the Constitution for new elections. But he also referred explicitly to the proposals made by a Bundestag commission of inquiry regarding a change in the Constitution with the aim of dissolving the Bundestag.

In his government statement, Kohl spoke of a shocking starting position. This winter we have to reckon with almost 2.5 million unemployed. Overall economic production has been decreasing for months. Never have there been so many company bankruptcies as in this year. Almost 200,000 young people are unemployed.

The checking of finances, which the new government did some days ago, revealed a still more critical situation of state finances than presumed by the CDU/CSU before assuming government responsibility. Every day of the year, public finances incurred debts of more than DM200 million. At the ned of this year, federal debts will amount to more than DM300 billion. Without the government change, the actual budget deficit for 1983 would have risen on a federal level alone to DM55-60 billion. With social security too, the coffers are empty and reserves almost exhausted.

Kohl said that this situation is due solely to the world economic situation. German industry has been burdened to the limits of its capacity, and working people have been first tested and then burdened far beyond their ability. "Our own growth, employment and financial problems mainly result from the fact that German industry is no longer in a situation to deal with the new foreign trade requirements." What could have been corrected with relatively small sacrifices in the past has to be corrected today with greater pain and over a longer period.

"Now it is important to stop the continuing slide of our economy. Most things indicate that the nadir has still to be reached. No policy can pay off these debts of the past in a short time. We expect the first positive results of our program for economic growth in the second half of 1983." Fundamental successes can be expected only after several years.

Kohl emphasized the following points:

Combatting unemployment: Private and public investment is to be stimulated for the creation of new jobs.

Supplementary budget: Public borrowing is to be controlled by strict budgetary discipline. There will be an immediate supplementary budget for 1982. Due to expenditure requirements which can no longer be changed, net borrowing for 1982 will be approximately DM40 billion.

Foreign and security policy: Kohl underlined that the foundations of German foreign and security policy are NATO and friendship with the United States. For successfully securing peace in Europe, Kohl said that balance and defense capability, disarmament and arms control, as well as dialogue and cooperation are necessary. Military balance must be kept at the lowest possible level of arming. The Federal Government gives total support to the NATO dual decision of 1979. Only if Moscow realises that it can firmly reckon with the stationing of American medium-range missiles at the end of 1983, can on expect a readiness [on Moscow's part] to contribute to achieving results in the negotiations. Kohl emphasized the West's negotiating aim of a bilateral "zero option."

Europe and the Third World: The government intends to give special consideration to relations with the Soviet Union and will aim for a steady development. The government is very concerned about developments in Poland. Kohl demanded that martial law be lifted in Poland, that all internees be released, that dialogue with the church be continued and the ban on Solidarity lifted. "Our aim remains the political union of Europe." The European Parliament must be strengthened. The government will continue to work for cooperation with the Third World.

GDR and Berlin: The GDR can be assured that Bonn will keep all agreements, Kohl said. Intra-German trade is an important tool of cooperation. On the basis of the 1951 treaty and ts supplementary agreements, the FRG is prepared to contribute to an expansion of trade -- also to the benefit of Berlin. Bonn insists on a withdrawal of the rise in the minimum amount of currency exchange for East Berlin and GDR visitors. Kohl expressly gave a statement in support of Berlin. "The German situation is focused in Berlin." The government sees Berlin as a political task and as a chance for all Germans. It will actively support the economic strengthening of Berlin.

Preview of Kohl Speech

[Excerpts] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- In his policy statement, Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl will ask citizens to support his policy of the center. The chancellor will base his appeal in parliament tomorrow on the economic and budget situation, for which he primarily blames the Social Democrats. Kohl outlined his program at a meeting of the CDU/CUS group today.

Also, SPD federal manager Peter Glotz today critized the policy of the new CDU/CUS-FDP coalition, in particular, its economic and foreign policy. Speaking to the press in Bonn, he called for a clear statement on how to arrange Bundestag elections on 6 March.

In his policy statement tomorrow, Kohl will describe the present state of affairs and submit a crash program designed to consolidate the federal budget and to stimulate investment. The sacrifices citizens will have to bear in the social field are to be shared fairly. Kohl proposes to deal with the medium-term outlook regarding foreign and security policy, policy regarding the GDR and other fields. They are likely to include the treatment of aliens and scientific research.

Federal Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU) will deal with budget policy in parliament tomorrow afternoon. He told the CDU/CSU group today that the new government's inheritance from the old government was much worse than had been originally foreseen. Hitherto, things had been hushed up. Alfred Dregger, the chairman of the CDU/CSU group, said that Federal Labor Minister Norbert Bluem's call for a "respite" in social policy was a wise and courageous signal appropriate to the country's situation.

GENSCHER TO RUN AGAIN FOR FDP CHAIRMANSHIP

DW121057 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1900 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, foreign minister and FDP chairman, by reporter Schmidt-Holtz on 11 October in Bonn -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] When will the time come for you to consider resigning as party chairman?

[Answer] The question must be how the FDP can overcome the unquestionable difficult situation. We have suffered serious defeats. I said yesterday in this respect that it is most important for the FDP to stop fighting against itself and to use the Federal Party Congress to make the personnel and other essential decisions with which it wants to enter the federal elections.

[Question] This means that you will run again?

[Answer] Yes.

PRESS DISCUSSES BAVARIAN ELECTION CONSEQUENCES

DW111315 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 11 Oct 82

[From the Press Review]

[Text] The main issue of today's commentaries is the result of the Bavarian landtag elections.

RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf writes: After the bitter experience made by Dregger 2 weeks ago in Hesse, the CSU success of almost 59 percent is amazing. The SPD naturally expected a stronger forward impetus in Bavaria due to the alleged rage of the people because of the change in Bonn. Not much of this remained once the votes were counted. Some of Schmidt's striving for revenge was satisfied though, because the Bavarian landtag, just like the one in North-Rhine Westphalia, will have only two factions. The situation looks bad for the FDP with its traditions.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE maintains: In a certain way, developments were boring for a considerable part of the public. The fact that the main force, the CSU, could not be deprived of its function as the main pillar of all Bavarian domestic policy eliminated the sensation of uncertainty. Most Bavarians don't feel bored at all by their own conservatism. So people were struggling with decisions of secondary significance: Franz-Josef Strauss couldn't give up his desire for revenge with regard to the FDP, although exactly the opposite would have served the current Bonn coalition. Next spring at the latest you will see whether an eliminated FDP would bring alleviation to anybody. The opposite will be the case.

SUDKURIER of Konstanz states in this connection: October 10 didn't bring any relief to Kohl's battered government partner. The FPD wing which is fixed upon the social-liberal past, almost fanatically pursuing self-destruction could very soon become the new coalition's critically weak point. The coming FDP congress in November, where the existence of a sovereign liberal party will be involved after all, will touch more on politics in the Federal Republic than yesterday's Bavarian elections.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: The politicians were observing the FDP from the very beginning. Since it is traditionally more rightist in Bavaria than in other federal laender, it might have had a slight chance to survive there. However, the Bavarian voters didn't give the FDP that chance. This is obviously the reaction to the way in which party chief Genscher has made the change in Bonn. The somewhat surprisingly great defeat in Bavaria will continue to be an impetus for his internal party adversaries. The loser of the Bavarian elections is, therefore, not even the FDP. You can safely say without exaggeration that the loser's name is Genscher.

AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE has the following to say: The orientation process in the FDP, which can lead to a split, will certainly be accelerated now. Strauss however, cannot be jubilant. He must acknowledge for a second time that the CSU has lost votes. The outcome of the elections will not weaken the CSU position in the new Bonn alliance of the CDU/CSU and the FDP. However, it should be a reason for pondering about the future federal-political course of the CSU. Maybe it will become more subdued and balanced now, because the Bavarian elections are after all an indication of what could happen if the Bundestag elections were held at an earlier date.

NURNBERGER NACHRICHTEN points out: Strauss can deal in a rough way with the deteriorating FDP which was severely punished in Bavaria also, telling it that it is just being temporarily tolerated in the Christian-liberal Bonn coalition. The Bavarian elections on Sunday demonstrated that the FDP is not presentable any more in the republic. It cannot claim to be a third power any more. It has already done away with its future. Consequently, only a new beginning can help.

DIE WELT comments as follows: The main fact of the Sunday elections is that in the future, a two-party parliament will meet in the Maximilianeum [Munich parliament building]. Franz-Josef Strauss correctly assessed the mood in his country by directing his election campaign consistently against the FDP. He achieved that the FDP couldn't make up for the losses of social-liberal voters through gains from the CSU. Hans-Dietrich Genscher is now in an even worse position than before. As regards the outcome of the ecological movement, the election result just confirms how little the Greens have to say in Bavaria, the recreation and industrial country. The Hamburg and Hesse nightmares -- a system paralyzed by the Greens -- couldn't threaten the CSU area anyway.

WIESBADENER KURIER notes in this connection: Bavaria demonstrated that it can neither be compared with Hamburg or Hesse. Life is really different between such towns as Hof and Lindau. It still remains to be seen what additional claims the CSU will make in Bonn on the basis of yesterday's election results. It is certain, however, that Franz-Josef Strauss has stood his most personal test. This will give an additional impetus to his Bonn ambitions.

BREMER NACHRICHTEN writes: After this Sunday, the Bavarian's pressure on the new Bonn coalition, a coalition which he had morsely accepted, will increase. Party chief Genscher has to defend himself on all sides now against internal party critics, against the SPD and against a significant group in the formation of his new coalition partner. The Bavarian election result is just what Genscher needed.

HNA HESSISCHE/NIEDERSACHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel states: The FDP experienced another Waterloo. It is a question whether the FDP and particularly its party chief Genscher can survive it. Doubts in the party will increase with regard to the new course. The chairman, as well as Graf Lambsdorff: the advocates of the change, will have a hard time at the Berlin party congress. They might not find the necessary support there. Franz-Josef Strauss, however, feels fully supported. He will exploit his election victory right away in Bonn.

MUNCHNER MERKUR writes: What Strauss has said on the election night and what he didn't say in a suggestive way justifies the statement that the failure of the liberals fitted in his plans. It stresses his right to have a say in Bonn and it adds additional weight to his skepticism with regard to the Free Democratic partner in Bonn. Chancellor Kohl cannot consider the Bavarian result as support; he must much rather consider it an additional handicap.

NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG of Essen maintains: The most important effect this will have on the Bonn scenery is the fact that Franz-Josef Strauss will carry even more political weight in the CDU/CSU union. Support of the voters is for him a confirmation of his concepts with regard to Bonn's course. It must be expected therefore, that he will exert even more influence than before. Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl is in for something now.

FRG-SOVIET ECONOMIC TALKS OPEN IN BONN 12 OCT

[Excerpt] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- The German-Soviet commission for economic and scientific-technological cooperation met in Bonn this morning for its 11th session. The German side of the commission, which includes leading representatives of German industry as well as government officials, is led by Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff. Leader of the Soviet delegation is Leonid A. Kostandov deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

Lambsdorff on Poland, Pipeline

[Text] Bonn 12 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Minister for Economic Affairs Count Otto Lambsdorff tonight referred to the indissoluble link between economic relations and political developments. He expressed to USSR Vice Premier Leonid Kostandov the concern felt by Western governments over the worsening Polish situation.

Speaking at a dinner on the occasion of the 11th meeting of the German-Soviet inter-governmental economic commission, he said that no Western government wants a trade war with the Soviet Union. The new Federal Government stands by the obligations entered into by previous governments, but Bonn will not neglect the political and security interests of the Western alliance.

Regarding the controversial natural gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union, he said: "We stand by this project." The Federal Government assumes that the deal can be completed according to schedule, but no one should gloat at the current differences among the Western partners in their assessment of the project. "We must all have an interest in East-West economic relations being governed once again by firm rules on which one can and must count." he said.

On Economic Relations

[Excerpt] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff (FDP) has stressed the readiness of the new Federal Government to continue to develop economic relations between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union.

Speaking at the opening of the 11th session of the German-Soviet commission for economic and scientific-technological cooperation in Bonn today, Lambsdorff stated that the Federal Government adheres to the agreement made by the Western partners at the world economic summit in Versailles this year on further economic cooperation with the USSR and East Europe. The aim of this agreement is a "reasonable and delicate economic approach" in economic relations with the East whereby these relations must be "in harmony with common political and security interests." According to Lambsdorff, the control of the transfer of strategically important goods plays a special role in economic relations with the state trading countries.

The minister stressed the importance of the commission's meeting at this time. He expressed the Federal Government's hope that the general foreign policy picture will also improve through joint efforts by East and West. "At any rate, everything must be done to avoid creating any further strains," Lambsdorff said.

Referring to the present state of trade relations, the minister stressed the high proportion of Soviet energy exports in present trade. Approximately three fourths of all imports from the USSR are in the energy sector. As a result of an above-average increase in oil exports during the first few months of this year, the Soviet Union has now achieved a balance of trade surplus with the Federal Republic. "This is not a point which causes us great concern," Lambsdorff said, "but the Soviet Union should increase the proportion of industrial goods in its exports to the Federal Republic."

Lambsdorff called upon the Soviet members of the commission, which is headed by Leonid Kostandov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, to use the foreign exchange income arising from the new gas pipeline deal for corresponding purchases from the Federal Republic. Thus the USSR would continue to be an interesting partner in the future, particularly for the West German investment goods industry. In the minister's view, an improvement in cooperation between the two countries in the industrial sector can occur only by way of extensive enterprise and market cooperation.

Soviet on New Projects

LD131230 Hamburg DPA in German 1127 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 13 Oct (DPA) -- Negotiations on German-Soviet cooperation in further major projects in the USSR after the natural gas pipeline project were announced by Leonid A. Kostandov, deputy chairman of the Soviet Council of Ministers, at the end of the 11th German-Soviet economic commission meeting in Bonn. The chemical sphere was under consideration above all.

SOVIET EXPERTS GUARANTEE PIPELINE DEADLINE

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 12 Oct (DPA) -- The Soviet Union still guarantees the scheduled completion of the planned gas pipeline. "It is a principle of Soviet policy to keep to commitments it has undertaken so long as the contracting partners do likewise," Yuriy Sorokin, adviser to the USSR State Committee for Science and Technology, told the press in Hamburg. The gas pipeline deal between the Soviet Union and West Europe is in the interests of both sides.

Sorokin is in Hamburg at the head of a Soviet commission of experts for preliminary talks on the international "Energy '83" congress to be held there from 19-23 April 1983.

The Soviet experts expressed their strong interest in all forms of energy. The commission comprises experts from the State Committee for Atomic Energy, the Ministries of energy resources [title as received], Coal Industry and Gas Industry and from the Space Research Institute.

Nuclear energy plays a key role in his country, Prof Sergey Fanchenko of the State Committee for Atomic Energy stated. He said the strong development of the nuclear capacity is a result both of aspects of environmental protection and of the shortage of raw materials. In the Soviet Union, nuclear power plants, whose safety standards are continually being checked, are approximately 2-3 times more expensive than traditional installations for generating electricity.

The energy experts indirectly admitted that there are also problems in the Soviet Union with "acid rain" resulting from coal power plants. New plants are being constructed, mainly in Siberia -- in other words, far away from the main centers -- Prof Konstantin Vinnitskiy of the Coal Ministry stressed. Electricity is transported more than 2,500 km, as far as the Ural area.

Discuss Mining Cooperation

[Text] Duesseldorf 12 Oct (DPA) -- The Soviet Union will start the gas supplies to West Europe, agreed as part of the gas pipeline deal, in 1984 as planned. The agreement will be observed despite the U.S. sanctions, V.I. Khalatin, chief of development in the Soviet Ministry of Gas Industry, stressed in Duesseldorf at the German-Soviet economic conference. According to this Soviet expert, the development of the gas industry in the Soviet Union has priority in the current 5-year plan over the various sources of energy. Oil exploitation will be the main item in the next 5-year plan.

In the view of Russian experts, there are also good opportunities for cooperation with the USSR for German manufacturers of mining equipment. Open cast coal mining equipment will have to be able to handle solid rock in the future and thus have greater cutting power, stated K.B. Vinnitskiy, director of the Mining Institute of the Soviet Ministry of Coal Industry [name and title as received], in Duesseldorf. Since lignite mining on the Rhine may one day face a similar problem, joint development work would undoubtedly be useful.

PRC DELEGATION MEETS WITH HOECHST BUSINESSMEN

LE FIGARO VIEWS PREEMINENT U.S. WORLD ROLE

PM111439 Paris LE FIGARO in French 6 Oct 82 pp 1, 4

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "U.S. Power"]

[Text] Last week, when [FRG] Chancellor Schmidt's fall was announced, the White House made it known that Washington was pleased at the accession to power in Germany of a government inspired by the same philosophy as the Reagan administration. That was merely the moderate expression of a profound satisfaction, evidence of which could readily be obtained in the United States.

Morever, it was impossible to be surprised by that: Immediately after the U.S. President came to office, during the visit which [former French Foreign Minister] Francois-Poncet made to him, we heard several representatives of the new administration openly express a wish for the Social Democratic chancellor's departure. His attachment to maintaining direct dialogue with Moscow, his desire to preserve what he called "the gains of detente," especially for relations between the two Germanies, and his obvious desire to see Soviet-U.S. negotiations on strategic arms reduction end in agreement, displeased a Washington where people expected the FRG to align more rigorously with U.S. policy, especially toward Russia. Thus, one of the Reagan administration's desires has been fulfilled and, rightly or wrongly, it thinks it will henceforth find in Bonn a more attentive ear for its recommendations.

This episode is just one of those which, for some time, have been illustrating U.S. supremacy on the international stage and the U.S. "superpower" role. That is now symbolized by the fact that the dollar is now worth more than Fr 7. The significant reduction in the inflation rate shows that the U.S. economy's structures were better able than others to combat one of the Western system's main vices.

And during the recent international crises we have seen that it is indeed U.S. policy which determined everything or almost everything.

In the Falklands affair, the United States gave the British forces the decisive tool for their successes by lending them the help of the U.S. aerial and satellite detection and surveillance network.

In the Near East, Washington determined the successive phases of the war in Lebanon, first enabling the Israelis to win the day in the field, giving the Arab countries some verbal or symbolic satisfaction which sufficed to keep them passive, and finally organizing the settlement of the conflict and showing that it alone could influence the whole region's fate, to the exclusion of any other power, including the Soviet Union itself.

Rarely since World War II has the United States appeared more clearly to be "the superpower." And yet, who does not remember that not so long ago it was fashionable, especially in France, to bemoan the "decline" or "decadence" of the United States: Of course, that fashion had an ulterior motive among some of the people who set it. The aim was to convince the Europeans, especially the French, that the days of nonconformism and independence were over and that it was now necessary to align completely with a U.S. leader which was already weakened far too much. In the case of others, it was simply an erroneous analysis.

They were taken aback by the effects on American society of the defeat in Vietnam, and they thought that the United States would refrain from any new foreign intervention for a very long time and that, in any local or regional crisis, its reactions would necessarily be weak and limited.

That was losing sight of the essential point: The logic of power would necessarily lead the United States to defend its world interests, impose its views and crush resistance if necessary.

The Balance of Forces

It was also losing sight of the real balance of forces between the United States and the Soviet Union. The USSR's military strength safeguards it from any threat, gives it considerable influence in European affairs and enables it to arm and support its partners, even distant ones: But it is difficult to use in international crisis, especially since the Soviets would then have to commit themselves which would mean running too many risks. The United States, however, is alone in possessing the whole range of means of using its strength: strategic and military, of course -- and the efficacy of that was seen in the Falklands and in the Near East, where they were merely used through Britian and Israel -- but also economic, industrial, monetary, financial, political, diplomatic and even cultural.

But the thing which characterizes the Reagan administration in particular is its will to use all the means its power provides to ensure that the United States no longer suffers the setbacks it experienced in the past in Indochina but also elsewhere, especially in Africa, "in the wake" of the fall of Saigon. The U.S. leaders' determination cannot be overemphasized, and people in Europe are not fully aware of it: They are absolutely convinced that the setbacks suffered by their camp, before and after 1975, were leading to general disaster, that they were perfectly avoidable; that they can now be remedied; and that the United States can now inflict much more serious setbacks on its enemies.

An Offensive Policy

What is valid for America's adversaries is, in a sense, also valid for its allies. In that connection the Euro-Siberian gas pipeline affair is a fairly good illustration of the Reagan administration's state of mind. Its spokesmen do not give the impression of being convinced of the validity of their arguments themselves. It soon became clear that their aim is to organize the whole of economic relations between East and West according to the concepts and imperatives of U.S. policy. Thus, Washington's objective is much broader, and the affair itself might be forgotten if the Europeans agreed to the galvanization of COCOM [Coordinating Committee for Export to Communist Areas] on which there have already been far-reaching projects and which would have the effect of almost completely controlling and largely freezing trade between the industrialized Western countries and the communist states. In that sphere, a serious offensive can be expected from the Reagan administration. Thus it can be seen that U.S. policy is now and will remain offensive in all circumstances and in all spheres.

The U.S. superpower is probably not destined to be eternal, any more than any other before it.

It is even already possible to discern the things which are eroding its foundations: its inability to control the development of the Central American revolutions; the aggravation of the Western economic crisis which has been played down in Europe for so long out of conformism and blindness; the extraordinary and literally uncontrollable proliferation of military spending which has forced the Reagan administration to increase taxes by $100 billion although it wanted to reduce them -- an increase without which it would not have balanced the budget nor, as a result, obtained the reduction in interest rates which it expects it to produce and the economic recovery which would result from that.

But, for the time being, it is this U.S. superpower which remains at the center of the international system. And the policy which a country like France should follow for its independence will necessarily have to draw all the necessary conclusions from that.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON JOBERT TALKS IN INDIA

[Patrick Frances dispatch: "Paris and New Delhi Want To Make Their Commerical Relations 'A Model of North-South Cooperation'" -- first paragraph is editorial introduction]

[Text] French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert, accompanied by a delegation of around 20 French industrialists, concluded an official 4-day visit to India on Monday 4 October. In particular, he visited Bombay and had talks with Prime Minister Gandhi and several government members. Gen Bernard Capillion, French Air Force chief of staff, for his part, arrived in New Delhi for a 7-day visit on Sunday 3 October. He met with the Indian defense minister on Monday.

New Delhi -- Mr Jobert's visit, which took place with a view to Mr Mitterrand's forthcoming visit to India, coincided with the third meeting of the French-Indian Joint Commission which made a detailed review "in a warm atmosphere" of economic and commercial relations between the two countries. For Paris, the aim was to "review expanding trade." At the economic level, India and France, whose commercial relations were traditionally modest, have in fact become "preferential partners." There is understandable satisfaction since French sales in 1981 increased by 43 percent over the previous year and since there are "very broad opportunities for expanding bilateral industrial cooperation."

In addition to the progress made in cooperation in the coal sector; the expansion of oil cooperation; the aid agreement reached with the French electric company; the agreements signed in the telecommunications sphere and Thomsom-CSF's offer in the sphere of wireless beams; the final communique mentioned in particular, the possibility of French participation in iron and steel; port and agricultural projects; the negotiations under way between an Indian company and Renault for the manufacture of light commercial vehicles and the formation of a working group on chemicals.

France seems to attach special importance to the Institut Merieux offer relating to a project which, as Mr Jobert stressed, aroused Mrs Gandhi's and Mr Mitterrand's interest. It is true that Paris sees it as "an exemplary cooperation project" because of the fact that it would involve the transfer of a developing technology.

Everything would have been perfect if the Indians had not been anxious to modify that picture somewhat by pointing out that although Indian imports have indeed increased greatly, India's sales to France have, on the other hand, remained more or less stationary over recent years and that the various contracts recently signed by French enterprises will lead to a major increase in its trade deficit.

Since India's capacity to maintain its present level of imports is largely determined by its foreign currency receipts, New Delhi thinks that it is in the two sides' interests for France to study "how it could help India to increase its exports."

Hence, the suggestions formulated by the Indian delegation: The dispatch of sectorial purchasing missions (a mission of French purchasers is in fact due to visit India shortly); French aid for improving and increasing India's trade promotion efforts in France; the establishment of bureaus with the job of identifying possible spheres and partners for bilateral industrial cooperation; the creation by French companies of subcontracting and subassembly production units whose products would be exported; and French action in the EEC to help India. In this connection, the French delegation expressed the view that the renewal of the multifiber agreement between the EC and India should enable the latter to increase its textile sales to France.

At the end of Mr Jobert's visit, the main thing which will be noted is the common objective to set up "a model of relations in keeping with the two governments' desire to make joint efforts to help establish a new world economic order." There is a "political" desire to see the strengthening of "mutually advantageous economic cooperation in order to make it a model of North-South cooperation." As Mr Jobert said in confidence, the aim is to ensure that the present honeymoon between the two countries ("things are really going very well") is also reflected in specific results at the level of economic and commercial relations, with the concern to avoid a situation in which "nothing happens between visits" and without losing sight of the fact that "we also sang the same song" with China without the results living up to the expectations.

MITTERRAND INTERVIEW ON VISIT TO AFRICA

AB091027 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1335 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Interview with French President Francois Mitterrand by Paris International Service Director Herve Bourges on 4 October 1982; place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr President, you will participate in the conference of heads of state of France and Africa in Kinshasa on 8 and 9 October. This ninth summit, apart from the French-speaking African states, is more than ever open to English and Portuguese speaking countries.

How do you conceive of this broadening of France's relations to the whole continent? And how do you reconcile it with your desire, which has been affirmed on many occasions, to maintain and strengthen privileged relations between France and French-speaking Africa?

[Answer] I believe all these are reconcilable, first of all because this broadening is the fruit of a need felt by the participants of this conference. Basically, no one insisted; there was no propaganda. The interest of this annual conference, whose venue, as you know, alternates yearly between France and an African country, has been increasingly felt as a method of dialogue without equal. We will not claim in Kinshasa to use this meeting to serve as a substitute for the OAU. We do not claim to be an organized international institution, but we use history; the fact of being French-speaking permits the grouping of heads of state and governments and ministers who have had the same experience and are faced with the same problems: those of the Third World, with their counterparts of the industrialized countries, who are faced with the world crisis which in particular affects the Third World.

How do you harmonize France's special duty, that is, maintaining privileged relations with French-speaking Africa, and this broadening? It is done naturally. First of all, there are other countries which are French-speaking but which were not directly attached to the French zone of influence during the colonial era.

I will visit three such countries: Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire during my coming (African) trip. I myself as president of the French Republic have had the pleasure of receiving heads of state of Angola, Tanzania, Somalia and others who, as you know, are English- or Portuguese-speaking.

Basically, this corresponds to the need of the African peoples to strengthen their ties. And since they believe they ought to meet in the company of France, why would I not be happy about it? This is in line with my own desire, so long as its understood that France must know exactly what its means are, and while we are ready for any invitation to cooperate, we reserve the main part of our means and our attentions for the countries to whom we have incurred a special debt, a debt of history, which I mentioned above and which are the French-speaking countries.

[Question] Your visit to Africa takes place at a time of serious world tension. Continuing with the political problems which preoccupy your African counterparts: We can cite the present crisis in the OAU after the abortive Tripoli meeting; the new situation in Chad; the fight for influence by the superpowers in the Horn of Africa; the difficult decolonization of Namibia; and finally, to a certain extent, the repercussions of the Lebanese and Palestinian tragedy...

What is France's position on all these points which will surely be discussed in Kinshasa? What does the president of the French Republic intend to say?

[Answer] France's position is, I repeat, not to serve as a substitute for any existing international organization or institution, particularly the OAU, which has its own mission: that of assembling all African countries to deal with problems which are strictly African and to relate these African problems to the rest of the world.

Basically, it is lucky that many of the countries which could not go to Tripoli for reasons which I do not have to comment on or examine here, are meeting in a few days time in Kinshasa. To be precise, however: This conference is not to take the place of the OAU conference. I insist on the informal nature of these things. Simply, men who are in authority will meet around the same table. They will know their limits and the framework of this meeting, and they can offer suggestions to inform the world of the dramatic situation of many Third World countries, and maybe, hasten the awakening of a certain number of industrialized countries. France is proud to be present for this role.

You asked me specific questions... You asked me about Chad. I will say about Chad what I could say of any other (country). That Chad is going through a particularly tormented period in its history. That is a situation which fortunately many other African countries do not know. We have ourselves acknowledged the situation, which was previsouly acknowledged by the OAU. We do not want to play a role that will not be ours and neither do we want to be a sort of policeman who will go to the aid of one party or the other or any faction to impose French views on the internal policy of any given country, Chad in particular.

I am trying -- this does not take much effort, and I want to remain loyal to the recognized leaders of any particular country -- not to make a personal choice. I do not have to do it. It is left for Chadians to choose, not me. If through the use of force or by popular support, their choice is this or that person, inasmuch as they are trying to achieve the unity, integrity or independence of an African state recognized by France as a true state or a fundamental historical entity, I do not have to look for anything else. I could have personal feelings.

I could be worried or happy over any particular development. But when any development occurs in which I am not involved, I want France to discard its old imperialist or colonialist reactions and make a step forward on the African soil. It should cooperate in faith, in friendship and in particular with mutual respect. This is the manner in which France should deal with these problems. It is understood that France will continue to sign agreements of cooperation and entente, and if necessary, of alliance. We do this with many contries in Europe, as is the case within the European Community, for example. Why can't I do this with African countries? This touches on the problem of dependence and security. This cannot be an issue of domestic policy. That is how I see the Chadian problem and I hope that Chad, a country which has suffered so much, achieves -- as quickly as possible if this has not already been accomplished -- all the necessary reconciliations.

Concerning the Horn of Africa, here also I see the situation as it is. I deplore conflicts or threats of conflict, you know this. I think it would be unwise to have an imbalance between the superpowers. What I say of one also concerns the other; it is not in the interest of African countries for their local conflicts to come under the thumbs of countries which believe they have a sort of universal mission because of their power. France is not one of these countries. France is a great country which can -- legitimately perhaps -- think that Africans rely on it as a country which has given up all the strings of the past.

Concerning Namibia, you know that France is playing an important role. It is a member of the group of five, and even within the group of five, it enjoys a maximum authority and exercises its right to take initiatives inaccordance with the people's right to self-determiniation.

You spoke about other problems, including the Palestinian issue. You know France's position concerning this tragedy. We wanted to express, according to our conception, what these people's rights are.

Regarding Israel, I have already said it: France, which for a long time maintained relations with Israel but pretended that it did not know that country ...I went there, I held out my hand to the Israeli people for whom I have so much friendship. But I also took the opportunity offered me to say frankly before the Knesset -- with my fundamental desire to see that the security of Israel is assured within sure and recognized borders -- that I believe the solution of any Middle East problem should be based first on the mutual and initial recognition of the right of the people of Israel to live in freedom, sure of themselves and well protected from the real threats around them and second, on the right of the Palestinian people to have a fatherland in which they can build institutions of their choice. Is there anything more reasonable than that?

At that time, people saw my visit as a special symbol... They were right. It was an important symbol. But they forgot my words. Later, these words were echoed. In fact, I explained in Jerusalem itself the way I see the Palestinian problem. Later, they remembered what I said there. To be brief, I will only speak about the end of the tragedy in Lebanon, the shelling of West Beirut, the occupation of that part of the city and finally the massacres in the Palestinian camps. I told the Israeli Government -- which was in West Beirut and had just carried out a very rapid military raid -- that it was not necessary to do anything that would deepen this human tragedy.

The reason for this raid was highly debatable although it was a success. I believe it was in Israel's interest to listen to me. Look at the consequences: the shelling of an entire city, Palestinians and civilians killed.

France was the first country to suggest that a buffer zone be created and that a multinational force be despatched to this buffer zone simply to ensure that the Palestinians leave in dignity and that their lives are spared. What is more normal than this? I am sure that Israel, after examining my stand, will see that it was a just position. Israel is a country with many democratic impulses and it has had long experience with human suffering. My stand, which was said to be favorable to the Palestinians, was an objective one. It was necessary to ensure the survival of people who deserve it. If a similar situation should occur in Israel -- God forbid -- I think nobody should doubt that I would also say that Israel has a right to live. This is a policy of equality and of the same language. The message is the same for both parties. I am not trying to please anybody. I am trying to defend the interests of peace in that part of the world as well as the reputation of France.

[Question] The world is deep in an economic crisis which hits the poorest countries hardest. On several occasions in Paris as in Cancun, you stated "it is important for France to put an end to the deterioration in the terms of trade of which the Third World countries are victims by regulating and stabilizing prices of raw materials." But the situation has continued to worsen. Is France now planning new bilateral or multilateral solutions to get out of this vicious circle? Does it have a new strategy to suggest to its African partners?

[Answer] Should I repeat that this is one of the two or three most important problems in the world now? I say so not only because I have a feeling of human solidarity toward these hundreds of millions of people -- very soon they will be in the billions -- living in the Third World, but also because it is in the interests of all, in particular the industrialized countries which in their crisis are just beating about the bush. They can develop new markets and have new exchange of all types before the end of this century. Therefore, it appears to me that the fundamental task is to serve mutual interests which is in line with the necessary solidarity.

It is true that all this could be described as talking to deaf ears; these well-known ideas seem to have been ignored for some time now. It is true that as long as we do not have a stable international monetary system and as long as the industrialized countries do not succeed in practicing a policy that guarantees the prices of raw materials which, as you know, in some countries can drop considerably between two seasons, it will be impossible to build any lasting plan of cooperation and durable development.

This places some Third World countries in a dramatic and unjust situation: unjust because they have mineral resources; and unjust because they have a qualified labor force; unjust because they have courageously made sacrifices in many cases to prepare for their future.

Concerning a policy of self-sufficiency, some have adopted it but not many, and the industrialized countries are in most cases not interested in assisting them. Not France anyway. Not the European Community...But also in answer to your question: Can we, alone, substitute for the rest of the world? It is impossible. I have already ensured that France's contribution -- which international institutions said should be similar to contributions of other countires -- has been increased by 0.3 percent, from the figure of 0.7 percent, where it stood when I began my 7-year term of office.

We will fulfill our obligation toward the least advanced countries. We have developed bilateral exchanges and the African countries which are listening to me should now know that France has been and remains available to provide development equipment and investments...in short, it is prepared to contribute to the human, economic and social development of these countries, but we cannot substitute for the industrialized countries which do not understand their duty. We have made fervent appeal; we pleaded. This is what I did in Versailles. I will do it again on other occasions and I hope to do so before the World Bank: in particular before its energy commission. Those non-oil producing countries that have the means to develop their energy sources like water, the sun and forests should be assisted by the World Bank. As long as the IMF does not increase and -- why not -- double its budget, the world industrial crisis will continue to deepen.

For its part, France wants to maintain and develop its aid. Concerning the industrial world, it defends only one cause: that of the Third World. I wish this cause was better understood.

TANJUG: SOCIALISTS, CPSU TO RESUME CONTACTS

LD090116 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1803 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, October 8 (TANJUG) -- Contacts between the French Socialist Party and the Soviet Communist Party which were interrupted last year because of the events in Poland will be resumed. A delegation of French Socialists will attend on December 21 the celebration of the 60th anniversary of foundation of the Soviet State, it has been announced in Paris.

The party's national secretary responsible for foreign relations, Jacques Huntzinger, who will head the French delegation said that after the departure of Social Democrats from power in Bonn, the French Socialist Party became "the strongest party in power" from the ranks of the Socialist International and that such a situation enforces "new responsibilities" upon it.

Moscow-Paris relations, which also included regular exchanges of top level visits, cooled off after the Socialist victory in France. Already during the election campaign, Francois Mitterrand harshly attacked the conduct of the Soviet Union, especially concerning Afghanistan.

While remaining consistent to tis assessments of individual aspects of Soviet state policy, the French Socialist government (also including four communists) is apparently aware that the time passes and the U.S.-Soviet dialogue persists in spite of all.

Paris considers that the "new situation" is also due to the change in Bonn, with implications still difficult to discern.

POLICE OPERATION BRINGS SUSPECT BACK TO ITALY

NC122242 Paris AFP in English 2118 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Rome, Oct 12 (AFP) -- Suspected extreme rightwing terrorist Pierluigi Pagliai, believed to have planted the bombs which took 85 lives and wounded 200 people at the Bologna railway station in August 1980, was flown home to Italy today in a spectacular operation orchestrated by Italian police.

Pagliai, 28, who was severely wounded in a shootout in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, on Saturday, was in a coma when he arrived here aboard an Alitalia DC-10 requisitioned by Italian authorities. He was taken to hospital, where he was being guarded by anti-terrorist agents.

The Interior Ministry here said in a communique today that "the new Bolivian Government" had cooperated in an Italian request to deport Pagliai and Stefano Delle Chiaie, wanted for their suspected involvement in the Bologna massacre. While Delle Chiaie "managed to escape Bolivia, Pagliai was arrested and handed over to Italian authorities aboard an Alitalia Airlines plane requisitioned for this purpose," the communique said.

"Besides Pagliai, who was wounded by Bolivian police during the capture, secret service and police agents were abroad the plane," it added.

(In La Paz, however, the generally reliable newspaper PRESENCIA reported today that Pagliai's capture was a joint U.S.-Italian operation, and said the suspected neo-Nazi was shot and seriously wounded by the Italian agents sent to seize him.

(Presencia added that Pagliai's departure from Bolivia was moreover arranged through the intervention of U.S. Ambassador Edwin Corr who, according to the paper, paid [words indistinct] fees demanded by Bolivian airport authorities before they would authorize the plane to leave La Paz for Rome.)

The Rome reports have not mentioned the U.S. angle, concentrating on the success of Italian police in bringing the suspected terrorist back to Rome after a monthlong transatlantic police hunt.

Accounts of the capture have been [words indistinct]. First news that Pagliai was aboard the plane broke yesterday in La Paz, when it [word indistinct] that an Alitalia airliner had been hijacked in Santa Cruz after being forced down there by electrical trouble. According to reports, the plane had been traveling from Recife, Brazil, to La Paz. All passengers disembarked when it landed in Santa Cruz, in Bolivia's eastern highlands, and informed sources in La Paz said that Pagliai had been put aboard by 18 gunmen.

The 18 originally reported to be members of the paramilitary [words indistinct] group reputedly involved in Bolivia's lucrative cocaine smuggling racket), turned out to be Italian police who took Pagliai from the hospital where he was recovering from gunshot wounds sustained in a shootout Saturday.

After taking off from Santa Cruz on Sunday, the plane landed in La Paz where it was immobilized for 24 hours before heading for San Juan, Puerto Rico. It left there for Rome last night after refuelling.

Pagliai, one of five neo-Nazi suspects wanted by Italian authorities for the Bologna railway massacre, sustained bullet wounds in his neck and lower back in the shootout during his capture, and was unconscious during the flight to Rome. Wanted for a 1974 rightwing extremist attack in Brescia, northern Italy, the suspected terrorist had gone underground in 1976, fleeing to South America. The Brescia Appeals Court dropped charges against him last month for lack of proof, but Pagliai had married an Argentinian woman and remained abroad.

Commuting back and forth from Argentina to Bolivia, he reportedly worked for the rightwing military regimes in those countries. Witnesses in La Paz alleged that he was involved in the torture of suspects there, as well as in the cocaine trade, allegedly controlled in part by the former Bolivian Government. An international arrest warrant was issued for him last September, when Italian authorities made there first breakthrough in the investigation of the Bologna bombing.

Italian Interior Minister Virgilio Rognoni, currently in New York for a lecture series on terrorism, today thanked the new Bolivian Government for ordering Pagliai's expulsion, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

PERTINI, SPADOLINI AT SYNAGOGUE VICTIM'S FUNERAL

[Excerpt] (ANSA) Rome, October 12 -- A long, silent embrace between Rome's Chief Rabbi Elio Toaff and Italian chief-of-state Sandro Pertini was one of the flashes that characterized the funeral here today of the two-year-old Stefano Tache, killed in the Saturday morning attack on the capital's synagogue.

The other authorities, besides Pertini, who attended the funeral services included Premier Giovanni Spadolini, Justice Minister Clelio Darida and Rome Mayor Ugo Vetere. An estimated 5,000 Rome Jews were gathered outside the synagogue when the small white coffin arrived, carried by pall-bearers on foot from the nearby hospital.

POLICE FOIL ATTACK ON CARABINIERI BARRACKS

AU111520 Rome ANSA in English 1515 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 11 -- An attempt at dawn today by a group of armed gunmen to raid a "carabinieri" police barracks in downtown Rome was foiled by police patrolling the premises.

Four presumed terrorists tried to enter the barracks in an auto painted blue to look like police car. Made suspicious by a large package inside the car and the presence of another auto with foreign plates parked close by, the policeman on guard duty refused to open the gates.

The gunmen jumped out of the car and tried to plant the package against the wall of the barracks. The guard fired shots and the terrorists escaped after a brief gun fight, without having left the package behind.

There were no casualties among police.

DALLA CHIESA WITNESS GIVES PRESS INTERVIEW

AU121533 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Excerpt] (ANSA) Rome, October 12 -- The Milan daily IL GIORNO today carried an interview with a man who wishes to remain anonymous who says he witnessed the mafia killing of Palermo Prefect General Alberto Dalla Chiesa, his wife and a police escort and whose testimony has already led to formal charges against five men in connection with the triple murder.

"I clearly saw the face of the man who shot. I am ready to testify at the trial. I decided to speak with a journalist because I am afraid", the man is quoted as saying.

The witness said in part: "I want to say that if I am killed it will be because everything was not done to prevent [it]. I want a paper to know my name, and the way, thanks to my testimony, light has been shed on the Dalla Chiesa murder, the details which enabled the authorities to identify the two killers and, through their names, to uncover the network of complicity".

The witness recognized both the killer who shot the three victims (Nicola Alvaro, arrested last week) and the man who was driving the car from where the shots were fired. Thanks to this eyewitness account, investigators have begun to uncover the network of complicity which led to the murders. But the man fears for his life.

In the interview, the man said that last Thursday, a Palermo magistrate let slip a phrase during a press conference "which makes my safety precarious".

"There is no other explanation for the anonymous calls which began Friday morning at my home, or the people following me." Feeling threatened, the man decided to confide in a newspaper. This case -- that of a man who challenges the mafia, notoriously vindictive with betrayers of the code of "omerta" (silence), is almost unique in Italy.

He went on to say that on the street where the ambush took place, there were many people that night. "I even saw police officers. Is it possible that I am the only one, someone from northern Italy, who has testified?" he is quoted as saying.

COMMANDER ON ADDITIONAL LEBANON PEACE TROOPS

AU121543 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Beirut, October 12 -- Four hundred more Italian troops will arrive in Lebanon tomorrow and Thursday to join the multinational peacekeeping force, Italian contingent commander Col Franco Angioni told ANSA today.

Seven Italian Air Force planes will land at Beirut tomorrow with a field camp, medical personnel and a disinfecting team -- a total of 123 soldiers, junior and senior officers. In addition, ten Red Cross nurses will also arrive with the troops.

On Thursday, a Bersaglieri company and a platoon of marines will also be airlifted to Beirut Airport. Col Angioni said the new troops will not replace any already in Lebanon. "There is work for everyone here and no one is coming home for the moment."

COLOMBO MEETS WITH ARAB LEAGUE'S KLIBI 11 OCT

[Text] Rome, October 12 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo discussed the prospects for peace in the Middle East Monday with Arab League Secretary General Chedli Klibi.

A statement issued after the meeting said that Colombo and Klibi discussed the Middle East situation in light of the recent Arab summit in Fes and peace proposals made by U.S. President Ronald Reagan, as well as diplomatic efforts under way by the European Economic Community.

Klibi voiced appreciation for Italy's participation in the three-nation peacekeeping force in Lebanon.

EANES COMMENTS ON SENDING TROOPS TO ANGOLA

LD121310 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2330 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Report by Cardoso Pinto]

[Excerpts] Austrian television this evening carried an interview with Ramalho Eanes [president of Portugal].

Eanes said that Portugal maintains good relations with its former colonies, namely with Angola where, according to the Austrian television reporter, 15,000 Cuban soldiers remain. The question arose about recent talks in Lisbon of sending troops to the People's Republic of Angola.

[Begin Eanes recording] It was I who mentioned the possibility of Portuguese troops being sent to Angola. It has always been my view that sending Portuguese troops to Angola should never aim at replacing the Cubans, but that it could take place within the framework of an international, multinational force under the aegis of the United Nations. This force would act as a buffer between South Africa and Angola and its aim would be to bring about conditions for the establishment of peace in the region.

Portugal regards the rapid establishment of peace in that part of the world as particularly important for three basic reasons: First, as part of the international community Portugal is concerned about any situation that may be conducive to war, to the destruction of peace, and the situation prevailing in the region of southern Africa falls within this category. Second, because Portugal increasingly seeks to act in accordance with what culture, history and geography have made it -- a European country. It seeks therefore to respond within its potential to the concerns and needs of Europe. Europe is showing great concern over this problem and a great need to cooperate with that part of the world. Third, Portugal respects Angola as an independent country; it seeks to maintain with Angola an unequivocal relationship between sovereign countries; but it cannot forget, and does not wish to forget, the interesting emotional relationship that exists between the two states. Thus, Portugal is interested in helping Angola solve its problems, because by helping to solve Angola's problems, it will be helping itself. A peaceful and developing Angola will be an excellent area for Portuguese of all areas of activity and skills to go and help in finding the path to development, at the same time, naturally, helping Portugal in every respect, including economically. [end recording]

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE SUPPORTS GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

PM121011 Copehnagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 6 Oct 82 p 10

[Editorial: "The Liberal Policy"]

[Text] This is how a Liberal government acts. Since the presentation of the government's program, no one can doubt that it has demonstrated a strong desire to change developments in society on the basis of a liberal approach. A path has been indicated which will lead the country away from the Social Democratic governments' increasingly socialist objectives. Whether the government has a long or a short life, Poul Schlueter's opening speech will remain standing like a milestone. It is impossible to know in advance to what extend the four-party government's policies will be successful in the longer term. But for the population, it is a challenge, the effects of which will leave their mark on the future.

The government has the biggest task any since World War II has faced. Under the threat of economic collapse, it could have chosen to fight its way through the difficulties with a few shortsighted proposals, which could have had their inspiration in previous governments' attempts to formulate crisis policies. However, it has had the courage to force the Folketing and society by means of a set of proposals, which must be seen as drastic, to admit that there is no future in crisis packages and hurried solutions. There is an immediate need for an in-depth intervention which both lays the foundation for more favorable developments and contains the germs of a process which will create the framework in important social areas for a society which ensures a liberal future.

The prime minister used strong words to directly appeal to Danish industrial and commercial life. This is something that a Social Democratic prime minister has never done. It is from industry and commerce that success will come, and it is industry and commerce which must accept the main responsibility for seeing that the policies the government intends to pursue are turned into practical action in society. The new tools which the government is giving industry and commerce are such that for the first time in many years, those working in industry and trade must feel a strong urge to make special efforts. The government wants to stop rising costs, which have thrown a number of large and small firms off course. This why the government is proposing a temporary wage freeze and the suspension of limits on overtime and work rates. This is why it wants to hold next year's wage increases within a very small margin. But at the same time, the government considers it very important that no proposals for constraints on companies' freedom of action be implemented. It will keep an eye on prices, but a price freeze is not part of its program.

The government is a confirmed opponent of the notion that companies can be helped through the crisis with financial arrangements. It wants the companies to look after themselves under somewhat freer circumstances than they have up to now. But it wants to give some help by working out legislation which could promote the investments necessary for increased production.

Just as important is the policy the government wants to pursue on public spending. Where other governments would move to increase the tax burden, this government is going in the opposite direction and implementing savings and increases in revenue from tarrifs and fees. This will no doubt stir up opposition in some circles -- the fact that there will be reductions in the level of public services -- and there will be opposition both to the introduction of sick benefit changes and cuts in maintenance allowances. But in reality, there is a feeling throughout the population that the present systems are not only unworkable economically but are being utilized in a despicable manner.

The government need not worry that some people are shouting loudly. The majority feel in their hearts that society has now reached a watershed and that it should retreat from it.

The prime minister's strong appeal will no doubt be heard, and after the forceful presentation of its working program, the government has clearly shown that it intends to pursue policies which will redirect developments. The results will be a long time in coming. It cannot be otherwise when changing governments -- and the Folketing -- have pursued policies which did not deliver the goods but merely consisted of jumping from one crisis solution to the next without having the strength to do what was right. The prime minister does not want to trick anyone into thinking that the problems will be solved in a year or two. Unemployment, the balance of payments deficit and the budget deficit will all continue to exist. No one could be simple enough to imagine that any government would be able to dispose of these problems in the course of a few years.

What is important is that the new government has shown a strong desire for concrete action and the capacity to formulate policies significantly different from what society has been living with for a number of years. And it is fortunate that this desire and capacity is carried on in cooperation among four parties based on a liberal political outlook. The government's policies are "No" to further state control and a "No" to restriction. In this respect, the program is a challenge to the Social Democrats and the Socialist parties. But it is also a call to the people to consider whether society should be formed on the basis of liberal ideas or on socialist dogmas which have long been dominant in changing Folketing majorities.

Each new government meets the Folketing with the hope that it will be able to carry out its tasks with greater success than its predecessors. For the new government, there is also the possibility that its hopes will inspire the belief in the people that society can once again find a framework which can create balance and stability.

POLAND EXPECTED TO CAUSE CSCE DIFFICULTIES

LD121210 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1040 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] The nine European nonaligned and neutral countries are to aim at a successful conclusion at the CSCE follow-up meeting in Madrid, which is to be resumed in a month's time, although the international situation is extremely difficult. This was noted by representatives of these nine countries who held a meeting in Helsinki today. The Madrid meeting is to be resumed on 9 November. Representatives of the nonaligned and neutral countries told STT [FINNISH NEWS AGENCY] today that the forthcoming talks will be difficult partly due to the situation in Poland.

Gengt Goransson -- culture minister
Anita Gradin -- immigration minister
Birgitta Dahl -- energy minister
Roine Carlsson -- deputy industry minister

NEW DEFENSE MINISTER CITED ON CURRENT ISSUES

PM111031 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 2 Oct 82 p 6

[Erick Liden report: "Getting to Grips With JAS"]

[Text] "The spring's defense plans will remain unchanged but we will look again at the cost of the JAS project. If total costs remain around 25-26 billion kronor up to the year 2000, then there will not be any need to reassess the JAS project." This assurance was given by Borje Andersson, Olof Palme's great surprise as defense minister. He is taking the great amount of public attention with obvious calm and assures his questioners that he will be studying the actual issues involved as soon as possible.

"Today defense is quite a new field for me. My experience from my days as a conscript dates from 1951 when I did 10 months' basic training as a signaler with the Dalarna Regiment, I 13, in Falun. Part of my duties during my time in local government in Borlange included civil defense questions.

"One of my first steps will be to meet [present Defense Minister] Torsten Gustafsson, who I have not met before, to gain an insight into current problems at the Defense Ministry. I have already met Swedish Armed Forces' Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung today and he welcomed me to the post and looked happy."

Borje Andersson said that he was approached by Olof Palme Wednesday [29 September] and that he answered "Yes" on Thursday after a day to think things over. "I was very hesitant, but felt that it was my duty to accept the post after many years in the party. However, there will be major changes in my life and I will have to discuss things with my family. I expect to go on living in Borlange and commute to Stockholm.

"In the future, we will continue to need a defense force which enables us to prevent unpleasant events such as submarines visiting our archipelagoes. And the new defense legislation has already set aside 1 billion kronor for improved surveillance around our country.

"I also intend to work to improve the conscripts' economic situation, and the goal is a payment of 30 kronor per day by 1987."

Olof Palme justified his choice of Borje Andersson with the observation that a person with strong personal qualities is now needed to lead the Defense Ministry -- a person who can also show firmness and determination. "Experience has shown that this is needed if Swedish security policy is to have credibility. The specialist area can always be learned, and with Borje Andersson's deep involvement in the Social Democratic Party, a government tradition is being followed."

Borje Andersson confirmed that he is not afraid of unpleasant decisions: "I am not afraid of making decisions on various issues. Somebody has to do so at various points in time."

FOREIGN OFFICE DEPLORES SOLIDARITY DECISION

LD090852 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0808 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] London, 9 Oct (PA) -- The government "strongly deplores" the Polish Government's decision to dissolve the independent trade union Solidarity, the Foreign Office said last night.

The Foreign Office added in a statement: "Her majesty's government regards this development as constituting a further obstacle to the restoration of normal relations with Poland."

The statement said the decision to dissolve Solidarity made "the resumption of genuine dialogue in Poland very difficult," and suggested that "the policy of the Polish Government is one of confrontation rather than reconciliation."

The statement reads:

"Her majesty's government, while wishing to develop its relations with Poland and the Polish people, strongly deplores the recent action by the Polish regime against Solidarity.

"The clear intention of the new legislation is to effect the dissolution of a free trade union which, before the imposition of marital law in December 1981, had the support of 10 million members.

"Her majesty's government regards the action taken as contrary to the objectives stated on several occasions by the Polish leadership in seeking to justify martial law, which were to establish unity and the process of renewal and reform and to resume the dialogue with the various elements of the Polish society.

"It is also inconsistent with the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act.

"This deplorable action renders the resumption of genuine dialogue in Poland very difficult and indeed, suggests that the policy of the Polish Government is one of confrontation rather than reconciliation.

"As the foreign ministers of the Atlantic alliance stated on 11 January 1982: 'Only with reconciliation and genuine negotiation can the basic rights of the Polish people and workers be protected and the economic and social progress of the country be secured.'

"Her majesty's government regards this development as constituting a further obstacle to the restoration of normal relations with Poland."

THATCHER ON COMMITMENT TO NUCLEAR DEFENSE, NATO

LD090908 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 9 Oct 82 p 8

[By Peter Pryke, Walter Aburn, Anthony Looch and William Weekes]

[Excerpts] Mrs Thatcher had a firm answer yesterday to those who have urged her to trim her policies in the run-up to the general election. It would be a betrayal to take such a course, she said.

"People in Britain have grown to understand that this government will make no false promises, nor will it fail in its resolve," she stated in her final address yesterday to the conservative conference in Brighton.

Turning to the subject of nuclear weapons, Mrs Thatcher said that it dwarfed party politics "and every other issue of our time." Weapons powerful enough to destroy the whole world had been invented. Others had created political systems evil enough to seek to enslave the whole world.

"Every free nation must face that threat. Every free nation must strain both to defend its freedom and to ensure the peace of the world."

The first duty of a British Government was the defence of the realm. Amid loud applause she promised: "We will discharge that duty."

Ever since that war the principal threat to the country's safety had come from the Soviet bloc. Twenty-six years ago the Russians marched into Hungary. Twenty-one years ago they built the Berlin Wall. Fourteen years ago they reconquered Czechoslovakia.

Three years ago they entered Afghanistan. Two years ago they began to supress the first strirrings of freedom in Poland.

"They knew the strength of the human spirit. "They knew that if freedom was allowed to take root in Poland, it would spread across Eastern Europe, or perhaps to the Soviet Union itself. They knew the beginning of freedom spelt the beginning of the end for communism (applause).

"Despite these regular reminders of the ruthless actions of the Kremlin, there were still those who seemed to believe disarmament by us alone would so impress the Russians that they would obligingly follow suit (laughter).

"But peace, freedom and justice are only to be found where people are prepared to defend them. This government will give the highest priority to our national defence, both conventional and nuclear (applause).

"I want to see nuclear disarmament: I want to see conventional disarmament as well. I remember the atomic bomb that devastated Hiroshima and Nagasaki. I remember, too, the bombs that devastated Coventry and Dresden.

"The horrors of war are indivisible. We all want peace, but not peace at any price: Peace with justice and freedom (applause)."

She said that Britain sought agreement with Russia on arms control, and wished to reduce the levels of both conventional and nuclear forces. "The reductions must be mutual. They must be balanced and they must be verifiable.

"Though I understand the feelings of the unilateralists, I understand the anxieties of parents with children growing up in the nuclear age. But the question -- the fundamental question -- for all of us is whether unilateral nuclear disarmament would make war less likely.

"I have to tell you it would not. (applause) It would make war more likely (hear, hear: applause). Aggressors attack because they think they are going to win. They are more likely to attack the weak than to attack the strong.

"The springs of war are not in 'arms races' real or imaginary, but in the readiness to use force or threaten force against other nations."

She recalled Bismark's words: "Do I want war? Of course not; I want victory."

The causes of war had not changed as we knew to our cost. "But because Russia and the West know there can be no victory in nuclear war, for 37 years we have kept the peace in Europe. That is no mean achievement. That is why we need nuclear weapons, because having them makes things more secure."

She attacked the decision by the Labour Party in Blackpool last week in adopting a new official defence policy by a huge majority. It was now clear beyond doubt that given the chance, the Labour Party would dismantle Britain's defences wholesale.

Aneurin Bevan had pleaded with an earlier Labour conference not to send a Labour foreign secretary "naked into the conference chamber." "Well, it's a good thing there is not going to be a Labour foreign secretary.

"Yet the Labour Party wants to keep Britain in NATO, continuing to shelter behind American nuclear weapons so long as they are not on our soil. What utter hypocrisy -- to expect an insurance policy but refuse to pay the premiums."

Millions of Labour supporters will be thoroughly disheartened by Blackpool. "I say to them: Forget about the militant tendency, come over and join the Tory tendency."

She said a strong united Western alliance was a guarantee of our peace and security, a beacon of hope to the oppressed people of the East bloc.

"Britain is a reliable ally and with a Conservative government, will always remain so: Reliable in NATO; reliable beyond NATO; an ally and friend to be trusted."

MILLIYET INTERVIEWS KIPRIANOU ON ASALA, TALKS

NC090837 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 6 Oct 82 pp 1, 6

[Report by MILLIYET correspondent Sami Kohen in New York]

[Text] In a statement to MILLIYET, Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou has disclosed that the Greek Cypriots would, by no means, allow the Armenian terrorist organization known as the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia [ASALA] to continue its activities on the island. Replying to a question in connection with reports that ASALA has moved or is preparing to move to the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus from Beirut, Kiprianou said: "Such a thing is out of the question. There is an Armenian minority living in Cyprus. They circulated some pamphlets the other day. But there is no basis to reports that there are armed Armenians on our territory and that they wish to use Cyprus as a base for their militant actions. Our government does not, by any means, intend to allow or conspire at such activities."

The Greek Cypriot administration has begun to search for new methods of negotiations since it believes that the present intercommunal talks have yielded no positive results. Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou, who is in New York to attend the UN General Assembly sessions, is having "consultations" with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar as well as with various other authorities on this subject. He is going to meet U.S. Secretary of State Shultz and the Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko in addition to the foreign ministers of the nonaligned countries.

The aim of these efforts and contacts is to secure the commencement of "expanded" talks after March to replace the intercommunal talks within the framework of the resolution adopted 3 years ago at the UN General Assembly.

Kiprianou, with whom I met at his hotel in New York, said this in connection with his contacts and consultation: "The intercommunal talks have been going on for some time. Although the position of both sides has assumed clarity, basically these positions have not changed at all. Although we have not opposed these talks, we see that no positive result has been achieved in any way. If we are to be realistic about it, the formation of an [expanded] committee must be decided upon. A committee composed of various countries can give a new impetus to the Cyprus talks under the supervision of the United Nations. We are now having consultations with various countries regarding the steps to be taken from now on."

Stating that "the intercommunal talks could not go on like this," Kiprianou recalled that a similar committee set up by the United Nations has proved effective in the settlement of the Namibian question. He supported the view that "similar views and new methods could be expounded in the case of Cyprus, too."

However, Kiprianou admitted that his contacts and efforts at this stage have not been "finalized" and that he would make further efforts.

The Greek Cypriot administration, contrary to its former tendencies, has given up submitting the Cyprus question to the United Nations. It has sufficed to have it included on the agenda. When asked the reason for this, Kiprianou attributed this decision to the election campaign in the Greek Cypriot region, and added: "We do not want this issue to be exploited for domestic policy reasons."

Kiprianou is the strongest candidate in the presidential elections, to be held in the Greek Cypriot sector in February. He enjoys the support of the communist party, AKEL. The Greek Cypriot leader stated that he was going to watch the course of the intercommunal talks until the elections, but after March, the Cyprus question might be referred to the UN General Assembly. Kiprianou added: "Our aim in the UN General Assembly will be to act as constructively as possible toward easing the settlement of the Cyprus issue."

Kiprianou admitted that the Cyprus question has failed to invoke the concern of world opinion and the UN General Assembly talked very little about it following the events in Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq conflict and other "hot incidents". Kiprianou continued: "The world press is concerned with areas where blood is being shed. For this reason Cyprus has been dropped from the headlines. Naturally, it is a nice thing that there is no bloodshed in Cyprus, but it is high time we realized that the Cyprus issue cannot remain unresolved indefinitely and that we should draw the attention of the world to it once again. The earlier this question is resolved, the better it will be. It would be better both for the Greek Cypriots and the Turkish Cypriots as well as for Turkey and Greece and the entire region...."

Kiprianou stated that an atmosphere of mutual trust should be created between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities which have been living apart for a long time now, and added that "this is quite possible." When asked how this could be achieved, Kiprianou said: "A UN police force can be assigned to maintain security on the island. This international, unbiased force will be responsible for security. This force will replace the Turkish Army which is currently stationed in the north of the island. If Turkey does not intend to either partition the island or annex the northern part of it to the mainland, why then does it keep this force there continually? The withdrawal of this force will greatly ease the solution of the Cyprus issue."

Recalling that both the territorial and constitutional issues have reached a point of stagnation in the inter communal talks, Kiprianou went on to say that the Greek Cypriot side identifies itself with the idea of a federation and that it wishes for an "independent nonaligned, united and federated Cyprus." But the Greek Cypriot leader immediately added this: "We want a true federation; what the Turkish side wants is a confederation. This is unimplementable on a small island like Cyprus. That is why I believe that our disagreement is not confined to details. It is connected with our fundamental views and philosophy. The Turkish Cypriot side is in favor of a confederation, which will actually divide the island, while we wish a federation which will bring about closer cooperation between the Turkish Cypriots and the Greek Cypriots and which will bring greater happiness and prosperity to both communities. "What we want is a lasting settlement so that the Cyprus question will never be brought up again."

KIPRIANOU MOSCOW VISIT ARRANGED FOR 28 OCT

[Excerpt] The Soviet Government has set 28 October 1982 as the date for President Kiprianou's official visit to Moscow. This was announced to Mr Kiprianou by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko during their recent meeting in New York. An official announcement on the visit will be issued simultaneously in Moscow and Nicosia.

Asked yesterday to comment on press reports about the visit, the government spokesman said: "I am not authorized to make any statement for the time being."

The official visit to Cyprus by Hungarian President Losonczi, which would coincide with the period of President Kiprianou's absence in the Soviet Union, has been postponed.

DAILY: TURKEY PLANS MILITARY PROJECTS IN NORTH

NC130955 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 13 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Ankara planned and is now implementing in the Turkish occupied areas of Cyprus a complex of military bases that would cover the needs of all three branches -- infanty, air force and navy. The Cyprus Government is in possession of facts and information about Ankara's military plans, which were prepared about 2 years ago by staff officers at the Turkish pentagon.

In addition to equipping the infantry with modern arms, these plans include establishing two air bases -- one at Krini, where the foundations for an airport existed before the invasion, and the other on the Mesaoria Plain -- building missile-launching sites at the foot of the Pentadaktylos Mountain range, and establishing three naval bases -- a defense base in the Kyrenia area and two attack bases, one the Morphou area and another in the Karpasia area.

Mr Mustafa Cagatay, "prime minister" of the Denktas' regime, also spoke indirectly about the Turkish invaders' military plans in his Ankara statement yesterday. Referring to the armament of the Greek Cypriot side, Mr Cagatay said:

"The fact that the Greek Cypriots are equipped with modern arms dictates the early completion of certain strategic projects in the federated state. For this reason, as a federated state we consider it essential that certain basic projects which were decided upon during our visit to Ankara in November 1981 are completed as soon as possible."

Mr Cagatay asked "that the Greek Cypriot side see the realities and abandon its intransigent stand," and added:

The Greek Cypriot forces are being rapidly equipped with modern arms. Because of this, the question of completing certain strategic projects in the "federated states" acquires high priority.

An official source was told O FILELEVTHEROS that many foreign diplomatic missions in Cyprus are also aware of Ankara's military activities in northern Cyprus. The same source added that the clamor that the Turkish side recently created about the alleged establishment and activity of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia in the free areas as well as about "armaments" and "military activities" of the Cypriot state aimed at covering up its own warlike plans against the independent Cypriot state.

DELEGATION ATTENDS AAPSO TASHKENT MEETING

[Excerpts] An AKEL and Democratic Party [DIKO] delegation has left for Tashkent to attend the meeting of the AAPSO Presidium.

AKEL is represented by Dh. Khristofinis, member of the Political Bureau and secretary general of the Cyprus Committee for International Solidarity [KEDA], and DIKO is represented by A. Erotokritou, lawyer and KEDA deputy chairman.

The meting (11-14 October) coincides with the 26th anniversary of the establishment of AAPSO.

As is known, the meeting will also discuss the application of KEDA to become a member of AAPSO.

AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou has sent the following cable to the anniversary meeting of the AAPSO Presidium being held in Tashkent (Soviet Union):

"The Cypriot people and their vanguard, the working class party AKEL, extend fraternal greetings and warm congratulations on the 25th AAPSO anniversary and wish further successes in the organization's noble targets. With the conviction that your meeting will constitute a milestone in the condemnation of the U.S.-Israeli crimes of genocide against the heoric Palestinian people and against the whole of mankind, we expect that, among other things, you will reaffirm your support for Cyprus."

SPOKESMAN ON EDEK LEADER'S 'MUDSLINGING'

NC081027 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis surpassed himself in excesses and monstrous allegations with what he said in his recent press conference. Everyone knows that excess is the most characteristic attribute of every statement, expression and action by EDEK's leader.

This was underlined by the government spokesman in his reply to what Lissaridhis said in his press conference in which, as the government spokesman stressed, the leader of EDEK considered it expedient to resort to his notorious mudslinging against the government and to repeat his unfounded charges about the handling of the national issue, economic policy and other matters.

After noting that repeated, mouth-closing replies, supported by established facts, have been given to Lissaridhis' unfounded polemics against the government, the spokesman underlined that the people, who are in a position to judge, have drawn their own conclusions and have made their own evaluations on the policy of EDEK and on the importance which it is wise to attribute to Lissaridhis' periodic statements, and particularly to the promises which he so lavishly makes.

Continuing, the government spokesman then replied to Lissaridhis' high-handed allegations that there are prevailing conditions in Cyprus which remind one of a totalitarian regime. He added:

"He argued that the conditions prevailing in Cyprus 'bring to mind a totalitarian regime.' He spoke about 'oppression of EDEK followers,' about 'blackmailing of citizens,' and so on. However, it appears that for Lissaridhis the words have lost their meaning or that he gives his own meaning and interpretation to words which are diametrically opposed to the established ones. Obviously, EDEK's leader must have noticed that in totalitarian regimes the opponents of those in power cannot hold press conferences and attack the government, much less have an opportunity to resort to mudslinging. If he truly lived under a totalitarian regime, Lissaridhis most certainly would not have been permitted to present his own party's program nor even to run as a candidate for the presidency. Can Lissaridhis explain how it is that under conditions of 'totalitarianism,' or 'oppression and blackmail' he can talk of the prospect of increasing his party strength to the degree that he will be able to be elected as president of the republic? Does he know of any totalitarian regime under which the opponents of the government are given equal opportunities to present their views over the radio and television?

"It is lamentable that a party leader who wants to appear to care about this country and to be concerned for its future stoops to the level of slander, solely for the sake of promoting his own personal ambitions. Lissaridhis should not argue that his attack against the government does not harm the country, because he would be naive if he thought that his slanders about totalitarianism do not insult the state of Cyprus or that they will not be wildly exploited by our enemies.

"While the leader of EDEK wants to give the impression that he is concerned about the national interest, which he allegedly places above all else, he does not hesitate to place this national interest beneath the narrow party interest, thus disregarding the negative effects this has on the national issue. Lissaridhis ought to understand, at long last, that with his monstrous excesses he fails to promote his narrow party interests and that he also fails to serve the wider national interest of the country."

PAPER SPECULATES ABOUT U.S. FLEET IN AREA

NC090953 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The U.S. fleet is off Cyprus. This information was passed on to our newspaper yesterda by an authoritative source which added: The presence of the 6th Fleet in the area is related to current developments in Lebanon. This authoritative source, however, did not explain why th 6th Fleet is off Cyprus.

In the meantime, foreign diplomats told our newspaper that according to their own information the situation in Lebanon has not stabilized, at least not that can be seen from latest reports.

"On the contrary," they added, "concern is expressed over possibilities of a clash between Israel and Syria over control of the Al-Biqa' Valley, which is considered possible from one day to the next. This danger," they added, "has already existed for several days and a strengthened U.S. presence in the area could be related to this danger."

The press spokesman of the U.S. Embassy in Nicosia, whom we contacted last night, did not deny our information. He did, however, relate the presence of the 6th Fleet in our area to the presence of U.S. Marines in Beirut as part of the multinational force. The U.S. official also explained that the 6th Fleet does not announce its moves in the Mediterranean and that it conducts continuous maneuvers. In conclusion, he mentioned that the 6th Fleet has separate bases, the most important of which are situated in Italy and Spain.

MOVE FOR INDEPENDENT RADIO-TV NETWORK REPORTED

[Text] Moves toward the establishment of a new radio-television station are being made by representative personalities of Cypriot society. According to authoritative reports available to us, during recent meetings these personalities urgently discussed the issue and concluded that the time is ripe for the establishment of a public company which will install and operate a private radio-television station, as is the case in other Western countries.

Related reports indicated that the idea for the establishment of an independent radio station stems from the conclusion that the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation long ago ceased to represent the people of Cyprus objectively and impartially and that it has become a tool of the state and a means for dissemination fo the government's propaganda.

Authoritative legal circles who were presented with this information told I SIMERINI that the establishment of a private radio station is not unconstitutional and added:

"Article 18 of the Constitution makes the law on radio unconstitutional because this law does not coincide with the constitutional provisions for freedom of communication, free movement of ideas and freedom for establishing parallel businesses."

As is well known, in the past the government referred to the law on radio in order to discourage and frustrate a similar attempt for establishing a private and independent radio station.

PAPER SCORES DENKTAS' INVITING OFFICIAL VISITORS

NC081008 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 8 Oct 82 p 3

[From the "Liberal" column: "We Should Watch Their New Tactics"]

[Text] On the occasion of the visit to Cyprus by Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State, the Turkish side is inaugurating new tactics which we must watch carefully. To date -- this also having applied to the visit of SFRY President Stambolic -- Denktas limited himself to protesting against such visits from the Turkish viewpoint that there is no legal Cyprus Government. He has now changed tactics. The leaders of the other side have now resolved to invite leaders who visit us, asking them to also visit the occupied area under the alleged argument that if they do not see how the Turkish Cypriots live they will be unable to see what Cyprus is really like. Naturally, this is a cheap argument. Our appropriate services, however, must make a note of it. They must react in the appropriate manner. Since the Turkish leadership attempts to diminish the authority of the Cyprus Government, we must neutralize the jurisdictions of the Turkish leadership so that its recognition remains the exclusive "privilege" of Ankara.

We consider it absoltely out of the question that what has been scheduled for the Honecker visit be abandoned in order to facilitate his possible visit to the occupied area. For us this is unthinkable. If Denktas wishes to meet the GDR leader, he is welcome on this side.

O AGON: KIPRIANOU'S UN STATEMENT 'CONSTRUCTIVE'

[From the "My Opinion" column: "A Constructive Statement by Kiprianou"]

[Text] We laud and find President Kiprianou's New York statement that, "the time has come to consider the best way to proceed with efforts for promoting a solution to the Cyprus problem," constructive.

In conjunction with Kiprianou's conclusion that the intercommunal talks have produced no result, this statement proves there is concern for the president about what has to be done and what methods must be discovered to promote a solution to the Cyprus issue.

The intercommunal dialogue has been turned into a parody and, under prevailing conditions, as well as because of the way in which it is being conducted, it is not expected to produce any solution, as the Greek Government very correctly stated. As the president correctly underlined, it is not the process itself which is responsible for the failure. Responsibility rests with:

1. -- Turkish intransigence and Ankara's insistance upon a divisive solution to the Cyprus issue and

2. -- Inability of the partnership [Democratic Party-AKEL] to change the situation in order to make dialogue more basic and effective.

Consequently, as Kiprianou states, we must seek new methods to promote dialogue. How is it possible, however, to discover new methods when one of the corulers in Cyprus is immovably in support of negotiating for the sake of negotiating and the other partner supports this policy? How can new methods be discovered when Ziartidhis declares that, "even if the intercommunal talks are discontinued 1,000 times we will continue to request their resumption"? How can new methods be discovered when under their minimum program the two cooperating parties declare that, "under the current criteria and today's facts, the process of intercommunal negotiations is the best indicated process for a peaceful, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the domestic aspect of the Cyprus issue"?

The government will be unable to proceed toward the discovery of new methods for promoting the Cyprus issue so long as it does not have the approval of its supporter, that is, of AKEL.

So long as AKEL insists that we must proceed only with the intercommunal parody, then we much doubt whether Kiprianou will be able to promote new ideas on the Cyprus issue.

In any eventuality, we will wait and see how Kiprianou plans to implement what he stated in New York. We will continue to hope that this time his declarations and words will not remain empty ones.

GREEK, TURKISH CYPRIOT MAYORS OF NICOSIA MEET

TA121427 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] The second meeting of the International Consultative Council in connection with the Nicosia master plan began at the Ledra Palace Hotel today. The meeting is being chaired by the Cyprus representative of the UN development program. The Turkish and Greek Cypriot mayors of Nicosia, Mustafa Akinci and Dhimitriadhis also attended the meeting. Various proposals in connection with the master plan will be taken up during the meeting, which will last for a week.

DENKTAS WARNS GREEK CYPRIOTS ON RECOURSE TO UN

TA100936 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Text] Commenting on recent Greek Cypriot intentions for a recourse to the United Nations in March, or the summit meeting of the nonaligned countries, President Rauf Denktas has said this would contradict the goals of the intercommunal talks and efforts being exerted to solve the Cyprus problem. He added that to make decisions in contradiction to the intercommunal talks, while continuing to attend them, would not be considered acceptable by the Turkish Cypriot side, or favorable to finding a solution to the Cyprus issue. When the right time comes, Denktas said, the Greek Cypriot side will witness our reaction to these steps.

DENKTAS LEAVES FOR UN, TO MEET PEREZ DE CUELLAR

TA121039 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas left for New York today to meet with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar and make various contacts. In a statement at Ercan State Airport before his departure, Denktas said that during his meeting with the UN secretary general, the phase reached at the Cyprus talks will be assessed and views will be exchanged on the path to be pursued from now on. Noting that this will be [word indistinct] contact, Denktas said that these assessments were necessary.

Referring to the armament of the Greek Cypriot side, Denktas said: The extensive armament of the Greek Cypriots cannot be tolerated. This issue is gradually gaining prominence. We have given the necessary warnings on the issue. It will be my duty to discuss this issue as well with Mr Perez de Cuellar. It is the duty of the United Nations to take the necessary measures concerning issues that might exacerbate the situation between the two communities. The United Nations should be closely concerned.

Commenting on the possibility that Perez de Cuellar might submit new proposals regarding the Cyprus problem, Denktas said: Reports that Perez de Cuellar will submit new proposals are wrong and have an ulterior motive, because he occupies a position authorized to help both sides involved in the Cyprus problem. It is not likely that he will submit new proposals.

Denktas expressed the hope that positive results will be achieved on all aspects of this trip, which will take some 10 to 15 days. Denktas will also meet with the representatives of various countries in New York. He will be briefed by Minister of Foreign Affairs and Defense Kenan Atakol on his contacts. Atakol and the Turkish Cypriot participant in the intercommunal talks, Umit Onan, will accompany Denktas on his New York visit.

LABOR GROUP DENOUNCES BANNING OF SOLIDARITY

TA121429 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot Federation of Labor Unions [Turk-Sen] has strongly denounced the dismantling of Solidarity in Poland. In a statement on the issue, Turk-Sen leader Taskin said that the federation strongly denounces the Polish military administration's decision to close down Solidarity and to abolish the right to strike. Taskin said: We would like to note that we will continue to support with all our means the struggle waged for syndical rights and freedom and the (?courage) shown by the overwhelming majority of the Polish people and workers through Solidarity.

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON ACHIEVEMENTS, GOALS

[Interview with Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou by ELEVTHEROTIPIA correspondent G. Votsis on "The Goal. of Change for 1983"; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Question: Mr. Prime Minister, you were given many opportunities recently to render a detailed account of the government's achievements. Therefore, we will not deal with them. Now that the Cassandras and the calamitymongers have been proven wrong, could you tell us which, for you, was the most difficult moment during the past 12 months and on what matter you felt most satisfaction?

Answer: It is a fact that during the past year there were very few moments which I would not describe as difficult. It is not an easy thing to proceed with institutional changes in an antiquated state apparatus and to have to deal with the interests and ways of thinking which dominated the country for decades.

As to the moment of my greatest satisfaction, there was not one but many. These were the moments of my direct communication with the people as well the moments of successive implementation of PASOK's preelection promises and of meeting the peoples' demand for institutional changes to the greatest possible degree that we could within 1 year in authority.

Among the measures we implemented, I separate the following:

-- Recognition of the national resistence [movement of 1940 to 1944], which was a vast historic necessity;

-- Legislature against Law 330, which guarantees trade union freedoms;

-- The draft law on higher educational institutions, which opens the way to a reorganization of university education;

-- Socialization of medicine, which will protect the health and interests of the people;

-- Democratization of the cooperative movement, which will revitalize the countryside;

-- Decentralization within the spirit of a new approach to the institution of local self-government; and

-- Abolition of the cross of preference [parliamentary elections], which will alter the political stage at its foundations.

The moments of my greatest satisfaction were those which justified our struggle step by single step. These were the moments when the people proclaimed their support and participation in our movement and in their very own government through meetings which very often took the character of a universal plebiscite. These were the moments when the visions and expectations of the people started to become reality.

Question: Could you list the most important priorities facing the government during the coming second year of change, and which do you forecast to be the greatest difficulties you are likely to meet?

Answer: During the past year we laid the foundations for change and created the prerequisites which will permit us to proceed toward building the new Greece during our second year so that gradually we will have a democratic and free socialist society.

The second year will be decisive for further progress toward change. First of all there will be implementation of the institutional changes which were ratified to date. New institutional changes,considered as imperative, will be recommended to the Chamber of Deputies. There will be intensified efforts to protect our national independence, promote social justice, modernize the state, its services and departments, and to improve the quality of our life.

Emphasis and priority will be given to cleansing and strengthening our economy and to controlling inflation, with a parallel strengthening of healthy private initiatives, as well as state control over economic activity.

As of 1983, therefore, we must have the following:

-- Commencement of results from the new orientation toward development;
-- Coping with the question of problematic businesses;
-- Struggle against unemployment;
-- Operation of workers' participation in businesses; and
-- Commencement of the implementation of the 5-year plan.

We will also give emphasis to the implementation of decentralization and of strengthening the institution of local self-government.

We will most certainly be faced with difficulties. Some of these can be forecast, but others cannot. No matter what these difficulties may be, however, the government is prepared and determined to deal with them with balanced planning, efficient execution and, most of all, with the peoples' participation and consent at every single step as its main weapons.

Question: The recent legislative reformation of the [prime minister's] political bureau has sparked fresh criticism to the effect that, although you advocate decentralization, the functioning of the government constitutes a model of super centralization. Regardless of whether or not the criticism is founded, it is a fact that you personally have undertaken too many responsibilities. How can you cope with all this, and for how long will this go on?

Answer: These are two different questions and I will answer them separately. The opposition press has said that we are establishing a "super ministry," a "White House" and so forth. When one reads such comments, one wonders if those who have written all this have ever bothered to find out how a modern government functions and how a prime minister works in our times. Moreover, one wonders if they have ever tried to learn the composition or number of the staff that helps the prime ministers of countries with the complexity of the problems of our country in the exercise of our duties. If they had tried, they would have noted that such services are absolutely necessary for the fulfillment of the prime minister's mission, since the prime minister is responsible to the people for the efficiency and effectiveness of government policy. The bureau which we are establishing, and which is being organized in such a way as to respond to modern needs, is irrelevant to the problem of decentralization, which is one of the fundamental goals of our government. We have never said that the prime minister's responsibilities will be decentralized, that others will be briefed on behalf of the prime minister, that others will make the decisions which the prime minister has to make, or that others will watch the progress and production of the state machine.

In connection with your second question, I simply state that I cannot say whether as prime minister I have undertaken many or few responsibilities. But I can assure the Greek people that I have undertaken all the responsibilities which they have delegated to me with their mandate on 18 October 1981.

The responsibilities of my office may tire me, but they give me pleasure and strength to continue working for the realization of our movement's goals, for the socialist transformation of our society and the fulfillment of change.

Question: They accuse you of leaning toward a "single party system" or even of "hegemonism", in general, within the area of progressive forces. Will the "national people's unity," as you have conceived it as a strategic option, be politically demonstrated solely by PASOK and the mass organizations which it controls?

Answer: The strategy of national people's unity has never aimed at the "single party system" and our movement has never had, nor does it have, the need or desire to embark on acts of "hegemonism." But it should not be overlooked that the Panhellenic Socialist Movement is so wide and massive that, for reasons of historical coincidence, it plays a leading role within the progressive area. That is, a self-sufficient movement which conveys the people's mandate, PASOK, by virtue of right, is heading the struggle for change. But this does not mean that we underestimate the role other progressive political forces can play. The change does not depend on our own will or on our narrow partisan interests. The changes being carried out by PASOK, the third road which we are following, are different from social democracy and the existing socialism. With the strategy of national people's unity, PASOK is building a democratic, free Greek socialism with pluralism, decentralization and partisan multiplicity of voices.

The national people's unity is a strategy of power which creates and secures the necessary social and political prerequisites in order to conquer both our direct and ultimate goals. Within the framework of this strategy, PASOK had called all the unprivileged Greeks -- regardless of the narrow, partisan area to which they may belong -- to rally around the all-people's movement which is struggling for national independence, territorial integrity, social justice, democracy and socialism. And this call has met with the people's response, as was proved in the 1981 elections. The main element of national people's unity is the activation of all the antirightwing forces, the progressive forces. This does not mean that we are seeking a summit coalition or the monopolization of mass organizations by PASOK. It means that we are seeking to secure a military convocation and alignment against [word indistinct] and against reaction, against dependence on foreigners and against the rightwing. With this strategy we are charting a fresh course together with the people. We are building a new democratic and free socialist Greece. With the strategy of national people's unity, with the people's consent at every step, we are facing the difficult problems of the present and looking foward to our country's future with confidence and optimism.

PAPANDREOU STATEMENT ON TALKS WITH CARLUCCI

NC121626 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 12 Oct 82 pp 1, 15

[Report by ELEVTHEROTIPIA correspondent Sp. Karatzaferis]

[Excerpts] Prime Minister and Minister of National Defense Andreas Papandreou yesterday morning had only a 1/2 hour meeting with U.S. Deputy Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci at Kastri [Papandreou's residence] to discuss Middle East problems and the "well-known decision to start negotiations on the U.S. bases on 27 October." U.S. Ambassador in Athens Stearns was present at the meeting.

As Prime Minister Papandreou let it be understood in his statement to ELEVTHEROTIPIA after the meeting, Carlucci discussed the special issues (purchase of fighter aircraft, U.S. proposals, bases, etc.) with the two Greek deputy ministers for national defense, Andonios Dhrosoyiannis and Pavsanias Zakolikos.

Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Papandreou made the following statement to ELEVTHEROTIPIA:

"As you say, this was a very short visit which gave us the opportunity to exchange views, primarily on Middle East problems. We did not touch upon questions dealing with the bases in any way, with the exception of the well-known decision to start the talks on 27 October.

"Naturally he [Carlucci] conferred today with the two deputy ministers for national defense. At this moment, I am not certain what was discussed, but here [at Kastri] our talk was rather a review of Middle East problems."

Question: What about the aircraft, Mr Prime Minister?

Answer: We made no reference to them.

Authoritative sources from the Ministry of National Defense revealed that the two sides discussed "general defense matters" and, answering a question, explained that discussions also included "matters related to the bases and the purchase of fighter aircraft from the United States." The same sources stated that "the Middle East issue was also discussed."

Apart from the two deputy national defense ministers, taking part in the talks were the chief of the Air Force General Staff, Air Force General Nikos Kouris, and the chief of the 14th Branch of the National Defense General Staff, who is responsible for armed forces supplies.

NC121720 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 12 Oct 82 p 12

[Text] In addition to other things, the visit to Greece by U.S. Deputy Secretary of Defense Carlucci aims at implementing the efforts of the American leadership to use the Greek Government's policy as a forerunner for its Middle East plan.

According to a statement by the government spokesman yesterday, during Mr Carlucci's meeting with Prime Minister Papandreou, special emphasis was put on the Middle East and less on bilateral questions. Regardless of the effort to lower the significance of the discussions on bilateral questions -- this can be seen from the aforesaid statement -- it is a fact that the reference to the Middle East question only a few hours prior to the prime minister's departure for Kuwait is of particular importance, especially following Mr Papadnreou's very positive stance on the Reagan plan for the Middle East, expressed in his interview with a Kuwaiti paper.

Although the government spokesman refused to answer concrete questions, it is a fact that during yesterday's Papandreou-Carlucci meeting in Mrs Stearns' presence, the discussion evolved around the entire network of Greek-American relations. The Pentagon's distinguished representative, Mr Carlucci, did not further clarify the U.S. position toward the question of so-called "defense aid" that will be given in exchange for keeping the bases in our country. The pertinent discussion was held from the point of view of the correlation and ratio of "aid" being given to Turkey. According to reports, during this meeting, which took place about 15 days prior to the holding of talks on the bases, there was discussion on questions connected with aspects of the Greek-Turkish dispute and the U.S. role. (this is now an arbitrator's role.)

Carlucci also met yesterday with Deputy Defense Ministers Dhrosoyiannis and Zakolikos.

In addition to other things, they discussed the question of the supply of war planes. Conveying the Pentagon's pressure, Carlucci insisted that these planes should be the F-16 and F-18, which are built by an American monopoly. According to sources, there now remains the political decision on the question and the implementation of the decision by the appropriate committee.

MINISTRY DENIES ULUSU MADE STATEMENT ON IRAN

TA130905 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 0835 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 13 Oct (AA) -- Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu did not make any statement during a recent press conference in Tunis to the effect that Iran did not want to end the Gulf war, according to a Foreign Ministry clarification Tuesday. Certain agencies misquoted the prime minister who definitely did not make any such value judgement, the ministry stressed. In reply to a question, Bulent Ulusu said the Islamic Peace Committee maintained its attempts to end the war and that Turkey was making bilateral and multilateral contacts to support these attempts, but since the fighting goes on, it was not possible for him to make an assessment of the chances for these attempts at this point, the ministry statement said.

TURKMEN INTERVIEWED ON CYPRUS TALKS, MIDDLE EAST

NC130832 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 7 Oct 82 pp 1, 9

[Interview granted by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to MILLIYET correspondent Sami Kohen in New York; date not specified]

[Text] Question: At your meeting with the Greek foreign minister in Canada, you arranged to meet again in Brussels in December. Why did you not reach an agreement at this meeting on a substantial dialogue, on the date of the negotiations, as well as on the method and procedure for these negotiations?

Answer: You are right. We could have fixed all of this at this meeting, but they did not want to hold such negotiations yet. The Greek Government is newly appreciating the need for such talks. As a matter of fact, we had guessed before the meeting that these talks would be limited. I had stated earlier that nothing much should be expected from this meeting.

Question: Do you think that the decision to carry on the talks at the ministerial level and the desire to settle the outstanding issues through negotiations is an important step?

Answer: Yes, this is a beginning. True, the issues are still unresolved, but it is important that the dialogue resume.

Question: A gentlemen's agreement was reached earlier between the two governments, calling on both sides to refrain from provocative statements and acts. What decisions have you taken to avoid upsetting this agreement?

Answer: The matter cannot be resolved by issuing a communique. If both sides refrain from such speeches and behavior, the talks can gradually be placed within a more concrete framework. The most important prerequisite for this is to avoid faits accomplis.

Question: Have you obtained such an assurance?

Answer: Assurances don't have much value either. The Greek foreign minister stated that they are not against Turkey's interests and that they would try to continue to work for the relaxation of the atmosphere. There is a saying in English: The taste of the sweet is understood when it is eaten."

Question: Will the procedure and the method of negotiations be determined at the meeting in Brussels?

Answer: We hope so. Until then, both sides will carry out a mental exercise and preparation on this subject.

Question: Kiprianou has stated that he is having consultations for the purpose of finding a method which will prove more effective than the intercommunal talks. Do you think such a change is necessary?

Answer: A change in the method of talks is feasible only if it is accepted by both sides. Neither we nor any other country wish to search for a settlement outside the intercommunal talks, as we have observed in the speeches at the UN General Assembly. They are all in favor of continuing these talks. An old UN suggestion that a committee should be set up is utopian.

Question: Is it not disturbing from Turkey's, as well as the Turkish Cypriots', point of view that the intercommunal talks should protract, resulting in "failure" to achieve a settlement?

Answer: The problem of the Turkish Cypriot community on the island has been resolved. They are now living on their land in security. But, naturally, lack of a settlement is not a good thing. Therefore, we suggest the continuation of the present situation and we are trying to facilitate a settlement. The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus shares our views.

Question: In his address at the UN General Assembly, the Greek foreign minister tried to describe Cyprus as "under occupation," likening it to such countries as Lebanon and Afghanistan. He stressed that there could be no negotiations before the Turkish troops are withdrawn from the island. What are your comments?

Answer: Everyone is aware of the fact that the circumstances of the military intervention in Cyprus were different. The Greek foreign minister referred to the treaty of guarantees in his speech, adding that Greece also has guarantee rights. It is a pity that the Greeks are 22 years late in realizing the existence of such a treaty. Turkey carried out the intervention on the strength of this treaty.

Question: In your address at the UN General Assembly you stated that Turkey supports the Reagan plan and the proposals the Arab League prepared in Fes for the settlement of the Middle East question. These two plans differ from each other. Which of these two plans do you prefer, and which do you think will facilitate a solution?

Answer: The plan put forward in Fes reflects a balanced and realistic attitude. These proposals are now known to all. What is important is beginning the negotiations. The question of which is better should be pushed aside, and the mechanism of negotiations should be started as soon as possible. In the meantime, those supporting the negotiations should be determined.

Question: Do you mean the PLO's tendency should be determined?

Answer: No negotiations can be held without the PLO. Conditions regarding the PLO's participation are developing favorably. The resolution adopted in Fes is a step beyond the views expressed in the Reagan plan. I think we are going through the most suitable period for such negotiations. Those concerned should not be too late. Such suitable conditions cannot always be found.

Question: You stated in your address at the UN General Assembly that Turkey was disturbed by the way Israel behaved in Lebanon. What aspect of this affects Turkey?

Answer: This behavior endangers the stability of the region to which we belong. We are worried about this.

Question: Is severance of diplomatic relations with Israel being contemplated?

Answer: No comment.

Question: The other war in the Middle East, that is the Iran-Iraq conflict, has flared up again. Turkey had exerted certain efforts before. Is it expected to act similarly now?

Answer: The Iran-Iraq conflict is gathering momentum. The Islamic Conference will further its peaceful efforts. We will contribute to these efforts as much as we can.

Question: What is the position regarding ASALA's center in Beirut following the latest events in this city? Is it being transferred somewhere else?

Answer: It is understood that, for the time being, this center has not been dispersed. I have no idea if it has transferred somewhere else.

Question: Will you take any steps to see that ASALA is kept under control if it is going to stay in Beirut?

Answer: Those places were formerly under the PLO's control. A confused state of affairs prevailed then. Now the Lebanese Government is trying to establish state authority in Beirut and throughout Lebanon. As soon as the Lebanese Government establishes this authority, we will take up this matter with them most energetically.

PRIME MINISTER HOSTS DINNER FOR CAGATAY 11 OCT

TA121435 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish 0500 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that Turkey will continue to contribute to the [Turkish] Federated State of Cyprus' efforts directed toward the future as it has in the past.

Ulusu gave a dinner in honor of Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay and the delegation accompanying him at the foreign guests' mansion last night. Speaking at the dinner, Ulusu expressed his satisfaction at having Cagatay in Ankara and at the exchange of views concerning issues which are directly related to the life of the Turkish Cypriot community. Ulusu said that the close contacts between the two countries have been continuing through the visit he made to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus in May and the subsequent visit to Turkey by the federated state government and legislative assembly members.

Noting that joint efforts in connection with arrangements and measures aimed at securing a stronger economic structure in the federated state are continuing and that they have reached their final stage, Ulusu said: As a result of joint activities, measures aimed at regulating the economic life of the federated state have reached their implementation stage. In addition to the speedy implementation of these measures in the near future, I hope that activities on big investment projects directed toward the future will soon show their positive effects on the life of the Turkish Cypriot community, as well as on their economic efforts. The uninterrupted continuation of efforts in this direction and their serious progress toward results undoubtedly depends, above all, on the establishment of an atmosphere of political stability within the Turkish Cypriot community. I believe that our compatriots and the political cadres that have assumed responsibilities within the federated state administration are aware of this reality. Turkey will continue to contribute to the federated state's efforts directed toward the future, as it has until now. Ulusu concluded by expressing his assurance that the existing close cooperation between Turkey and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and the atmosphere of mutual understanding will continue through joint and constructive efforts as has been the case in the past.

Also speaking at the dinner, Cagatay said that the Turkish Cypriot community is continuing today, as well, the sacrifice it made for self-preservation until the peace operation.

Noting that the federated state is acting in full awareness of the aid supplied by the motherland to enable the Turkish Cypriot community to strengthen its economy, Cagatay added that the speed of economic strengthening depends upon the realization of investments. Cagatay said that the federated state has various problems in the economic field, but that some of them are being surmounted. Noting that the greatest power in surmounting the economic difficulties was derived from the motherland's support, Cagatay said: In addition to our domestic difficulties, there are also outside pressures. We believe that we will be able to surmount these difficulties together with the motherland.

Contacts Continue

[Text] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay [of TFSC], who is in Ankara, is continuing his bilateral contacts. Cagatay met with Deputy Chief of the General Staff Gen Necdet Oztorun this morning and conferred with him for some time. Cagatay also met with the [word indistinct] under secretary of the Prime Ministry, Candemir Onhon. The Turkish Cypriot representative in Ankara accompanied Cagatay on these visits. Cagatay, Economy and Finance Minister Salih Cosar and Public Works and Communications Minister Mehmet Bayram will be received by Head of State Kenan Evren tomorrow. Cagatay and the delegation accompanying him will leave for Cyprus on Thursday after having concluded their contacts. Cagatay will hold a news conference on his contacts at the Foreign Ministry on Thursday before his departure for Cyprus.

Meanwhile, the official talks between the Turks and Turkish Cypriots are continuing. The talks continued at the committee level this morning. The activities of the committees will be assessed at a high-level meeting to be held at 1430 today. The 1983 fiscal budget of the federated state, its implementation, economic issues, and transportation problems are being discussed at the official talks that are expected to end today.

To Meet Evren 13 Oct

[Text] The official talks between the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot delegations ended following the work done this afternoon. The committees set up by the two delegations continued their work until noon today. It was reported that the official talks ended this afternoon at the end of the assessment work carried out at a meeting held under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu.

Meanwhile, Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara will give a dinner in honor of the Turkish Cypriot delegation headed by Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay at the foreign guests' mansion this evening. Cagatay, Economy and Finance Minister Salih Cosar and Public Works Communications Minister Mehmet Bayram will be received by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren tomorrow morning.

DENKTAS ARRIVES IN ISTANBUL EN ROUTE TO NEW YORK

TA121041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, who is going to New York to meet with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, has arrived in Istanbul. Before his departure from the island, in a statement at Ercan Airport, Denktas said that the UN secretary general will not put forward new proposals regarding the solution of the Cyprus problem. Denktas will meet Perez de Cuellar on 14 October.

MARTIAL LAW COURT ACQUITS BULENT ECEVIT

TA121507 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 12 OXt 82

[Text] Ankara, Oct 12 (AA) -- President of the now defunct Republican People's Party Bulent Ecevit was acquitted Tuesday of the charges that he had given statements lowering the prestige of the state to a Danish reporter who later had them published in a Norwegian daily. The Martial Law Court heard the written testimony of the reporter involved, (Jean Stage), stressing that he did not interview Ecevit.

No evidence was found to the effect that Ecevit harmed national interests by disseminating false, exaggerated or deliberately concocted news abroad or that he violated the Communique No 52 of the National Security Council banning former politicians from making statements, according to the court, dismissing the case in line with prosecutor's suggestion Tuesday.

PROSECUTION PRESENTS EVIDENCE AT TURKES TRIAL

TA121237 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1215 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, Oct 12 (AA) -- Alparslan Turkes, president of the now defunct Nationalist Action Party, was absent due to illness from the Tuesday's session of the Martial Law Court trying him along with other officials of the party. The court heard Tuesday documents presented by the prosecution one of which, a radio order to provinces from the Interior Ministry (date not specified) which says, according to reliable sources, Ulku Ocaklari (extreme-right ideologists clubs) could not find sufficient dynamite (?and could) use liquefied heating gas tubes instead in their actions.

Another document read was a letter written to Turkes by a person named Nurettin Omurtak declaring: "Let the tongues of those letting our secrets be cut, let me be killed myself if I betray the cause."

CHANCELLOR KOHL DELIVERS GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

DW131229 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1001 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Government statement by Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl to the Bundestag in Bonn -- live]

[Text] Mr President, esteemed ladies and gentlemen. The coalition of the center (laughter) for which the CDU, CSU and FDP have united, is beginning its work in the most serious economic crisis since the founding of the FRG. [applause]

This crisis has shaken the confidence of many people and of many compatriots in our state's ability to act. This new government became necessary because the old, the former government, proved incapable of fighting unemployment, safeguarding social security and restoring order to the disorganized state finances. [applause]

Particularly after the SPD congress in Munich, it became increasingly evident that the ways of the former coalition partners were parting. The SPD deserted its own government chief in urgent issues of domestic and foreign police; Chancellor Schmidt lost his majority. [applause]

As all of us know and witnessed, particularly during the debates in this chamber, the FDP did not take its decision lightly. The interests of our country and in keeping with the Constitution, it made a new government possible. This coalition of the center will lead our country out of the crisis. [applause]

Mr President, esteemed ladies and gentlemen, our people are entitled to learn the truth at this hour [commotion, applause]: the truth about what has been done and what needs to be done.

What is the situation in the FRG at the moment? We are experiencing unemployment worse than that during the reconstruction years. Nearly every 14th wage earner in the Federal Republic is without a job. This winter nearly 2.5 million people could be without jobs and even more of our citizens are anxious about their jobs. After 2 years of stagnation, overall economic production has been decreasing for months.

Never before in the FRG's history have as many companies closed as this year, and never have so many private enterprises been eliminated. This alone has cost roughly 500,000 jobs in the past few years. This year, ladies and gentlemen, this sad record of bankruptcies will be exceeded. Some 15,000 or more companies will have to file for bankruptcy, causing the loss of far more than 100,000 jobs. What is even worse, 200,000 young people are without jobs; many of them cannot find training and thus not only are without jobs, but also without the opportunity to obtain vocational qualifications.

Our economy's ability to create new jobs through investments has been considerably weakened. While the investments quota in normal economic years was about 24 percent of the gross national product, it is less than 21 percent today. At the same time, taxes have increased so rapidly that a skilled worker in the Federal Republic must today turn over to the public coffers roughly 60 pfennings for every addition mark earned. Yet, ladies and gentlemen, even this was not enough and the state still had to incur greater debts.

Anyone knows that no growth can be achieved this way. This is the second time that our gross national product will be smaller than that of the preceding year. How are we to be optimistic if these problems are also aggravated by a loss in real income by both earners and entrepreneurs for the second consecutive year?

The venture capital share of the German economy, which amounted to about 26 percent 10 years ago, has dropped to less than 21 percent in the meantime -- and in some essential middle-class fields it has dropped to even less than that. It is threatening to drop even further.

Ladies and gentlemen, the crisis of growth and employment has simultanously very clearly revealed the financial crisis of our state. The initial audit which the new Federal Government had to make revealed a more critical situation in state finances than the CDU/CSU had reason to believe while in opposition.

Ladies and gentlemen, the opening balance sheet is alarming: Late this year -- a few weeks from now -- the debts of the Federal Government will total more than DM300 billion. The debts of the Federal Government, the laender and the communities added together will total more than DM600 billion, and if the railroad system and the Federal Post Office are included, they will amount to roughly DM60 billion by the end of the year.

Public debts increase daily by more than DM200 million. This new indebtedness is hardly enough to pay the annual interest burden. Unless quick action is taken -- and this would not have been possible if new elections had been held -- the Federal Government's actual budget deficit for 1983 alone will have increase to between DM55 billion and DM60 billion. [shouts] Ladies and gentlemen, I can understand your alarm, but I fail to see how you can laugh in the face of such a balance sheet after 13 years. [applause]

Regarding social insurance, the coffers are also empty and the reserves have nearly been consumed. The financial reserves of our social security systems are exhausted even though the burden of contributions on the incomes of workers and employees has risen considerable since 1970.

Ladies and gentlemen, how could this have happened? To begin with, it is certainly true -- and I will also state this at the beginning of this statement -- that the international economy is in a profound structural crisis in large parts of the world today. [interjection] I have just repeated a passage from my speech of 2 weeks ago, Colleague Wehner. [applause] However, with your kind support, I will now continue. The reference to international problems must not cloud our view of the problems we have made for ourselves. [applause] The present international economic crisis is above all one of individual national economies, as the council of experts recently pointed out. The limits of the German economy and its workers were first tested and then greatly exceeded. Our own growth, employment and financial problems largely result from the fact that the German economy was no longer able to cope with the new foreign trade challenges. Demands on the state and the social security systems were based on the optimistic concept of constant and strong economic growth. When the high growth rates didn't materialize, the insight and strength were lacking to draw the necessary conclusions and make the necessary corrections. [applause]

The corrections which were not made at a time when they would have been possible with relatively small sacrifices, must be made up for today with more suffering and more time spent. Ladies and gentlemen, if what we must do now had been done from the beginning, the sacrifices we are forced to make today would not be necessary. [applause] It is important to halt the continuing decline in our economy. Unfortunately, there are many indications that we still have not reached the low point. No policy will be able to pay off the mortgage of the past within a short time. We expect the initial positive effects of our program for economic growth and employment to occur in the second half of 1983.

However, basic successes can be achieved only over several years because in the coming years large numbers of young people will have to find jobs also. This is the state of affairs, ladies and gentlemen. This also is the reason why we have now taken over the government because we don't want to be responsible for the decline turning into a plummet. [applause] Therefore, we now need a new economic and a new social policy.

Ladies and gentlemen, this is not one of the usual government statements at the beginning of a 4-year legislative period. [commotion] I note that we at least agree in adding up the years, ladies and gentlemen. The coalition parties of the FDP, CSU and CDU have agreed to hold elections on 6 March 1983. This is also the Federal Government's opinion. [applause]

I am aware that it is not easy under the Constitution to implement this intention. [shouts of "Hear, hear"] However, I assume Colleague Wehner that you, as SPD faction chairman, and Colleague Brandt, as SPD chairman, together with the other faction and party chairmen, will accept my invitation to jointly talk about the possibilities provided by the Constitution and also discuss the ways outlined by the Bundestag commission of enquiry on constitutional reform. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, I am quite sure that we will jointly find a way because we are jointly saying outside these halls -- some even in their own poster campaigns -- that we want to hold elections. We will hold elections on 6 March. [applause]

I want to stress again that this is no traditional government statement. [applause] I am going to explain what we will do immediately. However, I will point above all to the most important points and principles on the basis of which we will initiate a policy of renewal in the years to come.

We are not only in an economic crisis, ladies and gentlemen. There is deep insecurity, nourished by fear and helplessness -- fear of an economic decline, concern about jobs, fear of environmental destruction, fear of the arms race, the fear of many young people about their future. Some of our young compatriots don't know what to do, drop out and resort to nostalgia or utopia. Here we see a challenge to our duty as citizens and parents -- a challenge to our civic sense and to our persuasive power. [applause]

The ideologies of the achievers and the purveyors of salvation [macher und heilsbringer] have not enhanced the sense of reality or intensified self-responsibility, and have misunderstood the spiritual challenges of our time. [applause] What we need is to return to the virtues of wisdom, courage and moderation. [applause] The question for the future is not how much more the state can do for its citizens. The question for the future is how freedom, dynamics and self-responsibility can develop anew. This is the idea on which the coalition of the center is based. [applause]

Too many people have lived at other people's expense for too long: The state at the citizens' expense, citizens at their compatriots' expense and -- we should say this quite sincerely -- all of us at the expense of the coming generations. Social peace and social justice now command that we give performance and self-responsibility a new chance. Ladies and gentlemen, the CDU/CSU and the FDP form a coalition of the center to mark a historic new beginning. What was possible in 1949 under conditions of serious mental wounds and material burdens is also necessary and possible today. [applause]

The unification of social, Christian and liberal thought was the characteristic feature of an epoch which is rightly considered as the most successful era of German postwar politics. [applause] Ladies and gentlemen, I quote a liberal fellow fighter of that time, Thomas Dehler, who said: The liberal idea of man is deeply connected with Christian truth. Man has his dignity as God's image, as a holder of an immortal soul and as a unique and unmistakable personality. Preserving this dignity is a liberal obligation. [applause]

Our state, the FRG, was founded on the free consent of its citizens. Thirty years ago, Konrad Adenauer led the Germans into the community of the free peoples of the West and built the FRG's foreign policy on this. Reconciliation with France and with the people and state of Israel was achieved. We became a respected partner in the Western alliance. The social market economy was a creative work -- it not only signifies prosperity, it is also the foundation of a social order of peace which is considered a model in many countries of the world even today.

Over the years we implemented the principle of solidarity through effective pensions and codetermination, through the continuation of wage payments in the event of sickness, and through the factory management law and the formation of wealth. During those years, some 12 million expellees and refugees helped build the FRG. Confidence in the state based on justice as well as democratic self-confidence and a new political culture grew. In a tense epoch, the Federal Republic gained internal stability and the confidence of its neighbors. To quote Ernst Block, the Germans learned the dignity of walking upright again. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, it is this heritage on which we can build our policy and it is this heritage from which we draw the strength to do what is necessary today. What do we want to do today? What must be done now and today? Our program of priorities is focused on four main points. First, we want to create new jobs. Second, we want to safeguard the social net. Third, we want to implement a humane policy for foreigners here. Fourth, we want to renew the foundations of German foreign and security policy. [applause]

Colleague Wehner, I can understand that following these stormy days it is hard to practice the role of opposition. For 13 years we found it hard often enough, too. However, we had to learn and you will also have to do so, and the sooner you learn it in good style and dignity, the better it will be for the Bundestag. [applause]

Above all, we want to create and preserve jobs. First, by promoting private and public investments. For this, the economy needs a view of the future free from unnecessary burdens, uncertainties and bureaucratic regulations by the state. In the public sectors, the emphasis must be shifted away from the consumption side to utilization oriented toward the future. This applies to expenditures as well as revenues.

Therefore, the Federal Government will raise budget expenditures for the regional promotion of the economy, the promotion of the zonal border areas, university construction and the agricultural structure as well as for other important common projects like the financing of hospitals and the reconstruction of the cities.

In addition, we will undertake initial steps toward tax reductions for the middle class. The additional revenues for the government resulting from the increase in the value added tax on 1 July 1983 will be returned -- in contrast to what was envisaged by the former government -- to the citizens and enterprises in line with the same bill. [applause] These tax reductions to strengthen the economy's investment and innovation ability will be further developed and intesified beginning in 1984, when the additional value added tax revenues will be available for the entire year.

Second, we want to give new stimuli to housing construction. In addition to the immediate improvement of tax incentives for private home building by allowing limited deduction on loan interest, we have envisaged a program of intermediate financing of savings contracts for housing construction, measures to promote social housing construction in densely populated areas and additional assistance for those occupied by the owner. [applause]

The financial means for this amount to about DM2.5 billion and should be obtained through repayable interest-free investment loans in 1983-84 from citizens with higher incomes. However, this must not impair their own investment activity.

Ladies and gentlemen, in doing this we are using an instrument which Ludwig Erhard, one of the fathers of social market economy, used successfully in 1952 for reconstruction work. Increased housing construction doesn't just produce more apartments, but also more income and increased demands in many economic fields.

Third, we want to break the wave of bankruptcies by reversing the trend and encouraging the establishment of new business ventures. [applause]

Particularly, small and medium-size enterprises as well as independent professions with their creativity and courage as entrepreneurs as well as their adaptability, are indispensable for economic and social progress. [applause]

Fourth, we want to create more professional training slots for young people. The Federal Government will immediately submit new bills to eliminate regulations which hinder vocational training. [applause] In addition, together with the appropriate trade organizations, it will study how additional temporary training facilities can be created or other training measures organized for the coming difficult years.

Fifth, we want to improve enterprises' opportunities to make a profit, thus increasing the accumulation of their capital. Investments for more jobs occur when there are positive expectations regarding profits as well as sufficient capital. We trust that the partners in determining wages will be fully aware of this in making their decisions. The taxation policy must also take these facts more into consideration in the future. [applause]

As a first step, we will reduce the business tax in 1983. In doing so, we will ensure that communities receive offsetting payments.

Sixth, we want to clear the way for the application of modern technologies and the development of new technologies, particularly in communications. Special responsibility in this field will be born by the German Federal postal authorities, who must contribute to strengthening our economy's competitive ability and to overcoming the current weak growth rate. The planned development of the cable network, the introduction of new services as well as the inclusion of satellite technology in a modern communications network will produce effective stimuli for investments and new technologies. [applause]

In this connection, it is important to point out that a transportation system oriented toward the future is of utmost importance for economic growth and new jobs. In this connection, it must also be said that the further development of the German air and space industries must be safeguarded for general economic reasons as well as for defense purposes. [applause]

Seventh, we want to ensure rational and low cost energy supplies. German hard coal will remain the main domestic energy source. [applause] To ensure that our country remains an attractive location for industries oriented toward the future and for jobs secure against crises, we cannot and must not renounce the exploitation of nuclear energy. [applause] It is therefore necessary to solve the waste disposal problem in the near future. I intend to become most personally involved in this problem by holding talks with the federal laender. [applause]

In these difficult times, we will assist the German steel industry in its difficult period of adjustment, which must also include a cut in its capacity.

Eight, we are for free international trade and currency and capital exchange. We support the strengthening of GATT and reject any kind of protectionism. [applause] We attribute particular significance to the forthcoming GATT Council of Ministers meeting in these times of international economic crises.

Ninth, we will promote a monetary and currency policy directed at combating inflation. We support the independence of the Federal Bank. [applause] The German Federal Bank is a guarrantor of our currency's stability. We are very much indebted to the Federal Bank. Employment and growth problems cannot and must not be solved with an easy money policy. With our finance policy, we will support the Federal Bank to create the prerequisities for a further decrease in interest rates. [applause]

Tenth, we have decided on a priority budget program intended to put the disrupted federal finances in order. We want to give priority to getting new indebtedness by public authorities under control through strict budgetary discipline. According to the catastophic results of the audit, we will immediately submit an additional supplementary 1982 budget. Because of declining revenues and expenditure commitments which cannot be altered on short notice, the net amount borrowed for 1982 will increase to about DM40 billion -- a truly grave burden we have inherited. [shouts, applause]

My dear colleague, I would have been grateful if you had made that remark here 4 weeks ago. [shouts]

Based on current legislation, the net amount borrowed by the Federal Government in 1983 would amount to far more than DM50 billion. That is irresponsible. [shouts, applause]

Therefore, we have agreed to quickly pass the supplementary bills submitted by the old government with a few changes and to reduce the 1983 federal budget by at least another DM5.5 billion through further cuts, particularly in the area of subsidies and legal benefits and the early regulation of civil servant salaries. [applause]

According to initial estimates, these far-reaching decisions will contain improvements for the leander and communit' s amounting to about DM3 billion for 1983. In doing this the Federal Government is me..ing its coresponsibility for the financial situation of all public budgets.

Ladies and gentlemen, we live in a critical economic situation which calls for a difficult balancing act. We must pursue a convincing consolidation policy while simultaneously not curtailing demand too much. This calls for patience and sense of proportion.

The Council of Experts correctly pointed out the difference between structural deficits and those caused by the economic situation, something that can hardly be predicted beforehand. Our consolidation policy is clearly aimed at the structural core. The experts have, therefore assessed this policy in a positive light. In the new election period, we will submit further bills to reduce the structural deficit even more beginning in 1984. Our aim is clearly and plainly to return order to the state through orderly finances. [applause]

With the program of priorities as a whole, we are aiming for renewal by moving away from state control and toward more market economy, away from collective burdens and toward personal achievements; away from encrusted structures and toward more flexibility, personal initiative and intensified ability to compete. [applause]

This innovation policy is the only way which promises success in strengthening the financial bases of our social network. To do this, we must expect our fellow citizens to make sacrifices and to be prepared to demonstrate solidarity. This solidarity, ladies and gentlemen, calls for a pause in social policy.

What pensioners, recipients of social benefits, civil servants and others are expected to do must apply to everyone. The pause in social policy represents a signal and I think a chance for new considerations and a new beginning as well. To safeguard the bases of a solid social policy we have decided:

First, the next adjustment in pensions will be postponed by half a year until 1 July 1983, but the increase of 5.6 percent will remain. The date for the adjustment of legal accident insurance, war victim pensions, old age subsidies for farmers and the equalization of burdens payment will be postponed by half a year. The postponement of civil servant pay increases will have a corresponding effect on the pensions of civil servants.

The participation of pensioners in their health insurance payments will be also postponed until 1 July 1983. The pension insurance situation that is shaping up calls for an increase in health insurance participation by pensioners by 2 percent in each of the next 2 years. We will ensure that recipients of minimum pensions will not be unreasonably burdened.

In the event of a short-term adverse change in economic data, the Federal Government will take precautions in good time to counteract potential liquidity problems of the pension insurance.

Second, the financing problems of the Federal Labor Office make it necessary to compute the contributions for pension insurance by the amount of the annuities [lohnersatzleistungen] granted. Unemployment insurance benefits are to be graduated more than before and will depend on how long contributions have been made. [applause]

Third, to limit the cost increase in legal health insurance, the Federal Government will extend the patient's share of costs to 14 days' hospitalization. At the same time, children under 18 will be exempt from paying such a share. The medical review of sickness certificates must be improved through the enhancement of the company doctor service.

Ladies and gentlemen, anyone calling in sick without being sick acts in a selfish and unsocial way. [applause] Anyone certifying that another person is sick when the latter is not is a party to the exploitation of the insurance system. [applause]

The Federal Government will not push for the reduction in the Federal Labor Office's contributions to legal health insurance that had been proposed previously. However, it is indispensable for physicians, dentists, the pharmaceutical industry and hospitals, together with the insured people themselves, to contribute their share to limiting the cost increases in the public health sector. [applause]

Fourth, we want more flexibility in the working world. Anyone wishing to withdraw from working life early on a voluntary basis should have an opportunity to do so without this placing an additional burden on pension insurance.

Fifth, in the next legislative period, the pension reform adopted in 1957 must be adjusted to the changed demographic and economic conditions so that is can continue in the future as well. In this respect, the relationship of contributions to the pension is unavoidable as far as we are concerned. We intend to place Federal Government subsidies on a solid foundation. Survivor benefits must be reformed in line with the verdict handed down by the Federal Constitutional Court.

Sixth, it is part of our social system for broad strata to participate in the required asset accumulation in the economy. This is why the Federal Government intends to introduce an appropriate bill on the promotion of broad asset accumulation after the Bundestag election. [applause]

Allowing workers and employees to participate in the productive capital of companies provides the opportunity to improve the capital accumulation of the companies and, through an employment-oriented wage policy, to prevent income and asset distribution from shifting to the disadvantage of the workers and employees.

Ladies and gentlemen, it is the objective of our social policy to concentrate the social benefits offered by the state and by society on the truly needy people. Where there is room to strengthen the principle of quid pro quo, we will exploit it. We will preserve the social state by consolidating its economic foundations. [applause]

The third key point in our program of priorities pending new elections is the policy on foreigners. The existence of a large number of people with different mentalities, cultures and religions together with Germans places difficult tasks before all of us -- the state and society, foreigners and Germans. These tasks require a patience and tolerance, and they require realism just as they call for fellowship of man.

In its policy concerning foreigners, the Federal Government is guided by three principles: First, the integration of the foreigners living among us is an important goal of our policy on foreigners. Integration does not mean loss of one's own identity, but the coexistence of foreigners and Germans with as few tensions as possible. Integration is possible only if the number of foreigners in our country does not increase further. Above all, it is necessary to prevent unlimited and uncontrolled immigration. [applause]

Second, the Federal Government will maintain the halt to recruiting and restrict family reunions -- especially in the interests of the children, who are entitled to a family of their own. The Federal Government will work to achieve, by means of association agreements [assoziierungsabkommen], that no wave of immigrations will be set loose again. [applause]

Third, it is necessary to facilitate the return home of those foreigners who wish to go back to their homeland. Every person has a right to live in his homeland. The foreigners in Germany should be able to decide freely. However, they must definitely decide whether they wish to return to their homeland or stay with us and integrate. With representatives of the Federal Government, the laender and communities, the Federal Government will set up a working commission, which will submit its proposals and recommendations early next year. As a concluding remark, we will do everything to prevent any abuse of the right to asylum. [applause]

The fourth key point of our governmental work in the next few months is represented by the foreign and security policy. This policy remains one for freedom, [applause] one for peace in Europe and throughout the world, [applause] one for all German people's right to self-determination, [applause] one for Europe's unification, [applause] and one for human rights and against hunger and misery. [applause]

The foundations of German foreign and security policy are the North Atlantic alliance and the friendship and partnership with the United States of America. [applause] It is an alliance which does not threaten anyone and which does not aspire to superiority, but which cannot and will not tolerate lasting inferiority for the sake of preserving peace. [applause]

At this point, let me recall a central passage from the Bonn statement of the alliance dated 10 June 1982. It says in part: None of our weapons will ever be used except in reply to aggression.

Our friends and allies, but also our partners all over the world, must know that they can rely on the straight line and the predictability of our policy. [applause] A wavering position is fatally dangerous for the FRG. The alliance is the crux of German reason of state. [applause, interjection]

It is amazing that you are getting excited about this. Up to now I had believed that this was our common opinion. [applause]

What is bound together here is the basic values of our liberal constitution which we support, the socioeconomic order in which we live and the security which we need. [applause] This creates clear priorities for the Federal Government.

First, we will remove U.S.-German relations from the twilight and reaffirm and stabilize friendship. [applause] For this reason, I will be going to Washington in a few days to make my contribution to deepening partnership through intensified consultations and enhancing mutual exchanges on all levels. [commotion]

Second, the Federal Government renews its support for the Atlantic alliance. It forms the basis of our policy of actively safeguarding peace. [applause] One provides security for the other in fending off a common danger -- this is security partnership. [applause]

Without reservations we stress the overall strategy of the alliance for our relations with the East as stipulated in the Harmel Report and reaffirmed at the Bonn NATO summit meeting.

Contains the instruments for successfully safeguarding peace in Europe -- balance and defense capability, disarmament and arms control, dialogue and cooperation. The Federal Government advocates that the burden be shared fairly in the alliance, especially in this connection.

Third, it is our primary objective, through concrete, balanced and verifiable negotiation results, to establish and stabilize a military balance on as low a level of armaments as possible. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, creating peace without weapons is an understandable desire, a wonderful dream, yet it is above all a fatally dangerous illusion. [applause] Creating peace with weapons alone would be a deadly delusion. Creating peace with constantly fewer weapons is the task of our era. [applause]

This is why we support the initiatives coordinated in the alliance which together represent the most comprehensive arms control offer ever made to the Soviet side. Without reservations, the Federal Government adheres to the 1979 NATO dual decision. [applause] It is the very decision which offers negotiations on the reduction and limitation of Soviet and U.S. medium-range nuclear systems. The Federal Government will live up to the decisions and promote them at home -- the part involving the negotiations and, if necessary also the part involving counterarmament. The Federal Government recalls that it is one of the merits of a Social Democratic-led Federal Government and a Social Democratic federal chancellor to have demanded the decision and to have pushed it through within the alliance. [applause]

Only if the Soviet Union is aware that it must definitely count on the deployment of U.S. systems in Europe beginning in late 1983 can we expect that it will contribute to good results at the negotiations. The Federal Government supports the Western negotiating goal of a bilateral zero solution, that is, full renunciation of Soviet and U.S. land-based medium-range systems. In the first government statement by the new Federal Government, I also call on the Soviet Union and its leaders to react positively to these proposals. [applause]

The Federal Government expressly endorses the U.S. proposal advanced within the framework of the START negotiations to decisively reduce the stockpile of strategic nuclear weapons on both sides. We want early progress to be achieved at the Vienna MBFR negotiations. In addition, within the framework of the CSCE, we advocate the establishment of an arms control forum that will include all of Europe, from the Atlantic to the Urals. At the CSCE follow-up meeting, we will expressly advocate the adoption of a balanced final document, a precise mandate for the convocation of a conference on disarmament in Europe. In its initial phase, this conference is to map out new and militarily significant confidence-building measures for all of Europe. [applause]

Within the UN framework, we will advocate the continuation of the dialogue with the Third World on security policy. In this context, we attach special significance to the further development of confidence-building measures in this sphere as well.

Ladies and gentlemen, within the framework of the Geneva disarmament committee, the Federal Government pursues the goal of a complete ban on chemical weapons through a reliably verifiable international agreement. This would also do away with chemical weapons in all of Europe. [applause]

In view of the experiences of our people in this centrury, especially in two great wars with all the distress and misery that visited our country, we tell all our citizens, and we declare this to all peoples of the world: We Germans want neither nuclear nor conventional war. What we want is peace in freedom. [applause]

Fourth, we want to open news ways to European unification. The European concept has created reconciliation beyond the borders and laid the cornerstone for a lasting peace in Europe. European policy was and always is one aimed at peace in freedom.

We must make our citizens aware of this more than ever through very concrete steps, such as a reduction in border controls, the intensification of cultural relations and the improvement and intensification of youth exchange activities. We all know that in connection with building Europe, special significance must be attributed to German-French cooperation, which by now has become a great tradition.

We are also aware that the individual citizens in our country must feel that the European Community serves their personal interests. This will be possible only if we continue along the path to our goal of the political union of Europe. [applause]

This means -- I hope, Colleague Brandt, that we agree -- that the European institutions' ability to act must be improved. The Council of Ministers must again consider itself to be an organ of the community and must be primarily guided by common European interests. In matters covered by treaties, it must be able to make majority decisions. [applause]

The European Parliament must be strengthened so that it produces important political impulses. This mainly includes the development of its spheres of responsibility and common work on a European constitution.

The Federal Republic repeats here the statement of the preceding government to the effect that this government supports Portugal's and Spain's membership in the European Community. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, you all know that much has to be done within the framework of the community to create new jobs and reduce regional imbalances. We all know that a common agricultural policy is of central importance for the development of Europe in the years to come. The political development of the community is served by the German-Italian initiative aimed at a European document. This is intended to provide new political perspectives on the path to the European union.

Fifth, every Federal Government must take into consideration the special responsibility which results from the partition of our country and its location on the border with the East. An active peace policy with regard to the states of central and Eastern Europe remains a permament task of German foreign policy. In this connection, we give precedence to the peoples' interest.

On the basis of concluded treaties and the Helsinki Final Act, the Federal Government will continue to strive for true detente, for dialgoue and cooperation. We want to contribute what we can to making the partition of Germany and of Europe -- the heavy burden of our history -- more tolerable for the people involved and to maintaining good relations with our neighbors in central and Eastern Europe.

The Federal Government will devote special attention to relations with the Soviet Union and will strive to continuously develop them. However, the Federal Government cannot ignore the grave setbacks and hindrances created by Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, by the depressing situation in Poland, and particularly by the excessive Soviet armament. [applause] We will use every opportunity in talks with the Soviet leaders to clarify responsibility for this and to press for positive changes to the degree we are able.

The Federal Government views developments in Poland with great concern and sympathy. [applause] The Federal Government wants to continue on the path to understanding with the Polish people and fill the treaty of 7 December 1979 with life to the degree we are able.

At the same time, I would like to emphatically remind you of the common Bundestag decision of 18 December 1981 which says: We demand that martial law be lifted, that all those arrested by released, that the dialogue with the church be continued and that the ban on Solidarity be lifted. [applause] The ban on the independent Solidarity trade union is not only a breach of promise made by the Polish Government and not only a violation of the Helsinki Final Act, but a chilling blow to the Polish people. [applause]

Father Maximilian Kolbe was cannonized last Sunday. He sacrificed his life in Auschwitz as a martyr for reconciliation. I want to take this opportunity to thank the churches for paving the way to understanding between both peoples. [applause] The Federal Government will strongly support this work of the churches. I call on our fellow citizens to continue to help. As was done previously, we will grant free postage over Christmas for packages. [applause]

The Federal Government considers economic relations with the Soviet Union and the other CEMA states to be an important part of its overall East-West relations. It expects the Soviet Union to live up to its responsibility with regard to East-West relations.

The Federal Government will continue its economic relations on the basis of existing treaties and in accordance with the Harmel Report, the alliance's Bonn statement of June 1982 and the agreements of the Versailles economic summit. In doing so, the Federal Government will naturally take the alliance's security interests fully into consideration.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Helsinki Final Act has a chance to become a charter for the European states' living together. It is also significant for the people. It is therefore also in our interests to continue this process.

Sixth, world peace is not only being threatened by weapons, but also by poverty, hunger and death in many parts of the world. In the framework of its international peace policy, the Federal Government thus wants to continue to strive for cooperation with the Third World states on the basis of partnership. Our aim is a world system of peaceful cooperation.

Solidarity with the poor in the Third World concerns everyone in our country. The state, the churches, the economy and the private involvement of social groups must work together. The development policy has been supported for years by a large majority of our citizens. This common conviction must be preserved and strengthened, and I find that a large number of our young people are providing us with a good example in this respect. [applause]

The dynamics of the private sector must complement public development aid. Considerable reserves can still be opened up in medium enterprises and the trades. Private initiative must increasingly become the driving force of sound economic growth in the developing countries as well. [applause]

We respect the independence of the Third World states and support their efforts for real and true nonalignment. We are against any policy of hegemony. We reject force, intervention and interference. We are for respect and the implementation of human rights throughout the world. [applause]

Seventh, we want to have peace in freedom. We have been living in peace for more than 30 years. This would have been impossible without the Bundeswehr. [applause] Without the Bundeswehr, there would be no peace in the future. Those who stand for peace and freedom must not concern themselves. Service in the Bundeswehr is service for peace, and thus, honorable service. [applause]

A people not determined to defend itself will lose its freedom as well as peace. All of us must make more efforts than before to convince our young citizens in particular of the meaning of defense and of the Bundeswehr. Universal military service is indispensable for our defense. Theodor Heuss correctly called it the legitimate child of democracy. We will ensure that the burdens of defending the country are distributed more equitably. [applause] If we want to strengthen our young people's willingness to perform this service, everyone must be called to do his duty for the community. Those who have rights also have duties. Many young people don't understand that 40 percent of each age group perform neither military nor substitute service.

The government parties have agreed to work out proposals for fair recruitment procedures, the process of determining conscientious objectors, and the organization of a substitute service and the guarantee of an adequate number of substitute service positions.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have explained to you the most urgent tasks we want to tackle in the next few months. This marks the beginning of our policy of renewal and the initial steps on the path out of the crisis. However, our citizens also have a right to know what goals and principles determine our future policy.

This government will create new common interests -- the common interests of the political center in Germany. A society with a human face requires internal peace. To create this peace is the most important task of our legal order.

We don't understand law as an instrument of power of the social classes, but as an agreement of free citizens on the basis of common values. In this sense, we want to develop our free and social nation of justice. [applause] We want to return the state to its original tasks and at the same time ensure that it can reliably fulfill them. This requires an efficient civil service loyal to the Constitution. The strengthening of civil service is an obligation for this government. [applause]

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen: We want a society in which individual efforts are again worthwhile and simultaneously lead to some progress for the community. We don't want a capitalist or socialist society where people elbow their way through. [applause] We want a society where people are confident they can achieve things themselves and don't wait for the state. We want a society aware of its responsibllity to nature. The responsible consumption of energy and the protection of nature help ensure our natural foundations of life. Economic growth and environmental protection don't stand in opposition to each other. An economy which is oriented toward the future requires the preservation of its ecological bases. In fact, effective environmental protection is only possible with technology. [applause]

I ask all our citizens and responsible people to carefully utilize the resources of nature -- the soil, water and air. We face the challenge of preserving the riches of our flora and fauna, and in doing this, we particularly rely on cooperation from our agriculture. [applause] The successes achieved so far in ecological policy are due to the cooperation of all parties represented in the Bundestag. I hope we will be able to strengthen and deepen this cooperation.

Ladies and gentlemen, we want a society where science and research can develop in freedom. They have traditionally been part of our spiritual culture and at the same time the origin of new technologies and jobs with secure futures. Our country cannot do without an intellectual elite. [applause] A free society requires the opportunity for everyone to express his opinion. The mass media are highly responsible for the preservation and strengthening of our free order.

The diversity of opinions requires a variety of organizational forms. The political blockade against the development of modern communications technologies will be stopped. [applause] Together with the laender, the Federal Government will restructure the media system. The diversity of opinions will be expanded, the citizens' power of judgment challenged and the exchange of information and opinions beyond national borders strengthened. Ladies and gentlemen, we want to see ourselves as guardians of social groups. Therefore, we fully respect labor-management autonomy. [applause, shouts] Well, ladies and gentlemen, I am not surprised to hear that remark. The free expression of one's opinion means to us, of course, that a federal minister can express his opinion. That's the difference. The responsible position of a German politician means to us that he takes a stand on current urgent problems and does not dodge making decisions. [applause]

At this point, the Federal Government wants to express its thanks and appreciation to the trade unions. [applause] I wonder why you are excited. The representatives of the German Trade Union Federation, the German Employees Union and the Civil Servants Association talked with us recently and were extremely satisfied that this government opened a dialogue in its first week in office. [applause] Democracy as we understand it, ladies and gentlemen of the SPD, involves talking with each other, and not about one another. That is a decisive difference. [applause]

We all know the important contribution the trade union movement has made to our country's economic and political reconstruction. It was not only for this reason or only to demonstrate our appreciation that I resumed the dialogue with the trade unions immediately after taking office. We will continue this in a few weeks. However, before parliament, I ask everyone and every group in our country -- the trade unions and employers, industries and trade, workers, employees, civil servants, independently employed professionals, artisans and farmers -- to support us in our efforts to cope with the crisis and create new optimism and hope. [applause]

I also expressly address this request to the opposition. Parliamentary democrary needs an opposition. We can and will argue about the right way, but we should be in agreement that we will never question each other's good will to want the best for our fatherland. [applause]

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, our economic problems are serious and require all our strength. However, many people today are suffering less from material poverty than from loneliness and from a lack of security and of a sense of belonging. They are lacking goods that they can't buy on the market or get from the state.

I quote Wilhelm Roepke, one of the spiritual fathers of the social market economy: The market economy is a necessary condition for a free, happy, wealthy, just and orderly society, but it is not enough in itself. He added: The ultimate fate of the market economy is decided outside the sphere of supply and demand. I think, therefore, that our concern about economic prosperity must not blind us to the psychological well-being of the people. The wealth of nations is not based on economic growth rates alone but on human values, virtues and ties. [applause]

After more than 30 years, the Federal Republic has arrived at the crossroads. We must decide in which direction we want to continue -- do we want to continue in the direction of a larger state, in the direction of constantly growing mammoth entities in the administration and at schools and hospitals, or do we want to return to the direction of recognizable entities and to a society with a human face. If we thoughtlessly continue along the old road, ladies and gentlemen, we will plunge the people into a new alienations caused by an anonymous bureaucratic welfare state after just liberating them from the alienation of capitalism by way of the social market economy. [applause]

In this connection, it is of utmost importance and in line with the Federal Government's desire that the leader and communities come into their own again. The federal order, ladies and gentlemen, is more than a constitutional principle -- it is an important result of our history and an expression of our political culture characterized by the distribution and control of power and by freedom and self-responsibility. The leander and communities should perform those tasks which they can carry out more effectively than the Federal Government. [applause]

We want the citizens to help themselves and each other more. The political structural principle for this is a working up from below [subsidiaritaet]. It means each smaller community has precedence over larger ones. What the smaller communities can achieve must not be removed from their shoulders by larger communities. [applause] Families, neighborhoods, independent sponsoring organizations [free traeger], initiative and self-help groups as well as social services can produce more civic sense and more civic responsibility than will ever be possible for large anonymous institutions. [applause]

Our social policy will help whereever possible to create, build and preserve voluntary social initiatives of the citizens. Therefore, we will start a competition of social initiatives and honor special examples of and cooperation where it is practiced. We do not just want to complain about bad examples in the Federal Republic. We want to set signals by way of good examples. [applause] In the future, our state must also help those who are in distress and really in need. However, only if people increasingly help each other can the human quality of our body politic grow.

The sovereignty and independence of the churches and religious communities and their coresponsibility and participation in shaping public welfare are an indispensable condition for a free state and free society. A society with a human face needs the voice of the churches, their frank and critical words, their social commitment and their active charity. We thank the churches for these great achievements. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, it has become fashionable in our country to complain about the young generation. I think most of these complaints are exaggerated and largely irrelevant. Most of our young citizens offer us an example through their fresh imaginations and readiness to serve their neighbors. [applause]

The Federal Government welcomes the cooperation of so many young people in the FRG in groups and associations which have social, political, cultural, religious and athletic functions. Young people seek and find in these groups comradeship and friendship, human closeness and security. There they make use of the opportunity to bring meaning into their own activities through their participation. We should more often talk about and recognize this. This constitutes part of the contribution in the dialogue with the young generation. [applause]

The Federal Government will take seriously the new social movements and the projects of young people supported by these movements. It will constructively debate their form and content. Young people are entitled to meet with understanding, and they also have a right to contradict. [applause]

The Federal Government is aware that especially our young citizens expect us to do everything to reduce the oppressive unemployment of the young. The fact that many people's first experience with working life is unemployment is cause for bitterness and often resignation. We will do everything possible to provide our young citizens with good training and, if possible, jobs. [applause]

Our country's future depends on the qualifications, the education and training of the young generation. Last Friday, I pointed out in initial talks with top representatives from the German economy, trade, banks and crafts how urgent this problem is, and received assurances. I am grateful for these assurances and am sure that they will be kept this time too, just as they were kept in the past. [applause]

A central point of our policy if family policy. It is in the family that man learns the virtues and manners which give our society humanistic features -- love and confidence, tolerance and regard for others, readiness to sacrifice and share in responsibilities. Our guiding image is the family of partnership which is marked by the partnership between husband and wife and between parents and chidlren. The community of parents and children provides fulfillment in life and happiness.

Our liberal society, ladies and gentlemen, does not have nay specific picture of woman -- not that of housewife or of working woman. An increasing number of women view their profession as just as an important part of their life's planning as the family. The Federal Government will work toward creating more options for combining family and job for women and men a like. Part-time work and job sharing are options. We should really make rapid headway in the implementation of this course through an amendment in the legal provisions. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, as far as we are concerned, a job in one's vocation is not just work outside the home, it is also the work of the housewife in the family and with her children. [applause] Therefore, the Federal Government will improve the individual social security standing of women, as soon as this is financially feasible and can be financed, and chalk up the years spent in the rearing of children to pension insurance. [applause] Along with the number of children, the economic potential of the family weakens. This is why the equalization of family burdens is of very great significance to us. Despite the difficult financial situation, ladies and gentlemen, we have not envisaged a general cut in the children's bonus. [applause]

In a time of scarce funds, it is a commandment of social justice and necessity that parents having higher incomes must be satisfied with lower children's bonuses. [applause] We do not ask the people of the low-income brackets to make these sacrifices, but those who can much rather be expected to make them. We intend to make the taxation provisions more family-considerate. Effective 1 January 1984, the split tax assessment system for married couples will be changed into a split assessment for families. [applause]

It is not just the small family, but also the community of generations in the family that provides society with human features. Especially the solidarity of the generations reflected by their mutual abandon in situations of distress, in sickness and need for care, testifies to the strength of the community in life called the family. This strength can do more in these respects than any state assistance alone ever could. [applause]

By means of corresponding measures for promoting housing construction, the Federal Government will help to again achieve several generations being able to live under one roof and children looking after and caring for their parents in their old age. [applause] For this purpose, we need more social services such as, for example, social stations, which have had a beneficial impact as a center of unpaid cooperation in many FRG laenders. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the decrease in the FRG birth rate and its disastrous consequences are bound to concern everybody. We are aware that many parents would like to have more children than they have. I believe that all of us in all spheres of society must contribute toward turning our country into one that is considerate of children again. [applause]

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, renewal includes the recollection of German history. The national state of the Germans has broken apart. The german nation has remained, and it will continue to exist. [applause]

All of us know that overcoming the partition is possible only in historical periods of time. It is in a special manner that 1983 will remind us of highs and lows in our history; Martin Luther was born 500 years ago; German dictatorship, and with it, the way to disaster, began 50 years ago; it was 30 years ago that the workers in East Berlin revolted against the communist tyranny. These events urge us to recall our own history.

Our republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, emerged in the shadow of catastrophe. Meanwhile, it has a history of its own. We intend to work toward having a collection on German history since 1945 set up in Bonn, the Federal capital, as soon as possible; a collection that will be dedicated to the history of our state and of the divided nation.

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, all of us cannot bring the unity of the nation about by force. Yet the preamble of the basic law is applicable to all of us: The entire Germany in free self-determination.

The wall, the barbed wire and the order to shoot are not and cannot be the last word between East and West in Germany, in Europe and in the world. Humaneness and commonsense refuse to tolerate this. [applause]

Ideas are free, and people must be able to move from Germany to Germany without the danger of death. [applause]

The will of the Basic Law has found entry in the contractual agreements with our Western friends, but also in the treaties with the Eastern neighbors. We respect the rights and responsibility of the four powers with respect to Germany as a whole and to Berlin. The three Western powers support our policy on Germany. A modus vivendi has been agreed on with the East. We adhere to these treaties. We will utilize them as instruments of an active peace policy.

The GDR, ladies and gentlemen, may rest assured that we abide by commitments made and we likewise expect the GDR to abide by the letter and spirit of these treaties. [applause] This also means consolidating peace in the center of Europe by the preclusion of violence in the pursuit of political objectives and the improvemnt in the situation of separated people. What applies here in a particular way is what Hans-Dietrich Genscher has said: policy on Germany is European peace policy. [applause] The letter on German unity dated 12 August 1970, which is part of the treaties, unequivocally formulates the goal of our policy: working toward a state of peace in Europe in which the German people will regain their unity in free self-determination. In the interest of the Germans and their neighbors in Europe, the cooperation of the German states must be improved. We will continue the negotiations and talks that are in progress. We are interested in comprehensive, longer-term agreements for the benefit of the people and on the basis of the valid treaties.

By loyalty to contracts, the Federal Government understands that it is not permissible to call in question post facto what had been in accord between the two parties when the contract was concluded. This also includes the agreement that certain fundamental questions have remained open in connection with the basic treaty. These do not lend themselves to settlement today, either.

It is not in keeping with our interpretation of loyalty to contracts if the settlement of these questions now were made the precondition for the further development of relations.

Ladies and gentlemen, inter-German trade remains an important element of cooperation. The Federal Republic of Germany is prepared to expand this trade for the benefit of Berlin as well on the basis of the Berlin Agreement of 1951 and its addenda. But we do insist on the retraction of the increase in the minimum exchange rate for visitors to East Berlin and the GDR. [applause]

It is easy for the GDR to indicate its readiness and will for improving relations. The GDR Government is aware of our wishes with respect to the improvement in tourist travel and visitor traffic, above all for Berlin. This year the GDR has undertaken some small steps in this direction. All the same, ladies and gentlemen, we are still far from normalization and from the good neighborliness envisaged in the basic treaty.

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, the situation of Germany is reflected in the focus on Berlin. The Federal Government considers Berlin a political task and an opportunity for all Germans. What we advocate is the guarantee of the strict observance and full application of the quadripartite agreement. What we advocate is the consolidation and development of Berlin's ties with the Federal Republic and the preservation of Berlin's outward representation by the Federal Government.

The Federal Government promotes the joint efforts required for the compensation of Berlin's isolated situation. This applies to the aid to Berlin and the promotion of Berlin just as it applies to the communications routes to and from Berlin. [applause] The Federal Government will champion Berlin's economic strength. The objective is to halt the far above-average decrease in industrial jobs over many years and to insure employment that has a safe future and will be competitive. [applause]

In pursuing the agreements made by my predecessor, I will, jointly with Berlin's governing mayor, invite the representatives of the German economy to Berlin to discuss the options of an intensified Berlin engagement. [applause]

The social and economic viability enables Berlin to handle tasks on behalf of all Germans which must be handled for all Germans. Berlin remains the criterion for judging the state of East-West relations, and Berlin is the symbol of the unsolved German problem. [applause] The problem in all of Germany, on this side and beyond the wall, may rest assured: We will serve our German fatherland tenaciously, patiently and peaceably. [applause]

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, our people needs new hopes, new optimism, new self-confidence. We are aware that our fellow citizens place great expectations in our policy of renewal. The first German democracy was destroyed by the extremists from the right and the left. The second German democracy has been built out of the political center of our people, and I am profoundly convinced that it will also find the strength for renewal in this center. [applause] This is why we are looking toward the future with optimism, and our optimism, ladies and gentlemen, is based on what we can do, what we believe, and we stick to that.

First, we believe in the dignity of man, his uniqueness and his freedom. This ties us all together.

Second, we are convinced that free initiative and performance are better for the individual as well as for the whole than are state dirigisme and tutelage. We trust in the citizen who takes his future into his own hands. [applause]

Third, we realize that performance, the creative work of man, has social meaning and constitutes a social obligation. Anyone refusing to perform even though he could acts in an unsocial way. He exploits his neighbor. [applause]

Fourth, we think it is just to again emphasize the interconnection between give and take. Whoever denies this interconnection makes our people poorer and jeopardizes the bases of social security.

Fifth, we advocate the view that the weak and needy are entitled to the solidary assistance of all. But we realize that people need more than just money and care.

Sixth, we trust in the will for community in our people. We know that partnership and solidarity exist above and beyond all groups and social boundaries.

Seventh, we believe that it is the foremost duty of free citizens to make every effort to defend freedom and to preserve the hope for freedom harbored by others. What applies without any change is the passage with which Konrad Adenauer concluded his first government statement before the German Bundestag on 20 September 1949. What he said was this: We hope -- this is our goal -- that we will succeed with God's help in leading the German people upward and in contributing toward peace in Europe and the world. [lengthy applause]

FDP'S GENSCHER OUTLINES GOVERNMENT POLICY

[Excerpts] Bonn, 13 Oct (DPA) -- The FDP chairman and foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Gesncher, defended himself emphatically at the beginning of his speech [to the Bundestag in the debate on Kohl's statement] on the attacks of the SPD. He accused the former coalition partner of defamation, which would damage their joint foundations. What had been set in motion before the state elections in Bavaria and Hesse by the Social Democrats, including the disturbance of meetings by SPD functionaries, was "no contribution to internal peace." Genscher called the diary of the former government spokesman, Klaus Boelling, which is about the last 30 days of the coalition and which was published this week, a "cold-bloodedly planned disparagement."

The FDP leader, whose remarks were repeatedly accompanied by interjections from the SPD group, went into detail about the end of the social-liberal coalition. The SPD, which since October 1980 had gradually distanced itself from the policies of the Federal Government and had not been ready to continue the economic and social course agreed by the SPD and the FDP, is to blame for the collapse. What was economically necessary had been blocked by the social policy decisions of the SPD party congress in Munich.

Genscher emphatically defended the program of the new government against the criticism of the SPD. The "coalition of the center" of the FDP, CDU and CSU wanted to guarantee the continuity, predictability and clarity of German foreign and security policy. "We want to achieve the economic and social renewal of our country and thus also to free forces to effectively combat unemployment. We want to secure and develop our free state, which is based on the rule of law," Genscher said. It is not a question -- as the SPD insisted -- of a return to a selfish society, but a question of creating a society with responsibilities instead of demands. The aim of the new policy is not to save ourselves only to die, but to save ourselves to be strong.

Genscher gave assurances that the government would submit itself to the judgement of the electors on 6 March. Before this election, the new coalition wanted to "put the house in order." By passing the federal budget and the savings laws, "we are not running away from our responsibility; that too is our electoral duty," Genscher said. "The liberal party is more than just a chancellor-electing body." Genscher accused the former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, of not using the opportunity to call new elections.

Genscher said that the coalition of the center, made up of the Union and the FDP, had founded the social market economy after the war and had led the Federal Republic into the Western alliance. This was something the new coalition could carry on today.

Turning to the Social Democrats, Genscher demanded an end to the idea that they had a party monopoly on peace policies. Every government of the Federal Republic, from the very beginning, had pursued peace policies. Genscher also gave a strong warning against the theory that the Federal Republic could create creater security for itself by equally distancing itself from both superpowers: the United States and the Soviet Union. The Federal Republic is allied to the United States "because they are democrats like us." The Federal Republic's relations with the United States also determined the FRG's weight with the USSR.

Genscher gave another strong assurance that the continuity of previous foreign policy would be maintained. The new Federal Government would not only respect treaties with the East, but fulfill them thoroughly. The government wants good neighborliness and detente with the Eastern states. In this connection, Genscher sharply criticized the ban on the free trade union Solidarity in Poland, which is a barrier to East-West relations in general. "Solidarity" would live on as a symbol for social innovation, because symbols could not be destroyed by bans.

Genscher declared his strong support for the Germany policy, which he called the heart of the policy of the new government. "The GDR leadership should know that the Federal Government will be a reliable partner on the basis of the treaties and agreements reached," the foreign minister said. "We will face them [the GDR leadership] with the will to negotiate and conduct a dialogue." Both German states have a particular responsibility for the preservation of peace. "It is true and it must always be true that no more war -- either hot or cold -- must emanate from German soil."

SCHMIDT SAYS CDU/CSU WANT TO 'AVOID' ELECTIONS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) Former Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt (SPD) accused the CDU/CSU and FDP leadership of wanting to avoid fresh elections, contrary to their assurances. Following the government statement by Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl, it remains completely open whether Bundestag elections will take place on 6 March, Schmidt said in a statement published in Bonn today.

Explaining his views, Schmidt said that at the moment, the FDP would get less than 5 percent of the vote and would thus be excluded from the Bundestag. The CDU/CSU has no chance of an absolute majority and is dependent on the FDP for forming a majority. That is why Chancellor Kohl, although he spoke of a date for fresh elections to the Bundestag, nevertheless refused to take the road provided by the Basic Law for this eventuality. Kohl deliberately gave no consideration to resigning as a means to fresh elections and made no other proposals either. CSU Chairman Franz-Josef Strauss refrained from demanding immediate fresh elections after the Hesse election result demonstrated that the CSU has no chance at all of gaining an absolute majority.

LAMBSDORFF SEES NO PROSPECT FOR GROWTH IN 1983

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff (FDP) regards the fight against unemployment as the most important task of the immediate future. As the first speaker in the second day's debate on Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government statement, Lambsdorff said at the same time that there is no "more difficult task."

According to Lambsdorff, the new Federal Government is expecting no real growth in 1983. Lambsdorff, who was also economics minister in the previous government, stressed that he will retract nothing of what the SPD and FDP had done together.

Lambsdorff expressly emphasized the "leadership" of former Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was respected throughout the world. This had increasingly diminished, however. The economics minister unequivocally blamed Schmidt's own party for this. Lambsdorff made it clear that broad sections of the SPD had withdrawn their support from Schmidt, for example in the nuclear energy question and on security policy.

Alluding to strong personal clashes on the first day of debate in the Bundestag, Lambsdorff said he would not participate in disparaging others. What is important now is to pursue the correct road. A revival of the economy cannot be expected immediately. "The road will be a rocky one." Lambsdorff strongly supported the principles of social market economy.

KOHL HOLDS BONN TALKS WITH USSR'S KOSTANDOV

LD132000 Hamburg DPA in German 1933 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 13 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl met Leonid Kostandov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers in Bonn on Wednesday. They discussed German-Soviet economic relations.

A government spokesman said that the federal minister of economic affairs, Count Otto Lambsdorff, and the FRG ambassador to Moscow, Andreas Meyer-Landrut, were also at the discussion. Kostandov attended the 11th session of the German-Soviet economic commission in Bonn as the head of the Moscow delegation.

DIE WELT REPORTS ON USSR, EAST BLOC SPIES IN FRG

[Manfred Schell report]

[Text] Bonn -- The counterintelligence organization "recognized" a total of 238 members of the permanent "GDR" representation and of East European embassies and state missions in Bonn and West Berlin as being aides of foreign intelligence services. Some 199 additional persons are suspected of engaging in espionage, says the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution's (BFV) report on "Realization From 1981 Anti-Espionage Activities."

Of the permanent "GDR" representation in Bonn with its official staff of 46 people, which actually amounts to 71 including the cooperating wives, 8 persons were recognized as being intelligence people. Additional information says that among them is also the representation's deputy chief, Botschaftsrat Schindler. Counterintelligence also registered that a woman who was formerly employed by the main administration for collection of foreign intelligence of the Ministry for State Security (MFS) in East Berlin advanced to become Schindler's aide. According to a BFV list, one aide of the trade-political department of the "GDR" representation in Duesseldorf and one person of the GDR "foreign sales and procurement organization" in Duesseldorf were "recognized" as being spies. The number of suspects in the field of the "GDR" representation and other organizations is given as 15.

According to BFV figures, main activities emanate from the Soviet Embassy and other Moscow state installations. Some 109 members were considered to be "recognized" as aides of intelligence services. Some 77 people are considered as suspects. According to these figures, some 31 spies incuding the staff of the military attache, sit in the Soviet Embassy, 6 in the Soviet Union's trade representation in Cologne, 13 in the Hamburg Consultate General, 3 in the West Berlin Consultate General and 50 in the Soviet military missions in Baden-Baden, Buende and Frankfurt.

The BFV "recognized" one of the Soviet correspondents in Bonn as a spy. Counterintelligence also assumes that one aide of "Sovexportfilm" also works for the intelligence organization.

Of the Polish Embassy personnel and the personnel of other Polish state installations, some 36 people were identified as intelligence people; the number of "suspects" is said to be 20. As regards the CSSR, 29 people were "recognized" as intelligence aides, with the trade and consulary department in Cologne being considered a center with 13 people. Moreover, 24 persons were considered to be suspects. In the field of Bulgarian representations, 13 people were considered to be "recognized" intelligence aides. Among the Romanians there are 19 people; among the Hungarians 3, and the Yugoslavs 7. In the Cuban Embassy in Bonn there are four spies. Among the Chinese personnel, 6 people were recognized as being spies.

According to the BFV, the antagonists' intelligence services have taken over in addition to their "traditional" task of gathering information, further missions called "active measures." An officer who defected in 1979 said that the KGB's aim is to undermine through disinformation the FRG's confidence in the United States as an alliance partner. The BFV report says that the KGB used some 200 aides for this "special service," with 50 of them sitting in the "Soviet foreign press agency NOVOSTI."

Next to disinformation efforts and espionage, intensified efforts are being made by Eastern intelligence services to evade embargo regulations. "According to available realizations, the East bloc states are engaged in a systematic technology procurement program to support military armament."

In addition to the Soviet Union and the CSSR, Bulgaria is also active. The Bulgarian trade attache is said to have attempted "to evade embargo restrictions by ordering small quantities from various firms" producing electronics (laser technology, quartzes, modules). In order to cover the matter up, he had also had the products sent to him as a "private individual."

The BFV is convinced that the existing instruments for the prevention of embargo violations "are not sufficient."

MINISTER OF STATE JENNINGER RECEIVES GDR ENVOY

LD121640 Hamburg DPA in German 1522 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- The minister of state in the Federal Chancellor's Office, Philipp Jenninger, today received the head of the GDR mission in Bonn, Ewald Moldt. The meeting is regarded as Moldt's inaugural visit to the new Federal Government. Jenninger deals with intra-German affairs in the Federal Chancellor's Office.

BARZEL PLEDGES TO CONTINUE LINKS WITH GDR

[Text] East Berlin, 12 Oct (DPA) -- During a brief visit to East Berlin today, Rainer Barzel, the minister for inner-German relations, said that the new Federal Government will use existing treaties with the GDR and other East bloc states as "an active policy instrument." Bonn will not let the treaties gather dust in the drawer. "Everything that has been agreed on remains valid." Current talks or negotiations with the GDR will be continued, said Barzel, who had expressed himself in similar terms after his talk in West Berlin with governing Mayor Richard von Weizsaecker.

After a walk across the Alexanderplatz to the Marienkirche and along Unter den Linden, Barzel, accompanied by State Secretary Hans Otto Braeutigam, the head of Bonn's permanent mission in East Berlin, said that much can be done by way of quiet quid pro quo. He expressed interest in widening cultural contacts.

Asked whether the new Federal Government would no longer refer to two German states, Barzel said that two states do of course exist in Germany. He confirmed that ex-Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's invitation to Erich Honecker to pay a return visit to the Federal Republic will stand.

In West Berlin, Barzel criticized the drastically increased minimum exchange requirement for Western visitors introduced by the GDR 2 years ago. This action infringes upon previous agreements and had set up a "financial wall," he said.

During his visit, Barzel had talks with federal representatives in Berlin. From the Shoeneberg town hall he drove across the Heinrich-Heine-Strasse checkpoint to East Berlin, where he visited the FRG permanent mission this afternoon. He said that no talks with GDR officials are scheduled.

'ARAFAT: MEETING WITH CHEYSSON 'FRUITFUL'

LD131844 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Yasir 'Arafat met with French Minister of External Relations Mr Claude Cheysson in Tunis this afternoon. The meeting lasted 2 hours. After the talks Yasir 'Arafat described the discussions with Claude Cheysson as fruitful. He said they covered important issues such as the Palestinian issue, the Middle East problem, the situation in Lebanon and the international situation. There is no comment yet from Mr Cheysson, who is preparing to return to Paris after this spectacular handshake with PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat in Tunis.

Cheysson on Talks

LD141044 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Claude Cheysson has accused Israel of hindering the commitment of the PLO to a political settlement in the Middle East. The French minister of external relations said this yesterday following his talks in Tunis with PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat. However, Cheysson made it clear that Yasir 'Arafat will not be coming to France for the moment and will not see Francois Mitterrand so long as the PLO does not formally recognize Israel's right to existence.

'SMALLER' MEETINGS WITH AFRICAN NATIONS DESIRED

AB140846 Paris AFP in English 0826 GMT 14 Oct 82

[By Marie Joannidis]

[Text] Paris, 14 Oct (AFP) -- France, though heartened by the large participation in last weekend's Franco-African summit in Kinshasa, wants to change the meeting into a smaller type of political club, informed French sources said Wednesday.

An ideal formula, the sources said, would be an annual informal meeting, including what one source called the "inner circle" of French-speaking African countries. This could go all the way to the Maghreb countries of northern Africa, Egypt and the Portuguese-speaking countries of Africa. [as received]

President Francois Mitterrand also favors the creation of a non-African French-speaking cultural group that would be separate from the African body, the sources said.

"Confronted with the crisis in the Organization of African Unity, the catastrophe would have been to give in to temptation and substitute Kinshasa for Tripoli and give the impression of a parallel OAU," said one source.

He was referring to the OAU summit planned for August in Tripoli, which did not convene because of a boycott by countries opposed to the inclusion of the self-proclaimed Saharan Democratic Arab Republic.

The same source also expressed fear that the Franco-African summit could open itself to "indiscreet ears," such as Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. Colonel al-Qadhdhafi denounced the meeting, saying it smacked of neo-colonialism.

The Kinshasa summit attracted a record number of African participants and observers -- 36 of the 51 OAU nations -- including a large number of English-speaking observer countries. France has appeared somewhat alarmed at this massive presence, although it has publicly expressed satisfaction at the broadened participation.

Concerning Chad, which dominated discussions in Kinshasa with the tacit recognition of new leader Hissein Habre, France said experts are now in Ndjamena to establish a list of requirements for priority aid. Jean-Pierre Cot, cooperation and development minister, is due in Chad in November, the sources said. The sources said Chad was "very prudent" on questions of military cooperation and that the subject was not discussed.

LE MONDE ASSESSES RESTORATION OF TIES WITH LAOS

[Jacques de Barrin dispatch: "Each Side Is Waiting for the Other To Take the First Step"]

[Excerpt] On 4 July, new French Ambassador Jean-Noel de Bouillane de Lacoste received the keys of the embassy building. On 12 July, the Paris envoy presented his credentials. Two days later, surrounded by 6 aides, he invited around 100 guests to celebrate national day. Thus, the two countries restored relations which both sides deem to be "natural."

"The normalization of our relations with Paris is already a positive factor in itself," Mr Phuy Phanh Ngaosivath, director of the Foreign Ministry's Department for Relations with Western Countries, stated. "But so far it is still a wait-and-see policy." To gain a better idea of Paris' intentions towards them, the Vientiane leaders are awaiting the forthcoming return of Prince Souvanna Phouma, a government adviser, who met with External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson during his private visit to France.

There are no serious disputes between the two countries to be cleared up before cooperation resumes its normal course. It is necessary, at most, to decide what to do about several tens of millions of francs in unpaid credit. The Vientiane authorities are hoping that Paris "will wipe the slate clean," as has already been done for other less developed countries.

Although he welcomed the resumption of diplomatic relations "with great pleasure," Deputy Prime Minister Phoumi Vongvichit could not help mentioning, probably deliberately, the causes of the quarrel which has now been settled: "Despite our warnings, French diplomats and the ambassador himself were at that time inciting Laotians to flee to foreign countries."

Was the USSR, which has a strong presence in Laos, going to be offended by the reconciliation? Soviet diplomatic circles deny that: "We are convinced that France will not make any blunders." It is admitted that "France enjoys a store of sympathy here" and that it can help the country in many spheres, especially the cultural sphere, "but within certain limits." The same circles specify, for the benefit of those concerned, that the cooperation should be "free from any political designs."

"We want to open dialogue with the Lao authorities gently and without preconditions," Mr Lacoste stressed for his part. What will be the content and scale of that cooperation? The debate has been opened. Mr Vongvichit is asking the French Government to "study the possibility of giving Laos the necessary aid." Mr Ngaosivath was more specific and more down-to-earth: "What we need is mainly capital and equipment. We have enough men and technicians."

The Vientiane leaders, who are distrustful in this sphere, do not regard the cultural aspect in the broad sense of the term as a major element in that cooperation. Of course they hope to obtain material -- notably school books -- to facilitate the study of French, which is the most commonly taught language here, ahead of English and Russian. But the idea of sending students to study in France, for instance, does not yet seem to be considered. Do some not think that it is "natural for a socialist country's future cadres to be educated in other socialist countries?"

The Vientiane leaders, who are anxious not to appear to be asking favors, would prefer Paris to make specific proposals. The French think that it is up to the other side to "set the tone," since they cannot evaluate the country's needs properly. It is often the first step that counts.

ACCORD REACHED WITH JAPAN IN SCIENTIFIC FIELDS

NC131906 Paris AFP in English 1639 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 13 (AFP) -- France and Japan agreed to extend scientific and technical cooperation to "new fields" during a three-day bilateral conference ending here today, the Foreign Ministry reported.

The sixth meeting of the Franco-Japanese commission on scientific and technological cooperation agreed to extend cooperation to "heavy equipment, scientific and technical information, [word indistinct] materials, electronics, energy, biotechnology, space, and oceanology," a Foreign Ministry communique said.

The communique noted that the French delegation, led by Jacques Thibau, the director of the Foreign Ministry's department of cultural, scientific, and technical relations, "expressed its interest in future cooperation with Japan in robot development and biological and medical engineering."

The Japanese delegation was led by Japanese Ambassador to France Hiroshi Uchida and Minoru Harada, the director of Japan's science and technology agency.

MARCHAIS ADDRESSES PCF CENTRAL COMMITTEE

PM130921 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 7 Oct 82 pp 4, 5

[Speech delivered by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at PCF Central Committee meeting in Paris on 5 October: "Neither Sterile Extremes, Nor Giving In to Pressure"; first graf is editorial introduction]

[Excerpts] We publish below the full text of the speech which Georges Marchais delivered at the end of the Central Committee meeting:

Comrades, I naturally do not intend to go back over all the problems which were thoroughly examined in the reports submitted by [PCF Politburo members] Andre Lajoinie and Maxime Gremetz and in the rich discussion which followed them.

I will restrict myself to just one question -- but everybody will agree that it is decisive: How should the Communists act today in the internal and international situation which we are experiencing?

As several comrades have said, many workers are now informing us of their concerns regarding the situation and the prospects. They are asking us: "How do you Communists see things? And what are you going to do?"

We Are Continuing

Our answer is clear: We are continuing. We are continuing to work in the government, in the majority and throughout the country in keeping with the fundamental choices which we have been following for the past 15 months.

In June 1981, we decided to participate in the country's government on the basis of an agreement which we concluded with the PS. We did so with a clear objective: To do everything within our power in the framework of the balance of forces reflected through universal suffrage, to meet the French people's expectation; to take advantage of all the opportunities offered to progress toward a solution to the country's problems.

Our 24th Congress in February this year unequivocally reaffirmed that line. We explained that the Communists' attitude was the same in the government, in parliament and throughout the country: To try to "help those concerned, to use in the appropriate ways, each new opportunity to solve problems" and thus to contribute "to securing all possible improvements."

Our Central Committee session has just confirmed that we are not going to deviate from that in the slightest in the coming period. We are determined to continue to take resolute action at all levels where we have a presence, to reduce difficulties, to clarify the situation and the prospects, to unite the people's forces and to develop their action on all questions affecting their future. We will continue to neglect no possibility or opportunity for making progress. And we are going to do that with the awareness that those efforts and that constructive and unitary contribution by the Communists is vital if the policy chosen by the French people is to be pursued in good conditions.

In the past 16 months, work has been accomplished and progress achieved. But, as the saying goes, not too much. We have only just started moving in the direction of the objectives chosen by the French people. The initial measures taken and the initial reforms introduced have succeeded -- and this is important — in curbing the deterioration of the situation, but have not yet succeeded in making real progress toward solving the country's major problems.

In those conditions, the workers, the people who voted for the left in order to see a real improvement in things, have grounds for thinking that there is still a shortfall in the accounts, that this is not enough and that since what has been done has produced a slight improvement, it is now necessary to continue with determination in order to attain the desired results. Of course, that must be done responsibly and realistically, taking account of the real difficulties which we are facing. But we must take account of them, not to give in to them, but examine the best and vital means of overcoming them. In short, the Communists' position is neither to rush ahead into sterile extremes nor to give in to pressures and abandon the objectives chosen by the French people but to pursue, on a realistic basis, a policy in keeping with the joint pledges made to the country.

The same constructive desire inspires our attitude at the international level.

The report presented by Maxime Gremetz highlighted the fact that the escalation of the class struggle which we are observing in our country can also be found at the world level, where tension has increased recently.

U.S. Imperialism's Aggressiveness Is Increasing

Indeed, the Reagan administration has given a new dimension to imperialism's aggressive policy. The United States is stepping up its pressures and diktats in all spheres.

On the military level it is stepping up the arms race, and that poses serious threats to world peace and is ruinous for the peoples, particularly the peoples in the socialist countries who are forced to make the necessary efforts to counterbalance its effects and ensure their security. At the same time, the United States is trying to extend its network of foreign military bases as was recently seen in Somalia and Morocco. And Reagan, who has just asserted that American troops are going to be in Lebanon for a long time, intends to seize on the situation created in the Near East to further strengthen U.S. military presence in the Mediterranean.

At the same time, in the economic and political sphere the U.S. administration is trying to call into question the positive achievements in Europe of the policy of peaceful coexistence, cooperation and mutually advantageous exchanges among peoples. For instance, it has no hesitation in resorting to sanctions against anybody who dares refuse to bow to its orders, like Dresser-France.

Those dangerous machinations, that new dimension to imperialism's aggression must not deceive us: Far from being a sign of its strength, they are a sign of the aggravation of its crisis.

That crisis, as we have frequently demonstrated, is no passing, temporary phenomenon: It is a systemic crisis which calls into question the capitalist world's very structures. That is why U.S. imperialism sees the effort to stem the changes being made at the world level and regain lost ground as a life-and-death question for it. It is thus using all the means at its disposal -- and they are considerable -- to curb the development of countries which are building socialism, to stem the forward march of peoples and national liberation forces and also to make the other capitalist countries shoulder some of its difficulties.

The Fight for Human Rights Is Our Fight Par Excellence

It is also that desire to give greater power to that counter-offensive in a situation of accentuated crisis which explains U.S. imperialism's gigantic efforts in its campaign of deception on "human rights."

We analyzed the real reasons for that campaign at our 24th Congress. We highlighted the cynicism of the operation, which consists in concealing a political campaign to systematically slander socialism behind apparently humanitarian or moral motives in order to destroy the hope which it represents in the eyes of hundreds of millions of men and to acquit capitalism, giving it the benefit of the doubt.

We recalled how the advocates of the capitalist order were in no position to invoke human rights, since they have trampled on them so much throughout the world and are continuing to do so from South Africa to El Salvador, and from Guatemala to South Korea. We must now tell Reagan and his friends forcefully once again, at a time when their hands are still steeped in the blood of Palestinian and Lebanese martyrs, that we will not allow the noble cause to be sullied. The reality of the capitalist world is primarily that millions of men and women in it have no rights.

We are aware of the fact that some people say to us: "That is all very fine, but you forget human rights and no longer mention them when it comes to Poland, Afghanistan or Kampuchea."

We say to those people: You are mistaken, you are being deceived. We do not forget anything. Quite the reverse, let us talk about it.

What about Poland? Yes, we were guided first and foremost by lives of Polish men, women and children. From the first day, we said: Every effort must be made to prevent bloodshed. Every effort must be made to prevent civil war or foreign intervention. And we added: It is not by violence or confrontation, but by national accord that friendly socialist Poland will be able to correct serious past mistakes and start implementing far-reaching reforms aimed at economic efficiency, social progress and democracy in all spheres, including in particular the existence of independent trade unions having real rights. And today we think that nothing should hinder the search for a political solution making it possible to lift martial law, release the imprisoned people and rapidly introduce the vital reforms which Poland needs.

In saying that we refused to join the general hue and cry, to join all those who are prepared to sacrifice both the Polish people's interests and the interests of peace in that region of the world, with all the incalculable consequences which such a situation could have for our continents's security, we acted in that way and will continue to do so precisely because of the lofty idea which we have of human rights.

What about Afghanistan? Yes, we were guided first and foremost by the lives of Afghan men, women and children. From the first day we said: The Afghan people, like any other people, must enjoy the principles of sovereignty and noninterference. Like any other people they have the right to ask for aid from an allied country to face an external aggression. We also asserted our solidarity with a people defending their revolution, which gives them a policy of progress, democratic reforms and extension of individual and religious freedom against imperialist attempts to use external support to restore a feudal government based on a terrorist dictatorship, the darkest obscurantism, serfdom and the negation of any women's rights. Finally, in this case too, we took into consideration the interests of international peace, refusing to see a zone of tension and confrontation created in that part of the world.

Constructive proposals have been made for guaranteeing Afghanistan's independence and noninterference in its internal affairs, and for a decision to withdraw the Soviet troops. Discussions have been opened. We hope that they will succeed as quickly as possible in rapidly creating the right conditions for a political solution and in ensuring that the Afghan people can progress along the path of their development. Is there a position more in keeping with that people's rights and interests? We, for our part, cannot see one.

What about Kampuchea? Yes, we were guided first and foremost by the lives of Khmer men, women and children; by the lives of those survivors of a terrible genocide perpetrated over a 4-year period, by the lives of those people who, liberated thanks to the Vietnamese Army, are now relearning their culture, courageously building the conditions for a progressive future and who need active international solidarity.

The fact that in order to blacken Socialist Vietnam, which was victorious over the world's most powerful imperialist army, the Khmer people's torturers are being painted as victims, that those assassins are still regarded as the Kampuchean people's legal spokesmen in the international institutions, merely makes the hypocrisy of those so-called upholders of human rights even more odius: For them, a people's most elementary and vital interests count for nothing when it comes to slandering socialism.

Well. We Communists stand by the Kampuchean people in their struggle to rebuilt their country and we hope that the Vietnamese Army will return home -- as its leaders have, moreover, said that it will -- as soon as Kampuchea's independence and security are fully guaranteed.

Our position is therefore clear. We have no reason to apologize for our convictions as regards Poland, Afghanistan or Kampuchea. Quite the reverse: They show that, in our view, the battle for human rights is not merely a window dressing or a propaganda trick but a central and constant concern in our ideology and action. Not only are we going to continue our battle in that sphere in which nobody is in a position to tell us what to do since we have the committee for the defense of freedom and human rights which I have the honor to chair, we are also going to extend it.

It is to meet that great requirement of our time that we are going to make every effort to step up and extend solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples.

Our party has already tried to ensure that there is growing condemnation of the Israeli aggression among French opinion and that horror is expressed at the chain of destruction it has caused and at the program perpetrated in the Palestinian camps in Beirut. France played a positive role in imposing an end to the massacres. The French Government decided on the rapid dispatch of troops as part of a multinational force. Our soldiers should therefore help guarantee the safety of the Palestinian and Lebanese populations. We think it more necessary then ever to set up an international force which, under the UN aegis, would ensure implementation of its resolutions. Begin must withdraw his troops. And Lebanon's unity, independence and integrity must be guaranteed. There must also be greater support for the only proposals likely to lead to a just and lasting peace in the Near East, in other words: Israel's withdrawal from all the territories which have been occupied for 15 years, recognition of the Palestinians people's national rights, and implementation of international guarantees to ensure peace and security for all states in the region, including the Palestinian and Israeli states.

Comrades, some people paint a black picture of the situation and say that there is no way out of the present and that the future is blocked. To those who sincerely think that, we say fraternally: "You are wrong."

Sixteen months ago, a great hope carried the left to power. That hope is still alive deep down in our people. Of course there are obstacles on the road. But we expected that. And all the indications are that we can overcome them if we tackle them with determination and if a powerful people's movement is formed and acts.

That remark is also valid for the international situation: Imperialism's aggressiveness is real, but we can look to the future with confidence in that regard too. It is possible to avert the dangers the situation holds. Considerable forces exist for doing that and they can come together, unite and act to promote the great objectives of peace, disarmament and international cooperation.

We Communists are detemined to make every effort to obtain practical results in that direction. We are convinced that it is by that constructive activity as a party of struggle and of government, that our party gives living proof of its irreplaceable role and of the need to step up its fight.

Constantly Improving the Party's Democratic Life

Thus, working for our party's progress and to boost its influence is not only a completely legitimate objective, but is also vital to the people's forces' battle. In that respect, as some comrades have said, several aspects of the situation should hold our attention. Many workers are worried by the battle being waged by the right and the employers, and want to see the policy being implemented develop in the right direction. They are inclined to turn toward those who have always defended them -- the Communists -- and are more attentive to what we are saying to them. Prejudice against us is gradually being dispelled. New opportunities for unity are emerging. Those new signs should encourage us to strengthen our organizations, to boldly propose party membership and to ensure that all Communists have their card and to constantly improve the party's democratic life, as the 24th Congress urged us to do.

On that subject, allow me to make a final remark on a question which has used up a great deal of ink and produced a great deal of malice in all the sections of the press which are hostile to us.

During the French Television Channel 1 program which was made at the L'HUMANITE festival, I said in reply to a question, that I was not in the habit of taking orders from anybody.

Just look at what has been said about that: You would think that it was a sensational revelation.

Well, since that expression gave rise to the most conflicting commentaries -- and, it must be said, ramblings -- let us make things clear.

Yes, we forcefully state that the PCF does not take orders from anybody. We do not take orders from Moscow, since that is where people are determined to locate our alleged guardians, or from anywhere else. The PCF is a major party: a party which determines its own policy itself in full independence, a party which jealously guards that freedom of action and which never allows and never will allow anybody to curb it. There are differences of opinion, disagreements -- some minor and some very major -- with other Communist parties. It discusses them openly and considers that that should not hinder cooperation with those parties on the major objectives which we share. It is in that spirit that a delegation from our party will visit Beijing in the next few days.

What is true of the PCF's external life is equally true of its internal life. Nobody takes orders in the PCF. If you become a Communist it is precisely because you are a man, a woman, or a young person who refuses to live in a subservient way, who rebels against the capitalist order and who deviates from the ready-drawn paths of the dominant ideology. You do not refuse orders by becoming a Communist merely in order to take them subsequently. That is why the PCF member doe snot take orders from his cell secretary; the cell secretary does not take orders from his section secretary; the section secretary does not take orders from his federation secretary; the federation secretary does not take orders from the party secretary general, and the party secretary general does not take orders from anybody. Each of them is absolutely right. Each of them brings alive this democratic party in which people debate, make proposals and freely express their opinions on all subjects and in which people always prefer the authority of the argument to the argument of authority. And the reason why, after discussion, every Communist respects the majority decision and takes action with his comrades is that he is a democrat and that he places the effectiveness of the battle he is fighting for the workers and the country above any other consideration.

Consequently I repeat: Yes, the PCF does not take orders from anybody. The docile pens of those who follow the financial powers and the capitalist society's conformists must resign themselves to the fact that that is how we are. And we are not prepared to change.

Continuing on the 24th Congress Path

Comrades, those are the remarks which I wanted to make to you at the end of this rich Central Committee session.

As you see, we give a clear answer to the question: "How should the Communists act today?": guided by one concern -- the interests of France and its people -- they are working in all spheres to rally as many people as possible to overcome the obstacles and progress toward a solution to the problems. In other words, faithful to their pledges, they are continuing to implement in an open, constructive and offensive way the great policy which they defined at their 24th Congress: to progress toward a French brand of socialism by democratic means.

SPADOLINI, PCI CRITICIZE POLISH GOVERNMENT

LD132000 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] The PCI has adopted its stance on the latest events in Poland. A statement by the party Secretariat states that these events confirm that the imposition of the martial law and repression of rights, freedoms and trade union organization do not constitute a way out of the social and political crisis in Poland. The Italian Communists, the statement adds, renew their protest and condemnation of acts which are unacceptable and which sharpen tension and widen the gaps in social and political relations.

In the opinion of Prime Minister Spadolini, too, the events in Poland show the incapacity of the Warsaw government to resume a constructive dialogue with the social forces. Renewing Italy's solidarity with the Polish people, Spadolini stated that the government will undertake the necessary initiative to consolidate the policy toward Poland which has been agreed with the European and Atlantic allies.

MINISTER WARNS AGAINST VIOLATIONS IN LEBANON

AU140852 Rome ANSA in English 0817 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 14 -- Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio has put Lebanese authorities on guard against perpetrating "severe human rights violations" in Beirut.

"If legitimate authorities (in Lebanon) do not show a considerable sense of responsibility in evaluating the political weight they bear in leading Lebanon back to complete justice, there is a risk that they will find themselves wtih some serious episodes of human rights violations," Lagorio told the Italian lower house's defense commission Wednesday.

Italian peacekeeping troops are currently stationed in Beirut, along with American and French units, to assure a smooth normalization process after three months of Israeli bombings and seven years of civil war.

Lagorio admitted in his account to the house commission that the general situation in Beirut is "characterized" by the police operations" ordered and carried out by the Lebanese Government". Lebanese authorities, he said, have thus far taken 1,441 people into custody in their house-to-house searches and mass arrests. Of these, 615 are Palestinians, 189 Lebanese and about 600 of "other nationalities".

The Italian military command in Lebanon, the defense minister said, reported 126 arrests in the (Burj al Barajinah) and Sabra refugee camps between October 6 and 11. Large quantities of arms were reportedly seized in the two camps.

The command has not filed any complaints of violence or atrocities to date, Lagorio specified. He added that observers from the multinational peacekeeping force have received authorization, requested by Italy, to visit the detention camps where the arrested are being held.

No Italian soldiers have taken part in the police operations, Lagorio stressed while voicing pride in the popularity enjoyed by the Italian contingent, particularly among the Palestinian population. "The Italian contingent is well-behaved and well-liked by the local populations, especially the Palestinians", Lagorio boasted.

"Lebanese and international political commentators have commended the skill, seriousness and humane nature of the Italian troops," he assured.

Not without a touch of complacency, Lagorio noted that the British press, which poked fun at the Italian troops in the first peacekeeping mission, had drastically changed its tone and was now giving "extremely flattering" accounts of their performance.

PSDI SECRETARY LONGO TO VISIT CHINA 13-25 OCT

Longo will return to Rome October 25.

ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH IRAQ TO BE EXPANDED

AU130955 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 13 -- There is still potential to further expand relations between Italy and Iraq despite the ongoing war with Iran, according to Italian Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria.

Speaking with reporters Tuesday after meeting his Iraqi counterpart Hasan 'Ali al-Amiri, he pointed out that Italy is now Iraq's second supplier in Europe and third in the world. "But we can do more", he asserted. According to Foreign Trade Ministry sources, Iraq would like Italy to increase its presence in industrial and oil projects, farming and irrigation, transport, public works, and technical cooperation.

The Iraqi minister is here for the fourth session of the joint Italo-Iraqi Economic Cooperation Commission lasting from Tuesday through Friday. In the last year, so the meeting was told, the Italo-Iraqi trade account showed an Italian deficit, but in the first seven months of 1982, Italy showed a surplus of about 76 million dollars by increasing its exports by 81 percent.

Prospects for next year give Italy an even more important role in the Middle Eastern state. The GIE group, for example, is involved in supplying the Iraqi electricity board with two "key in hand" plants and negotiations are under way for a total of 1088 million dollars for three more plants at (Al-Madain), 'Amara and Basra.

In oil prospection, Italians are linked to projects like the development of the oil fields at al-Halfaya and Majnun and the doubling-up of the Rumaylah-al-Hadithah pipeline. There is also the possibility of the Italian companies, OMI and EFIM, taking part in the building of sugar mills, a project to which the Iraqis attach great importance.

There are also good possibilities for Italy in a project to build a new city of 300,000 inhabitants south of Baghdad with factories producing 125,000 cars, 25,000 industrial vehicles, and 15,000 tractors a year.

SOMALI LEADER ON SOVIET THREAT TO MIDEAST, AFRICA

AU121550 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Milan, October 12 -- "We are in the trenches also for you Europeans. Moscow is aiming at Middle Eastern oil sources to strangle your economy", Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre said in an interview appearing in today's issue of the Milan daily IL GIORNALE.

In Siad Barre's view, it is necessary to block Soviet plans which have a single purpose: getting their hands on Mideast oil and on black Africa. "Moscow's design", the Somali president said, "is very clear from here: use Ethiopia, Aden and South Yemen as a platform for expansion into the black continent.

"Today it's Somalia, tomorrow it will be Oman, day after tomorrow North Yemen. First they will get complete control of the Indian Ocean, the Arab Gulf, the Red Sea, then it will be Kenya, then Sudan, all nations squeezed between two fires.

"And what is the West doing?" Siad Barre continued. "It hesitates and in the meantime the others get into position. Political solutions can be found only when there is equilibrium. When equilibrium is lacking, there are no solutions."

LA REPUBBLICA VIEWS STATE OF MAJOR PARTIES

PM131419 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 5 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Alberto Ronchey article]:

[Text] There is the economic crisis: Some ministers fear that the public deficit could top 100 trillion lire; inflation is already over 17 percent and unemployment stands at 10 percent, not counting those receiving unemployment fund payments. There is the functional crisis in the institutions: Government instability deriving from the electoral system itself; and slow and muddled legislation resulting from a repetititve and inefficient bicameralism exacerbated by the excessively large group of a thousand parliamentarians required to make laws. But the three major parties are in crisis too.

Hitherto, the DC has collected the largest number of votes in all general elections (nine parliamentary, eight municipal and provincial, three regional and one European). But to what extent will it be able to continue ruling the next time? Its confessional fabric has been eroded by the secularization of society, as was demonstrated by the 1981 abortion referendum as compared with the one on divorce in 1974. Moreover, in secular political terms there is no indefinite guarantee against wear and tear on the DC power system after a third of a century. Since the PCI failed to "overtake" the DC in the seventies, the day of Craxi's PSI is now at hand.

The De Mita Secretariat would like to prolong [aggiornare] the now long-standing "bipolarism" based on the DC as the dominant force in the government and the PCI as the dominant force in the opposition, leaving the Socialists the thankless obligation of choosing between subordination to one or the other. The rider being that, even though the DC could now lose its structural bases of consensus and the PCI is involved in a comprehensive, albeit incomplete review of its traditional characteristics, in all that time the PSI has never abandoned its resolute criticism of both the major parties. De Mita's calculated response looks like a policy which vacillates between government alliance with the PSI and comparison-dialogue with the PCI, which does not exclude occasional understandings aimed mainly at assuaging the Socialists' ambitions.

The official DC line now is that there is no longer any prejudice against the PCI, even though certain problems do persist in both ideological terms (vestiges of Leninism) and in terms of the relationship with the USSR (the Euromissiles question, unilateral disarmament, the Comiso base and the conspicuous vestiges of Sovietophilism).

Nonetheless, the theory that there is no longer preclusion of the PCI conceals a contradiction. If that is the case, why is it acceptable for the Socialists to be in government but not the Communists? Is it not true that many Christian Democrats think that the Communists are often more responsible and reliable than the Socialists in the sphere of the economy and public order?

De Mita may reply that the PCI cannot participate in the government if there is a desire to overcome the "blocked democracy" situation in Italy, since the task of providing an alternative falls to the PCI as the second party.

But so long as there is no realistic prospect of an alternative and if Craxi's Socialists are really inflexible, why rule out a "grand coalition" between the two leading parties, similar to the one already tried in the FRG between the Christian Democrats and the Social Democrats from 1966 to 1969, when the SPD alternative to the CDU had not yet developed? The only possible explanation is that a communist or "Eurocommunist" party, despite everything, is still not social democratic. The PCI is not the SPD. But is that not, therefore, a preclusion?

The practical reason for the avowed abandonment of any preclusion of the PCI is rather that the Christian Democrats, to preserve as much power as they can, do not balk at playing the Communists against the Socialists when appropriate. Andreotti explained that in simple terms in January: "When the 'Preamble' [former DC faction] established that the DC would not form a government with the Communists, enormous contractual power was conceded to the other party, which remained the only possible ally. It is as if, having two bakers available, I solemnly stated that I would never use one. The other would give me bread but would ask me to beg for it." That is largely the source of the internal conflicts in the recent governments between Christian Democrats and Socialists, leaving aside the controversies on the economic crisis and on the institutional crisis itself, in addition to the insecurity, vacillations and troubles of the DC.

The PSI in turn must take account of the fact that the historical crisis from which it is trying to emerge stems from the events of a twofold subordination: first toward the PCI (with the tendency to form a front at the end of the forties and in the early fifties), then toward the DC (with the center-left governments in the sixties and early seventies). Craxi's aspiration to break the DC-PCI "bipolarism" presupposes, therefore, that the PSI is no longer subordinate to the former in government and to the latter in opposition. Now, in fact, the Socialists exert pressure on and sometimes even adopt an arrogant attitude to the Christian Democrats, although they are allied in the same government coalition. That happens because, on the one hand, the DC, alone or with the minor secular parties, does not have a majority; and, on the other, because such behavior seems a necessary precondition if the PSI is to alter the existing balance of forces with the PCI to its own advantage.

The PSI's change of course under Craxi has had some success, since it has moved from 10 percent of the votes to the threshold of 15 percent in local government elections in recent years. However, if success is to influence the government coalition, it must be demonstrated in parliamentary elections. The DC was alarmed and gradually stepped up its countercriticism until the last congress, at which polemics against Craxi's supporters predominated, together with some overtures to the Communists.

Craxi could already have faced a trial of strength before or immediately after the DC congress, to the extent of having to bring forward the parliamentary election. But the Socialists took the initiative by withdrawing their ministers from the first Spadolini government only at the beginning of August and taking the opportunity of an incident in Parliament. It was too late to bring the general election forward to October, without the confidence, moreover, of being able to tackle an election campaign under conditions of isolation (which, however, could also have focused public attention on the PSI), without the certainty of being able to counter the Christian Democrats' efforts to form a government tolerated by the PCI (although no longer supported by the PSI), but especially without the conviction of being able to reject one after another the four or five candidates for the Chigi Palace who might be proposed by President Pertini before the early dissolution of Parliament.

The difficulties of the situation for the Socialists were considerable. But should they not have foreseen them in advance? Now, the second Sapdolini government is as marked by strife as the first. The prime minister is reduced to the role of an exhausted mediator between Socialists and Christian Democrats, while the PSI is in danger of wearing itself out under the burden of ministerial responsibilities in an increasingly difficult economic situation ("1983 will be extremely bleak"). Hence, there is an unease in Craxi's party which was unknown until a few months ago. Last, the PCI has for 3 or 4 years been the protagonist of a third crisis; not only is it aware of an underlying landslip in its cultural and electoral hinterland, which is barely curbed with a strenuous organizational mobilization, but, following the change effected by Craxi in the PSI, it is almost impossible that a leftwing coalition dominated by the PCI will prevail in Parliament, whether it loses votes again or whether it succeeds in more or less holding its positions.

Berlinguer's party has not succeeded in entering a government with the DC, nor can it deem itself able really to gather around itself an alignment sufficiently coordinated, unprejudiced and realistic for the success of the alternative to the DC. The Socialists, who deem it necessary to change first of all the balance of power between the two leftwing parties, who are also pressing for a more decisive revisionist evolution of the PCI, are not willing. But neither is the PCI, which, following the "break" with the USSR, must placate and control its traditional grassroots, prepared. In fact, Vadim Zagladin -- the CPSU's "ambassador" -- is now being awaited in Italy at Berlinguer's invitation to demonstrate that, if there are disagreements, either there is no "break" (as was said by the pro-Soviet Armando Cossutta) or it can be mended.

The fact remains that the Communists, too, who today often disagree beyond the ostensible harmony owing to "centralism" and the "ban on factionalism," are in crisis and without prospects. The election forecasts are worrying, and political forecasts as regards both compromise with the DC and an alternative together with the PSI are shaky. Berlinguer's supporters may sometimes have the impression of being at the center of "triangulation," but they seem destined to discover every time that certain DC or Socialist "openings" toward them are for ulterior motives and of a token nature.

BUDGET MINISTER REPORTS ON ECONOMIC SITUATION

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 13 -- The Italian economic crisis is part of a general crisis of development which has hit the Western industrial states, but in Italy it is the growth in budget expenditure and the public deficit that have assumed macroscopic proportions, according to Italian Budget Minister Giorgio la Malfa. Addressing the lower house Tuesday, he said budget expenditure rose from 35 to 52 percent of national income between 1970 and today, while the public deficit climbed to fifteen percent of gross domestic product this year, when 2-4 percent is the norm in other industrial countries.

La Malfa and Treasury Minister Nino Andreatta were tabling the financial bill and draft budget for 1983, two documents without which the nation's life will grind to a halt and which must be approved by the end of the year. Last year's experience persuaded the government to trace the general lines of its budget policy as early as the summer, but the government crisis in August slowed things down. Now, the government wants the measures to be pushed ahead as fast as possible so that the financial bill is approved before the year is out, and not in the middle of next year, as happened with the bill for 1982.

La Malfa argued that some inflationary factors can be traced to the budget, though they are nourished by pressures on costs, above all when national work contracts are being renewed. To get things back into balance in 1983, he said, the public sector deficit must not top 60,000 billion lire (almost 43 billion dollars), and the monetary base and labor costs must not expand by more than thirteen percent. At the same time, however, the state's budgetary needs compared to a fixed ceiling for inflation of sixteen percent will be more than 69,000 billion lire, almost 20,000 billion more than the upper limits laid down by the government.

Andreatta took the same line as La Malfa. "It is illusory to think one can escape from the grip of the recession by running up thousands of billions of lire in deficit", he asserted. In an indirect answer to Socialist ministers who want a bigger deficit in order to reduce unemployment, he said the "straitjacket of the international recession does not permit us to lengthen our pace."

Italy, he added, must follow the example of West Germany, France and Japan by limiting present consumption in order to promote employment and growth through investment. But lower inflation can only start with working incomes, and not prices, he argued. He added that the only exception was public tariffs which must grow faster than the inflation rate planned for 1983 since the dificit of bodies like the National Electricity Board has grown two-and-a-half times between 1960 and 1982.

TEXT OF COMMUNIQUE ON TRANSFER OF PUTSCHISTS

PM131355 Madrid YA in Spanish 7 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The transfer to various military regions of four of the 23 February [1981, date of attempted coup] prisoners and a denial of further arrests and the existence of "lists of colonels" were the only new developments which occurred yesterday concerning the alleged coup planned for 27 October. Countering rumors and enlarging on the initial, incomplete reports about the transfers of several 23 February prisoners, the CRISDE (Defense Center for Informational and Social Relations) issued the following communique in the early hours of yesterday afternoon:

"It is the Ministry of Defense's intention to convey through this center all the information on the events connected with the 2 October arrests of two colonels and a lieutenant-colonel that can be released within the bounds imposed by the requirement of not disturbing the investigations underway or violating the mandatory secrecy of the indictment being drawn up. To this end it is announced:

"1 -- It is denied that there have been further arrests. This morning (yesterday) only Colonels Munoz and Crespo and Lieutenant Colonel Crespo are at the judiciary's disposal.

"2 -- It is also denied that the documents seized include a list of names of 100 colonels, as some news media have reported.

"3 -- Yesterday morning, for security reasons and following the Supreme Council of Military Justice's authorization, the following defendants in trial 2/81 were transferred: Colonels San Martin and Manchado to the 8th Military Region; Lieutenant-Colonel Tejero to the 3rd Military Region; and Captain Acera to the 2nd Military Region.

"4 -- With respect to the speculation concerning the time at the disposal of the investigating judge to file an indictment, it is explained that Article 672 of the Code of Military Justice sets at 5 days the maximum time for proposing or ordering detainees' release or preventive detention, which in this instance expires 7 October. The code sets no time for filing an indictment.

"The CRISDE confirms the situation of calm existing in all military units and the genuine indignation detected among the members of the armed forces at the irresponsible conduct of some army field officers.

"This center intends to continue to supply the public with all the information of interest that arises."

NEW REGIONAL COMMANDER AFFIRMS LOYALTY OF ARMY

LD131916 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The new captain general of Galicia has condemned coup activity among some members of the armed forces and spoken in defense of the constitutional order. Lt Gen Fermin Casado Cepeda, who up to now has been chief of army engineers, was sworn in as captain general of the 8th Military Region at a ceremony held in La Coruna today. We asked him his opinion about recent military events.

[Begin recording] [Casado] I refer you to the note issued a few days ago by the Supreme Army Council, to which I belong. The basic point of the note was a condemnation of those acts. Basically we believe -- well, no, we are sure -- that this is a very tiny minority of individuals who we regard as irresponsible, totally irresponsible. These were actions which [few words indistinct] and an attitude which we see as irresponsible and leading nowhere.

[Reporter] How would you say the morale of the Spanish Armed Forces stands at this moment?

[Casado] The armed forces are very united. Their morale is very high. There is complete unity among commanding cadres. The fact that a tiny majority, among all the activities... the thing is that, as with a priest when [few words indistinct] and somebody does something... the military are not doing that. [sentence as heard] In any profession there are always a few people who, through irresponsibility or overexcitement [words indistinct] say certain things (?they should not). But the immense majority of the armed forces are united and prepared at any moment to fulfill the tasks assigned to us by the Constitution.

[Reporter] Are there any particular expectations about the elections coming up?

[Casado] In the armed forces? No. We are just so many more Spaniards. Each of us will vote as he sees fit. And as far as that goes, within the armed forces we treat it as just one more thing in the life of the nation. [end recording]

COUNCIL OF MILITARY JUSTICE CHAIRMAN SWORN IN

LD131856 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Lt Gen Manuel Esquivias Franco was sworn in at midday today as chairman of the Supreme Council of Military Justice, a post which has been vacant since Lt Gen Alvarez Rodriguez was transferred to the active reserve. The new chairman takes over at a time when the military justice apparatus once again has officers to try for coup plotting: the 23-F case, the verdict in which has been appealed against in the supreme court; the three officers recently arrested; and others who will have to be court-martialed, or tried by a military court of justice in the case of any general.

Lt Gen Esquivias Franco sees the role of the Supreme Council of Military Justice as a jursidictional body having the task of applying the laws passed by the legitimate authorities in accordance with the constitution. He describes it as a jurisdictional body which [words indistinct] in accordance with legislation in force and subordinated to the laws which the nation passes for itself, and in the drafting and passing of which we play no part unless we are consulted. [Esquivias, read by announcer] Laws, under our Constitution, are made by the legitimate representatives of the people. We do nothing more than respect them and apply them as we loyally understand them when called upon to do so. So it is not really correct to speak of an independent military authority. I said this just a month ago when I was sworn in as captain general of Galicia and I feel it right to repeat it now. We are not what is often called a de facto power, and the distinction between civilian authority and military authority which some people would like to put forward does not exist. There is but one sole, legitimate power, that established under the Constitution, and that authority is for all of us, including the armed forces, to respect and observe.

We were not able to offer you these words in Lt Gen Equivias' own voice, since the media were not admitted to the ceremony. Not even photographers were allowed in . However, the television was there.

Lt Gen Esquivias Franco ended his speech with the following words of respect and obedience to the king of Spain: [Esquivias, read by announcer] I accept this post with discipline and hope. I learned from the first time I put on a mlitary uniform. And with hope because I am being asked to serve Spain in this field of justice. I offer this service co Spain and to his majesty the king, supreme commander of the armed forces, and I also reiterate my loyalty and obedience, along with my respectful devotion, devotion which he had earned from all Spaniards through his able conduct in the office of head of state. Long live Spain. Long live the king.

DEVALUATION SETS OFF TENSIONS IN GOVERNMENT

[Unattributed report: "Markka Devalued by Six Percent -- Finnish People's Democratic League Out of the Government?"]

[Excerpt] The government's package of economic measures in the wake of the devaluation of the Swedish krona was agreed upon yesterday afternoon under dramatic circumstances. The People's Democrats voted against the package, which chiefly comprises a 6-percent devaluation of the Markka, comprehensive support measures for industry and commerce, and an increase in the sales tax from 1 July next year.

The Finnish People's Democratic League representatives voted against the agreement at the meetings of both the executive board of the National Bank and the government. Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa was reluctant to draw any conclusions from this, but the state now seems to be set for the People's Democrats' exit from the government.

Sorsa decided to wait for Education Minister Kalevi Kivisto's return from a trip to Bulgaria before reaching any conclusions. Sorsa will meet Kivisto and the other Finnish People's Democratic League leaders in the next few days. Kivisto, who is chairman of the group of People's Democratic ministers, will probably return home today.

Yesterday, the Center Party and the Swedish People's Party ministers decided to lend the prime minister their support in his treatment of the People's Democrats' obstruction. Yesterday, Sorsa was obviously irritated, but said that he still hoped that it would prove possible to find a way out which would prevent the collapse of the government.

LJUNG COMMENTS ON ANTISUBMARINE MINE EXPLOSION

LD131144 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] We have spoken on the telephone to Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces Lennart Ljung. We asked his view about the big news report by DAGENS NYHETER today about the finding of a distress telephone buoy in Mysingen, understood to have come from a submarine and thus interesting. This is what he said about the matter:

[Begin recording] [Ljung] We do not know of this report about a loose distress buoy in Mysingen. We have not received such a report. We have checked our sources in various ways but have not had the report confirmed.

[Question] Do you thus deny this report about the existence of a distress buoy?

[Answer] I deny that we have a report about finding a distress buoy. I cannot, of course, deny that the paper concerned knows something. We have also made enquiries to the paper in order to get information about this, but so far we have not received any such information. We do not know about it.

[Question] Would you know about such a distress buoy is there was one?

[Answer] If there were a distress buoy floating around in the search area in Mysingen now, then the chances of our seeing it should be great.

[Question] Late yesterday evening there was talk of a new indication of a submarine. What was that, can you tell us?

[Answer] Yes, that is correct. In the actual area in southern Mysingen we found one or two indications that there could possibly be a submarine in the area.

We also, after exploding a mine on Monday, sent divers down yesterday. We have not yet had any reports from the divers or from the Belos [submarine rescue ship], which has been on the scene, of anything having happened there with regard to a submarine.

[Question] But you confirm that divers are searching there for a damaged submarine?

[Answer] No, they have been down to see if there is anything, in general, at the bottom in connection with the mine explosion which took place. These investigations have so far been negative.

[Question] This explosion of the mine, how actively was it done? Can we say that it marks a new stage in the submarine hunt, a new, harder attitude?

[Answer] Well, it was carried out with the clear intention of seriously damaging a submarine if there was one there.

[Question] If there was a submarine, you say?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] Thus you cannot confirm that there was a submarine?

[Answer] No, we cannot do that because there may be technical phenomena of various kinds which result in our not being able, with 100 percent certainty, to say in such a situation that it was a submarine. But if it were, exploding the mine in the way we did should reasonably have caused a great deal of damage to a submarine.

[Question] You were therefore prepared in this situation to really crush this submarine?

[Answer] I do not want to say crush it, but we were prepared to cause very serious damage to a submarine, and we have thus set off a mine with that purpose.

[Question] Are you prepared to do so again?

[Answer] Yes, we are.

[Question] This must mean that the search has taken a new turn?

[Answer] No, from the beginning we have said that with the means we have we shall try to force the submarine to the surface, and this means that we must cause the submarine such damage that it cannot do anything other than surface.

[Question] That could also mean that the crew could die?

[Answer] Yes, that cannot be excluded. There must always be a risk in intruding into Swedish waters. [end recording]

PAPER ON IMPLICATIONS OF BODSTROM APPOINTMENT

PM131317 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 6 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Naturally"]

[Text] As SVENSKA DAGBLADET was already able to report on Tuesday [5 October] Central Organization of Salaried Employees [TCO] leader Lennart Bodstrom is to be foreign minister in Olof Palme's Social Democratic government. This was also the most spectacular announcement that came during the press conference Palme gave later in the day.

The choice is a natural one. From Olof Palme's own viewpoint he has made a good decision. Bodstrom will fit in well as his foreign minister.

Lennart Bodstrom has proven administrative skills. During his years as TCO chairman he has worked with various international questions and contacts. However, these have been mainly limited to trade union issues and contacts with the rest of Europe. A foreign minister's area of involvement is greater.

As an individual, Lennart Bodstrom possesses several qualities which could stand him in good stead in his new work. He is representative, he has no difficulty making contact with people, he does not let differences of opinion, including major differences, get in the way of communication and of talks which need to be held. He also has the ability -- when he thinks it desirable -- affably and obligingly to tell people that they are talking nonsense.

He has a good knowledge of language and likes to travel. And he thrives in the role of representative.

In addition it is not difficult for him to put across a tough point of view (we are still talking of the advantages from Palme's viewpoint). And, as Olof Palme pointed out, he has indeed shown that he is able to stand up to hard treatment.

It is also possible to add that Bodstrom through his conscious fight -- sometimes above, sometimes below the surface -- for collective wage-earners' investment funds has undoubtedly shown that he deserves a reward from the Social Democratic Party.

He will suit Olof Palme perfectly. It is well known that Olof Palme's own main interest lies in the field of foreign policy. He will make sure that in the future also, Sweden's leading foreign policy maker will be Prime Minister Palme and not Foreign Minister Bodstrom. Bodstrom will accept this loyally: "There will be no rivalry between Olof Palme and myself, that I can assure you," Bodstrom emphasized yesterday. No doubt there will not be. Bodstrom also delivered a little speech about Olof Palme's unique excellence as a foreign policy maker.

Palme has broken with all tradition and neglected to appoint a qualified diplomat as foreign ministry under secretary. Instead, the post will be filled by the Social Democratic Party's controversial international secretary, Pierre Schori, who has several times already attracted not always flattering attention because of prejudiced foreign policy statements in the sloppy Marxist genre. This means that Palme has arranged to further strengthen his grip on foreign policy.

During his years as TCO Chairman, Lennart Bodstrom has emphatically rejected every suggestion that he has been the Social Democrats' tool -- which he has been. Yesterday's appointment came as confirmation of what most people already knew. He has thrown away the mask, you might say, if that mask had not already been perfectly transparent.

But of course, Bodstrom's elevation is yet another reason for TCO members to note the systematic politicization of TCO leaders in a particular direction. As far as the chairman is concerned, this has not gone on in full public view -- although it has been obvious. Now the political situation in the country is such that the truth may be revealed.

In the process, the TCO's credibility -- already seriously undermined -- as a politically neutral organization in party terms, has received another blow so serious that it could be difficult for the TCO to regain the country's confidence.

Talks 'Absolutely Successful'

NC132002 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Absolutely successful is how Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou described his talks with Kuwaiti leaders. He stressed that it was noted that this country has the political will to assist Greece adding: Thus, it is up to our country to submit concrete proposals.

Mr Papandreou, who returned from Kuwait at 1630 [1430 GMT] together with the ministers who accompanied him, also said that the horizons opening now in the two countries are very wide, positive and hopeful both in the field of trade and investments as well as close cooperation in other fields.

Answering questions by newsmen on board the plane which brought the Greek delegation to Athens, the prime minister said that the government has achieved much during the 12 months it has been in power.

1. In the field of foreign policy, it has opened new roads and adopted pioneering positions within the EEC and NATO.

2. In the field of economy, it has succeeded in halting the crazy decline. In addition, as will be seen from the account to be made before the Chamber of Deputies in 2 months, the country's economic life is on the road of stability.

3. During the past year the government took a number of institutional measures which have contributed to radical change in the political, social and economic stage of the country which, thus, with the people's support, is on the road of reconstruction, which will be completed during the current or the next 4-year period.

Asked about recent political developments in connection with the abolition of the cross of preference in the elections, Mr Papandreou said that the effort to undermine PASOK will not help the rightwing at all because the movement, which is building on the (?bitter) experiences of 1965, knows both the opponent and the people and it is in a position to face all undermining activities with steel-like unity.

PAPANDREOU ADDRESSES CHAMBER SESSION 13 OCT

NC132136 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] The abolition of the cross of preference constitutes a major political event for which the PASOK government received the people's mandate on 18 October 1981. This was stressed in the Chamber of Deputies tonight by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou during the debate on the bill abolishing the cross of preference for the parliamentary elections.

We are completing 1 year since PASOK's coming to power, said the prime minister, and I state categorically that we are going to fulfill the entire program of government policy. The covenant of honor which we have signed with the Greek people will be observed. We will struggle with them to build a Greece that will respond to the visions of many generations, a proud Greece that will belong to its people and not to oligarchies. We probably may not be able to achieve miracles, but we are in a position to make advances in connection with the founding of democratic institutions through the bill we have submitted to the Chamber and the ones to follow.

For the PASOK government, there are three pillars of democracy: the parliament, local self-determination and trade unionism. With these three pillars we put an end to the centralist state that lasted 160 years. During our days in office a democratic dialogue has begun in every part of Greece, and the voice of the citizen is being heeded. The national representation is the [word indistinct] and crucial pillar of democracy. Our goal is the elevation of parliament, the elevation of parties and the deputy's role [words indistinct].

Mr Papandreou added: We have committed ourselves to the people with regard to the electoral system. This can be summed up as follows:

1. The right to vote to all those over 18 years of age. We have done it.
2. The abolition of the cross of preference.
3. The financing of the parties so that their dependence on private organizations can be terminated.
4. The introduction of the simple proportioanl representation system.
5. The right to vote to the immigrants, seamen and youths studying abroad.

The vote, together with the abolition of the cross of preference, will be for the citizen a vote of political and ideological conscience.

Referring to the uproar over the cross of preference, the prime minister said that this excitement is artificial. He said that the people are watching developments without passion and that they are participating in the task for change.

Mr Papandreou stressed: We have lived through hard struggles and we have gotten to know defections like that of July 1965, which will go down in history. We are proud of the genuinely multidimensional policy we are following and of its results. Today, Greece has a voice in Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East.

The prime minister then referred to the country's economic situation and stressed: Despite the fact that we have exercised a bold income policy, inflation will be considerably reduced. The national income, instead of being reduced, as was the case in 1981, will be increased in 1982. The balance of payments will be such that the deficit of $2.5 billion will drop to $2.1. The deficit in the public field will be much lower than that at the time of New Democracy.

ULUSU COMMENTS ON PROGRESS IN ECONOMIC PROGRAM

[Text] Izmir, 14 Oct (AA) -- Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, currently in Izmir, met leading businessmen and industrialists of the Aegean region Wednesday and told them: "We are determined to maintain our basic preference and policy of greatly encouraging production and exports."

"New and additional measures will be adopted in the fields of promotion, investments and foreign trade in order to eliminate the adverse effects on our domestic economy of the potential major developments or changes in world economy," the prime minister said, adding: "It is public knowledge that positive results have been obtained through the economic stability and development program up till now. This program will be further developed and maintained, for this reason, I want to express, once more my conviction that no concessions be made from this program in implementation."

Exports sector is one of the driving forces of Turkish economy, he stressed, adding that the government was attaching great importance to eliminate factors impeding growth of exports. The prime minister also stressed that agricultural products were still an important export item for Turkey.

ASSEMBLY MEMBER SUBMITS REPORT ON CONSTITUTION

TA121103 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1330 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, Oct 11 (AA) -- Consultative Assembly member directly elected by the National Security Council Feridun Sakir Ogunc submitted to head of state of president of the National Security Council Gen Kenan Evren a report concerning the draft constitution on Monday, according to informed sources.

"The part concerning basic rights and liberties as well as the articles concerning social and economic rights and duties may create a social crisis in the future," he reportedly said. Recalling that he himself voted against the draft at the Assembly, the draft in its form could not assure labour peace, he stressed, adding that "these are the reasons why we honestly said no to the draft."

He called for a revision by the National Security Council of the articles concerning labour union rights and a more realistic and constructive approach towards labour rights.

LABOR MINISTER ON TURKISH WORKERS IN FRG

NC141121 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 8 Oct 82 pp 1, 11

[Semih Eriguc report from Ankara]

[Excerpts] In a statement to TERCUMAN in connection with Federal German Chancellor Kohl's words, "we are going to reduce the number of Turkish workers in the next 5 months," Minister of Labor Turhan Esener said that our workers would not be left at the mercy of the new government in Germany. He added: "We are always open to discussion with the German Government on the subject of the repatriation of our workers."

Drawing attention to the fact that there are about 2.5 million of our compatriots working in Germany, the minister of labor said that if countries employing foreign workers decide to repatriate them, they have to assure the future of every worker. Esener further stated that the question of reducing the number of workers in Germany will be discussed with the Wuertemberg labor minister, who is expected to visit Turkey this month. He urged that "Turkish workes deciding to return home should act of their own free will without being influenced in any way."

Minister of Labor Esener continued: "The German Government, which is going to implement a new program to reinforce their economy, will not, we hope, say 'there are far too many Turkish workers; let them go' without waiting to see the outcome of their campaign against unemployment. There are very many Turkish workers working in the Federal Republic of Germany at great sacrifices."

Esener continued: "We are convinced that Turkish-German friendship, which is based on strong foundations, will, with understanding, overcome the difficulties which may develop. There are about 2.5 million of our workers in Germany. Their repatriation is bound to create certain social and economic problems."

Official Critical of FRG Stand

TA140825 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 0710 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 14 Oct (AA) -- Consultative Assembly member from Mardin, Besir Hamitogullari, said in a speech at the Assembly Wednesday Turkish migrant workers would be entitled as of 1968 to free circulation in the EEC countries and the recent Federal German decision to send back Turkish migrant workers was in fact an attempt to prevent such free circulation.

No European country would be permitted to treat Turkish workers as "Kunta Kinte," the abused negro slave, he stressed, calling on the government to adopt "a vigorous and active policy."

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

TURKEY URGED TO REVISE DRAFT CONSTITUTION

NC062231 Paris AFP in English 2215 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] Strasbourg, eastern France, Oct 6 (AFP) -- The West European Parliament today called on Turkey to revise its draft constitution, judging the text undemocratic.

A resolution voted by the Parliament said the Turkish constitution -- whose draft text will be submitted to referendum next November 7 -- must "ensure the pluralism of political parties and trade unions, the protection and equal treatment of religious minorities; the preeminence of law and the separation of powers, and incorporate safeguards for human rights and basic freedoms."

The resolution reflected the conclusions of three West European constitutional experts, one of whom, Professor Hans Gammeltoft-Hansen (Denmark), said: "One cannot consider the text as satisfying the obligations and aspirations that a modern constitution in Western Europe must meet or as guaranteeing a system of democratic government."

In the debate preceding the vote, Greek and Portuguese Socialists demanded Turkey's exclusion from the Council of Europe. French Socialist Roland Beix called Turkey "the Council of Europe's bad conscience."

But British Conservatives urged that Turkey's military junta be "given a chance" and abstained from the vote on the resolution.

AUSTRIA

ALBANIA OFFERS POWER, NICKEL, CHROME ORES

AU121636 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Oct 82 p 7

[Summary] At a Vienna press conference on 11 October, Trade Minister Staribacher, who last week visited Albania, Greece and Yugoslavia, declared that Albania has offered Austria Electric Power deliveries of 150 million kilowatt hours per year. According to Staribacher, such power supplies could either be effected via Yugoslav transit power lines or conceivably by feeding the Albanian power into the Yugoslav power grid and feeding corresponding supplies to Austria from Slovenian powerplants. Technical details are to be discussed in talks between the power companies of the three countries, and final decisions could then be made in trilateral talks between Albania, Yugoslavia and Austria, he said.

Staribacher also declared that Albania displayed an interest in generally expanding its trade with Austria, and to this end offered to further expand its nickel and chrome ore exports to Austria. Since under the provisions of its Constitution, Albania is committed to balance its foreign trade, higher exports to Austria would permit it to place with the Voest-Alpine Corporation a long-pending order for a ferrochromium plant worth 72 million schillings, the minister declared.

Commenting on his brief visit to Greece, Staribacher expressed the hope that the long-term agreement with that country providing for the delivery of 3,500 Austrian trucks annually will again be extended. As to his visit to Yugoslavia, he said it mainly served the preparation of the next session of the Austrian-Yugoslav joint commission scheduled for 18 October in Vienna.

Noting that Toncho Chakurov, Bulgarian minister of machine building and electronics, is currently in Austria to attend a session of the joint Austrian-Bulgarian commission, Staribacher said that the Bulgarian guest will use the opportunity for contacting numerous Austrian firms. At yesterday's meeting of the commission, Bulgarian tabled the wish for higher wine, fruit and vegetable exports to Austria. In addition, a cooperation agreement between the Austrian Steyr-Daimler-Puch automotive corporation and the Bulgarian Balkan car company was signed.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY INTERVIEWED ON MIDEAST

AU141603 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 14 -- The Middle East problem can be solved only by providing a state for the Palestinians, according to Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's explanation of his move to grant official recognition to the PLO. The 71-year-old Kreisky said in an interview appearing in Rome's IL MESSAGGERO daily today that "a new historic phase has opened up in the Middle East" with the latest peace proposals from U.S. President Ronald Reagan and the Arab summit in Fes.

Reagan's proposal calls for the creation of an autonomous Palestinian state attached to Jordan while the plan approved at the Arab summit meeting in Fes calls for an independent Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital.

"It will take several years before the process leads to a settlement," Kreisky acknowledged. "Naturally, a lot will depend on the development of internal politics in Israel," he added.

The Austrian Government leader was strongly critical of Israel's invasion of Lebanon, not least because, he reasoned, "the armed intervention sparked a sweeping wave of hate towards Israel, and hate does not produce good results." The important thing now, Kreisky insisted, is that Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization hurry up and recognize each other.

Kreisky, a Jew, dismissed Israeli accusations that his pro-Palestinian sympathies made him an anti-Semite. "I come from a Jewish family and I lost all my relatives to the Nazis" he disclosed, "and no one can accuse me of anti-Semitism."

According to Kreisky, who has been in power in Vienna since 1970, it is simply "ridiculous" to haul anti-Semitism into the picture in judging other peoples' opinions. "Israel is naked right now, offering its true face to public opinion," he argued, noting that the war in Lebanon had stripped Israel of the support and sympathy it had acquired in the last ten years.

"The whole world fears the madness of its Zionist leaders who try to solve their problems with the use of arms" Kreisky insisted, announcing that he didn't "want anything to do with (Premier Menachem) Begin's and (Defense Minister Ari'el) Sharon's Israel."

The Austrian leader also branded the accusations lodged against the pope in Rome for having granted an audience to PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat as "disgraceful." Attacks like the one against the Rome synagogue on Saturday have nothing to do with 'Arafat or the PLO, he said.

In Kreisky's opinion, the Palestinian civilians who are not expelled from Lebanon will become the next freedom fighters, "sparking a new chain of conflicts." Even the guerrillas who moved to other Arab states cannot be expected to transform into citizens of their newly adopted homes. "The PLO will build itself up again and new wars will start breaking out with other Arab countries," he predicted.

The only solution, for Kreisky, will be for Israel and PLO to recognize each other and accept new peace moves that lead them on "a realistic path to the future."

KOHL WELCOMES REAGAN'S ARMS CONTROL COMMITMENT

LD142032 Hamburg DPA in German 1926 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl has emphatically welcomed U.S. President Ronald Reagan's commitment to progress on the path to a balanced control of arms in East and West. In talks on Thursday with Eugene Rostow, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the chancellor, according to the Federal Press Office, at the same time stressed the significance of the American-Soviet negotiations in Geneva on the reduction of medium-range and intercontinental strategic nuclear weapons. What is needed is to establish and stabilize the military balance at the lowest possible level of arms by means of balanced and verifiable negotiation results.

Rostow, who is on a tour of several European capitals, briefed the new Bonn head of government on the latest state of the Geneva negotiations. On Friday, Rostow will meet in Bonn with Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher and Defense Minister Manfred Woerner (CDU).

The chancellor also spoke in favor of close cooperation within the Western alliance on all questions related to arms control. The joint proposal by the West for a so-called Zero Option for American and Soviet medium-range weapons would be the best solution because this would mean that both sides would renounce one category of weapons.

SED'S VERNER CRITICIZES KOHL'S 'COLD WAR' SPEECH

[Text] Dresden/East Berlin, 14 Oct (DPA) -- The GDR has accused Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl (CDU) today of having reverted back to cold war formulas in his government statement. Paul Verner, SED Politburo member responsible for security questions, said in Dresden that the statement made the previous day by Kohl contained little which could further peace.

The federal chancellor's assurances of adhering to existing agreements contrast with the fact that he declared the alliance with the United States as being the Federal Republic's raison d'etat and said that NATO's arms decision should be implemented at all costs. With regard to relations with the GDR, Kohl used "nationalistic tones" which recalled cold war times. For both German states there can only be a peaceful future if they pledge themselves to a policy of peaceful existence and are guided by this in their actions. The GDR is doing this, and this is also demanded by the basic treaty of international law, Verner said in addressing the 15th CDU Congress in the GDR.

In a lengthy report on the government statement in NEUES DEUTSCHLAND, the accusation was levelled at Kohl that although there was no lack of pledges to peace in his speech, his other remarks gave rise to "a certain amount of skepticism since he used phrases which stem from cold war times." The GDR can rely, Kohl said, on the fact that his government will stand by commitments undertaken. At the same time, however, he spoke "heedlessly" of German unity and the "openness of the German question." In doing so, he stood in contradiction to reality.

NEUES DEUTSCHLAND raises in this respect the question as to whether the new government wants a sort of "treaty allegiance with limited liability." "Although there is much talk of easing relations, when it comes to practical terms GDR passports are not recognized." Bonn's unreasonable attitude with regard to respecting GDR state citizenship is the main hurdle to increasing human contacts. The GDR must therefore ask itself how the youth exchange is to continue under these conditions if GDR state citizenship is not even respected.

FRG, GDR DIPLOMATS DISCUSS CSCE FOLLOWUP MEETING

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Berndt Von Staden, state secretary in the foreign office, had talks today with Ewald Moldt, head of the GDR permanent mission in Bonn. They discussed current issues related to the Madrid CSCE followup meeting. The leaders of the two countries' delegations to the CSCE conference also attended the meeting. The foreign office gave no further details. The last intra-German exchange of views on CSCE issues took place in February 1980 in East Berlin.

GENSCHER MEETS WITH THAI COUNTERPART 9 OCT

[Text] Bonn, 9 Oct (DPA) -- Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila discussed today in Bonn opportunities for more intensive cooperation between the EEC and the southeast federation of states, ASEAN. The Thai minister is currently chairman of the ASEAN committee of ministers. The foreign office said that Genscher and his counterpart talked over breakfast at Genscher's home. They spoke primarily about the FRG's EEC presidentship in the first half of 1983. In February 1983, there will be a meeting of EEC and ASEAN foreign minsters in Bangkok.

Genscher and Sitthi Sawetsila also discussed the Kampuchean problem. The foreign office pointed out that the government firmly supports the efforts of the ASEAN states to bring about a peaceful solution in terms of the recently formed exile government of Prince Sihanouk. In a lecture to the German Society for Foreign Policy Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila stressed the full support of ASEAN for the coalition government of Sihanouk, which in the final analysis could present to Vietnam an alternative to the expensive puppet regime in Kampuchea. He warned about the growing Soviet presence in Southeast Asia.

FRG'S WOERNER ON PARIS TALKS WITH HERNU

LD142152 Hamburg DPA in German 1947 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, 14 Oct (DPA) -- The new Federal Government wants to exploit to the fullest the possibilities of the Franco-German treaty in respect to security cooperation. Defense Minister Manfred Woerner said this on Thursday evening in Paris after his first meeting with his French counterpart Charles Hernu.

Woerner agreed with the view that since France ended its military integration with NATO, security policy had only been dealt with peripherally in the consultations by the two states. He stressed: "The exclusion of security policy is less than ever in accord with German interests." Bonn wants to respect Paris' wish to maintain French independence with regard to nuclear strategy, which is a "significant additional deterrent factor." But one wants to know what French intentions are and to coordinate with them.

Woerner said that Hernu and himself saw in their several-hour meeting in Paris the beginning of fruitful and trusting cooperation. Woerner gave no specific details of the talks on security policy and arms cooperation. He pointed to the 21-22 October Franco-German summit in Bonn and the round of talks between the four foreign and defense ministers held in Bonn immediately prior to the summit.

To questions about the shelved project of the Franco-German battle tank -- which the French are especially keen on -- Woerner pointed out that he still had to study the files. He wanted in no way to raise any expectations if he wasn't sure of being able to fulfill them. The new government would issue no cheques if it wasn't sure of being able to meet them.

The minister also wanted to use his visit to underline Franco-German friendship which, irrespective of the government of the moment, remained a "cornerstone of a Free Europe and of the Atlantic alliance." When asked, he stressed that he saw no problems resulting from the different party-political basis of the two governments. "I do not have the feeling that we are talking a different language," Woerner said. Nor did he have the impression that the French Government is taking a wait-and-see stance until the Bundestag elections on 6 March. There was no hesitation when one wanted to establish clarity as quickly as possible.

LE MONDE CITES MITTERRAND ON ZAIRE, CHAD

[Philippe Decraene dispatch: "France Will Respond to Any Request for Participation in Chad's Recovery"]

[Excerpts] Kinshasa -- During the 9th conference of French and African delegation defined the meeting's objective on Friday, 8 October, thus: "The aim is not to end the OAU crisis as if by magic, but simply to make progress toward a solution...." In the ranks of the French delegation, there was talk of "drawing up tactics making it possible to save the organization." Moreover, the French and Africans agree on many questions from South Africa to Namibia, from North-South dialogue to security problems. With regard to Chad, both General Mobutu and Mr Mitterrand had the opportunity to express their views in the speeches delivered in the People's Palace on Friday morning.

Whatever the scale of the efforts by the participants to ensure that it is not impossible to "see the woods for the trees," in keeping with the wish of many delegations, it is in fact Chad which is the main concern.

In that connection, Mr Mitterrand stated that: "France will respond to any request made to it to participate in Chad's recovery... It is not its place to take decisions for the Chadian people."

In the evening, after a 45-minute private meeting with Mr Hissein Habre, chairman of the Chadian State Council, the president of the French Republic seized the opportunity to explain this thinking when speaking to several French journalists: "It is not for me to choose the African countries' heads of state.... We do not want to interfere in internal problems.... I do not need a reconciliation with Chad.... France speaks with one voice: it is addressing Chad.... We have an ambassador in Ndjamena and, to the best of my knowledge, he has never left there...."

Increased Aid to Zaire

For his part, Elysee spokesman Michel Vauzelle specified that France was continuing its aid to the Chadian state "irrespective of its government," and was making every effort to help it to maintain its unity," national cohesion and independence. According to Mr Vauzelle, some funds planned for Chad will be "speeded up."

In a 1-hour speech on Friday morning, in which he caused the French [illegible] state to be warmly applauded several times, President Mobutu himself asked the co[illegible]ce to take various emergency measures to help the Chadians. The Zairian head of state and, in his reply, Mr Francois Mitterrand, advocated a restructuring of international economic relations, condemning the arms race and the superpowers' hegemonistic policy and the revival of the cold war. The two statesmen each stressed the threat to peace posed by the delay in Namibia's decolonization and South African apartheid, which the Zairian president described as a "crime against humanity."

While the latter condemned those who are the cause of the African states' foreign debts, Mr Mitterrand recalled some of the major principles behind French policy toward the Third World: "self-sufficiency in food, energy independence, appropriate industrialization, self-centered [autocentre] development and interdependence between North and South...." He then recalled his constant "appeals to international conscience and common sense," stating that he "constantly" repeated "the same speech at the risk of wearying people."

Condemning "market laws" and berating "short-term profits," Mr Mitterrand asked his audience to carefully prepare for the so-called Lome III negotiations on the association between the EEC and the African, Caribbean and Pacific states. With regard to security, he remarked: "Wherever a conflict persists, the parties involved lose proportionally more freedom...." Then he concluded: "Peace and security are the very conditions for development."

For his part, General Mobutu had drawn a bold parallel between De Gaulle, who portrayed himself as black Africa's political emancipator in Brazzaville in 1958, and Mr Francois Mitterrand, who ought to be the architect of economic decolonization of that same part of the world in Kinshasa in 1982. When he hailed the French head of state as "the guarantor of Africa's security," and "the defender of its economic interests," he drew a wave of applause.

The summit already appears to be an undoubted success for Mr Mobutu. Zaire, which was previously ostracized by a section of black Africa and by a section of the international community, is now, thanks to its president's diplomatic skill, making a dazzling reentry into the concert of nations. Moreover, Mr Mobutu confirmed that the French Government had only been concerned with interstate relations since May 1981: "The aid which Paris now gives us is much more advantageous at the economic level than the aid which we received in Mr Giscard d'Estaing's days," one of the Zairian president's close aides told us, taking that opportunity to criticize the "excessive spending" on constructing the radio center and the international commerce center in the capital -- two buildings constructed with French aid several years ago and whose maintenance has proved ruinous. "That was what the old cooperation was like..." he told us, stressing the fact that French aid at present was constantly increasing and that it was now alloted to productive sectors.

COT INTERVIEWED ON SUMMIT, RELATIONS WITH AFRICA

AB141810 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1135 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Interview on Europe I with French Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot on 12 October 1982]

[Excerpt] [Question] It is already being said that when you were in the opposition during the term of office of the former regime, you were opposed to the former head of state's African trips.

[Answer] What I noticed in this regard is that the Franco-African summits progressively became a heavy, rigid and bureaucratic structure with a busy agenda. Since last year, they have regained their simplicity.

[Question] My second question is on "which Africa?" I would like us to make a distinction that must be made -- and which you yourself make as a democrat -- between African democracies like ours and the dictatorships which are quite different from us.

[Answer] Before responding to your question, I would like to say a word on the Brazzaville meeting, because it was also important. It was the first official visit paid to the Congo by a French head of state since 1958. And Francois Mitterrand was accorded an extraordinary welcome by the people of Brazzaville -- to such an extent that President Sassou-Nguesso had to make a second and third tour to the most populous areas in order to show his guest to the people and to enable them to express their great joy.

[Question] Is it because the regime was Marxist-Leninist that the French heads of state stopped going there?

[Answer] They were no longer going there because the regime is Marxist-Leninist. I am now going to answer your question. It is true that Africa has its own diversity. It is true that there are regimes in Africa that do not respect the rights of man. On the other hand, there are others that are models of democracy. Such diversities exist in Africa, beginning with the "Marxism" of Brazzaville to the most moderate, the most conservative regimes one can imagine. It is this diversity which makes Africa what it is today. As you know, such diversity goes with the world as it is, and not as one would like it to be. This does not prevent France from remaining true to its message and, specifically, to its message on the rights of man, and I try to repeat this wherever I go.

[Question] Even when you see Sekou Toure and Mobutu?

[Answer] Even when I see Sekou Toure and Mobutu. I even had the opportunity to explain this to them. France does not hesitate, France continues to insist on the amelioration of the situation of the [words indistinct] France and Africa is another. We were at a summit meeting; we did not go to see Mobutu.

[Question] Mr Minister, which answer will you give to the Americans if one of their papers should accuse us of being particularly interested in Africa's riches?

[Answer] I will tell them that in fact, France has a priviledged relationship with Africa. This is part of France's power. It also means that France's message has been heard, understood and welcomed. I am happy about it.

MITTERRAND 'WARNS' HAITI ON FUTURE AID

NC141920 Paris AFP in English 1750 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 14 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand today warned Haiti that future French aid would take into account the degree of "public freedom" in that country.

Mr Mitterrand issued the warning after accepting the credentials of several new ambassadors, including Emmanuel Guerrier of Haiti.

"The needs of developing countries are enormous," Mr Mitterrand observed. "You (Haiti) would gain by modifying your image throughout the world. Indeed, no effective economic aid and no perceptible economic progress can be made without a flowering of public freedom."

"Cooperation between our two countries," he added, "should also promote a rapprochement of our two peoples and contribute to improving the condition of Haitians as a whole."

COMMUNIQUE ON FRANCE-JAPAN COOPERATION MEETING

AB141505 Paris Diplomatic Service in French 1145 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Ministry of External Relations communique issued in Paris after the French-Japanese joint scientific and technical cooperation commission meeting on 13 October]

[Text] The sixth session of the Franco-Japanese joint commission on scientific and technical cooperation was held in Paris on 11,12 and 13 October 1982. The Japanese delegation was headed by His Excellency Hiroshi Uchida, Japan's ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to France, assisted by Minoro Harada, director general of the Science and Technology Agency. The French delegation was led by Jacques Thibau, director general for cultural, scientific and technical relations in the Ministry of External Relations.

This meeting is of very special importance as it takes place following the French president's visit to Japan and the Versailles summit's decision to revive scientific and technical cooperation.

The first day was devoted to evaluating the existing cooperation instituted by the intergovernmental agreement on scientific and technical cooperation of 2 July 1974.

On the second day, the two delegations discussed the prospects for extending cooperation to new areas, namely:

-- heavy scientific equipment
-- scientific and technical information
-- new materials
-- electronics
-- energy
-- biotechnology
-- space
-- oceanology

The French delegation further expressed its interest in cooperating in the field of robots and medical engineering.

The two parties decided to hold the seventh session of the joint commission in Tokyo in approximately a year.

GEORGES MARCHAIS HEADS PCF DELEGATION TO PRC

LD131948 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Georges Marchais is leaving for China at the head of a PCF delegation. The 15-day trip could be called historic since it marks a reconciliation between the Communist Parties of France and China. The two parties have been quarrelling since the sixties, since the break between the Soviet Union and China.

Meets With Hu Yaobang

LD141316 Paris Domestic Service in French 1145 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Immediately after arriving in Beijing, Georges Marchais, secretary general of the French Communist Party, was received by his counterpart, Hu Yaobang, who wanted to set the tone for the meeting at once.

It is natural, said Hu Yaobang, secretary general of the Chinese Communist Party, that two Communist Parties should diverge on certain questions. From Beijing here is our special correspondent, (Alain Barbot):

French and Chinese Communists are meeting again and it is in the logic of things. It is the result of converging evolution -- the Chinese are moving closer to Moscow, while the French have distanced themselves slightly -- to such a point that today one is tempted to say that the two parties are following parallel roads based on the construction of a socialism which suits their respective countries and the rejection of any one model of socialism.

Interest in this meeting is dual. For French Communists it is a chance to affirm their independence of Moscow. After meeting with the Italian leader Berlinguer and attending the Yugoslav Communists' congress, Georges Marchais is now in Beijing and is the third black sheep for the Kremlin. For the Chinese, it is an opportunity to regain a foothold in the international communist movement by renewing links with those who are more or less Moscow's friends.

That being said, beyond their convergence on the denunciation of U.S. imperialism or the arms race for example, there are also differences on Afghanistan or Kampuchea, to cite only those. This is the subject of talks which began this afternoon between Georges Marchais and Secretary General of the Chinese Communist Party Hu Yaobang. It is not a matter of reaching total agreement or an alignment with Beijing by the French Communist Party, but of making a balance sheet of agreements and disagreements. And after more than 20 years of quarrelling, that is already much when one recalls that only 2 years ago the Chinese did not restrict themselves in denouncing the lackeys of Soviet imperialism.

L'HUMANITE VIEWS NEW POLISH TRADE UNION LAW

PM141453 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Jacques Estager article: "The Polish Trade Unions: What Future?"]

[Text] Following the dissolution of the trade unions, there must undoubtedly be great emotional shock among the Polish working class. Nonetheless, it is by national accord that Poland will finally be able to overcome the consequences of the serious mistakes made in the past by implementing the far-reaching reforms which are vital for economic recovery, social progress and democracy. Independent trade unions, enjoying effective rights, are necessary for achieving that.

A settlement obviously also implies the release of the imprisoned trade unionists. In that respect, it is to be hoped, as General Jaruzelski suggested, that the adoption of the new trade union law will start a rapid evolution toward lifting the state of emergency.

The cause relating to the creation of new trade unions and involving the dissolution of the trade unions which have existed since the fall [presumably fall 1980], include Solidarity, was no surprise. Indeed, for several months public opnion has known that at the beginning of October the Sejm would have to give its verdict on a bill defining the trade unions' role and place it in Polish society -- a bill which has been in the process of being drafted for more than a year.

At the same time as the work of the parliamentary commission appointed for that job, a public debate started last February and continued for several months on the subject: "What kind of trade unions should Poland have?" That debate, which was conducted in the enterprises, was widely echoed in the press, where the most diverse and conflicting opinions were expressed. There was relatively extensive participation by Solidarity members.

General agreement emerged on rejecting the concept and practices which prevailed before August 1980; in other words, those of a trade union subordinate to the political authorities and integrated into the enterprise managements.

But post-Gdansk trade union practice also posed fundamental questions. There was the following among others: What function should an independent trade union have in a socialist system? Can it reject joint management and joint responsibility in economic development, as Solidarity obstinately did throughout that period?

It emerged that many workers who supported Solidarity thought that the trade union ought to shoulder all its responsibilities in running the collectivized economy and abandon a purely critical and negative attitude. It was that which initially led the government to envisage the possibility of Solidarity's resuming its activity after the lifting of the state of emergency, provided it was strictly limited to the trade union level.

In addition, government circles were counting not only on that positive reaction from the working class but also on the existence in the Solidarity leadership of a realistic and moderate faction represented by Lech Walesa and elements close to the church. There was hope that faction would prove capable to bringing the movement back into the strict framework of trade union activity and rejecting all political opposition to the regime.

Events did not confirm that expectation. In the past few months, dialogue has not been established between the government and Solidarity's moderate faction. In addition, the opposition groups' hold over Solidarity's clandestine centers has been strengthened, leading them into a course which had little in common with trade union activity. By staging street demonstrations, which the workers' movement never did in the summer of 1980, those centers adopted a political line of confrontation with and opposition to the regime in practice under Solidarity's authority. Hence it could be foreseen, especially after 31 August, that the trade union movement was not going to reemerge in the form it had before 13 December. A chapter in Poland's history had been closed.

However, although most workers did not follow Solidarity's political itinerary, they still have the initial image and concept of that movement -- that of the summer and fall of 1980, that of an authentic workers' trade union. Solidarity assumed the quality of a real myth and symbolized the hopes and victories of those periods for them. Such a movement could have been one of the vital forces in the socialist renewal and change. A different line prevailed which eventually led to the present situation.

Nonetheless, that situation does not remove the essential ideas which are the basis of the Gdansk agreements. This aim of the new law is not to establish puppet trade unions. The government needs authentic, truly independent trade unions just as much as the working class does.

A new concept of the trade unions' role and place in a socialist regime emerged in the summer of 1980. That concept remains. It is one of the Polish workers' movement's achievements and may influence future trade union action. The mass of Solidarity members, who are attached to real trade union action and refuse to indulge in political opposition, have the opportunity to play a major role in the new trade unions. That is probably why the initial reactions in Poland from Solidarity circles and from the episcopate, while condemning the Sejm vote, are relatively moderate.

The future is not closed for those who want real change and the democratization of the regime. The vote which has just been cast in the Sejm is not a sign of a harder line, as the campaign at present being orchestrated in France claims. The Polish authorities are well aware that the country cannot recover without the active participation of the working class and society as a whole. The trade unions and self-management are two essential components of socialist democracy. Both are vital to the success of the reforms undertaken.

Moreover, by restoring trade union activity, the government intends to remove one of the main obstacles to the national accord policy formulated by General Jaruzelski. That return to trade union activity is being carried out at the cost of the dissolution of Solidarity, which constituted -- nobody denies it -- a historic moment for Poland.

Will it be possible to overcome the disappointments and divisions to make the new trade unions an instrument of the renewal in the sprit of the Gdansk agreements? The answer rests with the Polish people.

'ACTION DIRECTE' TIED TO INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM

NC142036 Paris AFP in English 1940 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 14 (AFP) -- Two arrests here this week have given police hard evidence of direct ties between the outlawed extreme-left "Action Directe" group and international terrorism, French officials said today. The two were among seven people hauled in Tuesday and yesterday in a police crackdown on Action Directe, which was dissolved by presidential decree on August 18. But the arrests of Frederic Oriach, 29, a leader of the group, and Christian Gauzens, 25, also turned up documents -- including a handwritten statement by Mr Oriach -- implying the group's involvement in at least four attacks in the French capital in August and September.

The most recent of these was the explosion of a booby-trapped car belonging to an Israeli diplomat working for his Defense Ministry's purchasing annex here. The attack, on September 17, left the diplomat and two others seriously injured. The statement also said the group was involved in placing a bomb outside the Paris apartment of an American diplomat that killed two police explosives experts in August. Another attack outside a citrus fruit company dealing with Israel left one woman wounded, while the fourth attack against a tool company also trading with Israel caused only material damage.

Joseph Franceschi, secretary of state for security who coordinates the new anti-terrorist units set up by President Francois Mitterrand in September, today stressed that he now held "personal proof that Action Directe is supported logistically and tactically by international terrorist organizations...anti-Zionist and pro-Palestinian organization."

Action Directe has claimed to have carried out 30 attacks, mostly against Jewish targets in Paris. Among the documents found this week was a list of 40 Israeli banks or stores in Paris targeted for attacks, the reports said.

Three of the four attacks described on Mr Oriach's hand-written statement were claimed by a shadowy group calling itself the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions (LARF) about which police seem to know little. The LARF also claimed to have tried to assassinate the U.S. Charge d-Affaires Christian Chapman in January 1981, to have shot dead the U.S. Deputy Military Attache Lieutenant-Colonel Charles R. Ray last January 18, and to have killed the Israeli Second Counsellor Vacov Barsimantov last April 3.

Action Directe was founded in 1979 and police believe it has a membership of about 50 men and women between 20 and 30 years old. It claims to be anti-American, anti-Zionist and opposed to luxury ways of living.

POLICE ARREST SUSPECTED ETA MILITARY LEADER

NC132112 Paris AFP in English 2059 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bayonne, southwestern France, Oct 13 (AFP) -- French police have arrested the suspected leader of the military wing of the ETA Basque separatist guerrilla organisation, authoritative sources said here today. Jesus Abrisketa Korta (Cxuxo), 33, was arrested at Saint Jean de Luz in the French Basque region Monday, along with Jose Ostoloza Pagoaga, 27, who was later released. Police were on the lookout for Mr Abrisketa Korta following the discovery of an arms dump here on April 27.

During searches for the suspected ETA leader, the officers seized documents on what ETA calls the "revolutionary tax" -- sums of money demanded under threat from leading Spanish businessmen by the guerrilla [word indistinct].

GOVERNMENT EARMARKS MORE RELIEF AID FOR LEBANON

AU141622 Rome ANSA in English 1543 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 14 -- The Italian Foreign Ministry has earmarked more than one million dollars worth of additional emergency relief supplies to Lebanon.

The supplies, which include foodstuffs, will be distributed in Lebanon in the next few days by the United Nations organization for refugees.

The latest aid allotment for Lebanon brings the total of Italian emergency relief for the war-stricken Middle Eastern state to 9.5 million dollars.

The ministry's development cooperation department also announced plans to ship health units of physicicans and medical aides to Lebanon later this month. The units, which will be equipped with medical supplies, will be stationed in Lebanon for a period of six-to-eight weeks.

In addition, groups of Italian volunteers and Red Cross workers will offer their assistance at the (Acca) and (Wadi) hospitals on the outskirts of Beirut, the only two centers offering health services to a large population of elderly and child refugees.

The Rome government has offered to help in the Lebanese re-construction effort and Beirut authorities said they will explore the areas in which to fit the aid coming from Italy through both bilateral and multilateral channels.

POPE REPORTEDLY URGED 'ARAFAT TO RECOGNIZE ISRAEL

AU140849 Rome ANSA in English 0833 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 14 -- Pope John Paul II urged the Palestinians to recognize the State of Israel, repudiate all forms of violence and help restore order in Lebanon when he met with PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat at the Vatican last month, according to a leading Vatican journalist.

The Roman Catholic Church leader granted an audience to 'Arafat on September 15 while the PLO leader was in Rome to attend an annual Inter-Parliamentary Union session.

Virgilio Levi, assistant editor-in-chief of the Holy See's daily newspaper, "L'OSSERVATORE ROMANO", disclosed the gist of the pope's remarks to 'Arafat in a televised interview aired Wednesday in Italy.

The pope started off by saying "the Palestinians are a people worthy of respect, like every other people", Levi reported. The Palestinians, John Paul went on, have a right to a homeland "but at the same time they have to recognize Israel's right to security, which implies the right to see its existence recognized".

The church leader also advised the PLO leader to "contribute" to Lebanon's return to normalcy, the restoration of its "sovereignty, autonomy and identity".

The pope was harshly criticized by the Israeli Government for receiving 'Arafat and resentment heightened considerably after Saturday's attack on Rome's synagogue.

POLAND'S LOPATKA ON PLANNED PAPAL VISIT, WALESA

AU122013 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 12 -- Polish Religious Affairs Minister Adam Lopatka denied having any knowledge here today of Pope John Paul II's presumed demand that martial law be lifted in Poland before he returns for another visit.

"I have no knowledge that the end of the state of war in Poland has been laid down as a condition" for the pope's next visit home, the Warsaw government official told a press conference in Rome.

Lopatka attended ceremonies in St Peter's Basilica Sunday for the sainthood of Father Maximilian Kolbe, a Polish priest who gave his life at Auschwitz in 1941 to save another prisoner. Other representatives from Warsaw on hand for the ceremony included Deputy House Speaker Jerzy Ozdowski, Deputy Premier Komender and State Council member Kazimierz Morawski.

The pope told Polish pilgrims in Rome Monday that he considered it his "duty and right" as bishop of Rome and as a Pole to make his planned trip home and voiced the hope that the "necessary conditions" for the trip come about.

The Polish religious affairs minister called the pope's speech "very interesting". The pope spoke from a platform on which a large statue of interned Solidarity leader Lech Walesa had been installed. Among other things, he criticized those who were driving the Polish people "to tears".

[Words indistinct] were being arranged in talks between the church leader himself, the Polish Government and local episcopate in the East European state. The date of the visit would have been disclosed earlier this month, the Polish minister asserted, if Polish Primate Jozef Glemp hadn't cancelled the meeting he was scheduled to have had with General Jaruzelski.

As things stand now, he added, the date will probably be announced sometime before next February. In any case, the visit is scheduled for 1983. The pope's last visit to Poland was in June 1979.

The news Lopatka had of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was that he "lives in a private home and is in good condition". Walesa has been under house arrest since December 13, 1981.

"When Walesa will be released, his situation might get much worse", the religious affairs minister commented.

Lopatka went on to say that there were no specific plans, for the time being, for the establishment of diplomatic relations between Poland and the Holy See. He did, however, voice the hope that relations between the two sides continue to improve.

A mixed Vatican-Polish commission has been at work for eight years studying relations between the two sides. The Vatican team is headed by Nuncio Luigi Poggi, an expert in East European affairs who met with the Polish Government delegation in Rome yesterday.

"We conveyed our government's desire to have Poggi more often in Warsaw", Lopatka said today, adding that the papal envoy replied that he would probably be going to the Polish capital in the spring because "he doesn't like our winters".

Asked to comment on Monday's riots in Gdansk, the Warsaw government leader refrained, saying that he only had fragmentary reports about what happened. "It would be imprudent to deal with certain issues", he added.

RED BRIGADES INFORMER TELLS OF LINKS WITH ISRAEL

AU150817 Rome ANSA in English 0813 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 15 -- Links between the Israeli secret service and Italy's Red Brigades urban guerrillas were described Thursday by Alfredo Buonavita, a founder of the Red Brigades who later disassociated himself, in testimony at the trial for the kidnap-murder of Aldo Moro four years ago.

According to Buonavita, the Israeli secret service repeatedly tried to offer weapons and sums of money to the Red Brigades during the seventies in exchange for an "intensification of conflicts" with law enforcement officers in Italy aimed at fomenting "insubordination and chaos" to convince the United States that Israel, rather than Italy, could be its "privileged partner in the Mediterranean".

The former Red Brigades chief said he learned of Israeli interest in the urban guerrilla group in 1974 from Mara Cagol, wife and comrade in arms of Brigades leader Renato Curcio, who was killed in a shootout with police a few years later. According to Buonavita's account, the Israeli secret services' overtures were turned down, despite their "helpful" tips.

In this light, the witness told how he was entrusted with carrying out the murder of a police informer who was living in Germany. The operation failed for technical reasons but he said Israeli agents had supplied the information indicating where the informer could be found "to try to convince us".

PLANNED EXPENDITURES ON SOUTHERN PORTS CUT

AU140914 Rome ANSA in English 0842 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 14 -- The Rome government has announced plans to cut expenditures on port facilities in southern Italy down to size after realizing that a colossal sum had been allocated for extending those facilities way beyond projected shipping traffic requirements.

Budget Minister Giorgio la Malfa said that the planned investment of fourteen billion dollars was way out of proportion with respect to the relatively modest hike in traffic expected in the south for the coming years.

A Budget Ministry inspection, La Malfa disclosed, revealed a "total absence of planning" in Italian port development. He blamed the failing on what he charged was a lack of coordination between southern development planners, the Public Works Ministry and regional authorities.

The investments that have been requested, the budget minister asserted, would enable the ports of the south to almost quadruple their shipping capacity from the present 56 million tons a year to 225 million. The most optimistic forecasts, however indicate that shipping traffic in the south might, at the most, double in volume by the year 1990.

The government's economic planning panel has received port expansion plans that would make the ports in the south twice as big as the whole national network now stands.

Announcing drastic cuts for the sake, he said, of preventing public funds from being wasted, La Malfa took pains to stress that "it was not a matter of pinching funds from southern development". The aim, he added, is to make sure that "the funds are channeled into investments that are more productive in terms of employment and development in the very same southern regions".

TEJERO MOLINA WINS RIGHT TO RUN FOR OFFICE

LD141702 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] We now turn to Lieutenant Colonel Tejero's presence at the head of the electoral lists of the recently-created Solidaridad Espanola: On the eve of the elections, Tejero is now officially a candidate. The 3rd Court of Administrative Law of the Madrid Provincial Court issued a judgment at midday today stating that Lieutenant Colonel Tejero Molina is under no kind of legal status that would prevent him from transferring to a status of retirement from the Civil Guard. It therefore declares that the case of ineligibility does not exist. According to an official note issued by the Press Office of the General Council of the Judiciary, the verdict only examines whether the candidate, Tejero Molina, as a member of the armed forces, holds an active service or retired status, the latter having been requested by the interested party and refused.

The full text of the official note is as follows:

The 3rd Court of Administrative Law of the Madrid Provincial Court today issued a judgment by which it considers the appeal submitted by Solidaridad Espanola, a party registered at the Ministry of Interior, against the decision by the Madrid Provincial Electoral Board to exclude Antonio Tejero Molina as a candidate to congress for the said party. The Electoral Board has not questioned, nor has the Ministry of Justice doubted, that Antonio Tejero Molina enjoys full political rights in his status of a person convicted and sentenced by the Supreme Council of Military Justice, as the sentence has not been made final and is the subject of an appeal to the Supreme Court. The verdict only examines whether the said candidate, as a member of the armed forces, holds active service or retired status, the latter having been requested by the interested party and refused. Considering that transfer to said status is a strictly regulated matter and that there is no legal condition which would prevent the interested party from transferring to a retired status, the court declares that the case of ineligibility put by the Electoral Board does not exist.

SUAREZ' CLOSING SPEECH TO CDS CONGRESS REPORTED

PM131353 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 4 Oct 82 p 16

[Fernando Jauregui report]

[Excerpt] "Perhaps it is advisable to point out that the use of arms and personnel in the armed forces is not allowed simply by virtue of having studied for a military career but stems from a civil power which emanates from the people." This was one of the several sentences with which a rapturously acclaimed Adolfo Suarez closed the constituent congress of his party -- the Democratic and Social Center [CDS] -- yesterday evening before about 1,000 people, counting delegates and guests. Under current Spanish political circumstances, the constant defense of the primacy of the civil power over military power had a particular impact on the audience.

"The democratic state cannot be tolerant of those who gravely attack the supreme value of national coexistence. It cannot be tolerant of those who, under the pretext of alleged political ideals, murder and kidnap servants of order and freedom and peaceful citizens, or of those who, illegitimately arrogating for themselves the representation of an essential institution such as the armed forces, which was created to defend the fatherland and the Constitution, attack the Spanish people's sovereignty and the supremacy of the civil power which embodies it," said Suarez, who was elected CDS chairman with no vote against and with four blank votes.

In his speech closing a congress which proved peaceful and scarcely argumentative, based essentially on support for him personally, Suarez avoided any reference to his political opponents and, as expected, proposed a state pact among the parliamentary forces to guarantee the democratic system's stability, an appropriate response to the economic dilemma and Spain's coherent and respected presence in the world. But at a subsequent press conference he said that "although other parties may proclaim very similar aims," the Union of the Democratic Center guarantees neither reformism nor progressiveness, which are the CDS' hallmark, and therefore a postelection union of the two forces will be impossible." [quote marks as published]

Democracy Threatened

With an impressive visual and musical accompaniment, which at times was reminiscent of a de luxe discotheque, those present chorused the party anthem and expressed with their acclamations their absolute loyalty to the CDS leader. Suarez dwelt on his idea of "reformist progressiveness," stressing that, as far as he is concerned, the word "reform" does not mean "something must change so that all will remain the same." "Democracy in Spain," he said, "is gravely threatened by the same interests which opposed it and which are now seeking to use it as a means to maintain situations of monopoly and injustice which the Constitution itself and reality itself make unacceptable." He referred to the need for "each to perform his duty and for social, economic and even institutional groups to take responsibility solely for the tasks which concern them, and not to aim at becoming centers for making political decisions which are not theirs to make and which we will not allow them."

He criticized abstentionist attitudes -- "continuism will soon lead us to an irretrievable situation" -- although he acknowledged that "the Spanish people cannot be asked to tighten their belts indefinitely, without hopes of improvement." "The Spanish people will surmount the crisis, and they will achieve this not with analgesics which soothe for a moment but with imagination and everybody's work." He concluded by asserting once more the CDS' commitment to the governability of the state, "to give Spanish life stability and to contribute to harmony."

At a press conference following the congress, Suarez denied receiving any kind of pressure to withdraw, and categorically denied the rumors suggesting his possible withdrawal from the election. He said that the armed forces will respect "without the slightest doubt" the election's outcome, and emphasized that the CDS will be on the side of the political forces which have similar aims, referring obviously to the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party, although "we are prepared to facilitate governability, not to sell our support."

Suarez denied that the CDS is a kind of Spanish-style Mexican Institutional Revolutionary Party: "The state pact which we advocate, along the same lines, for instance, as the Moncloa agreements, represents a historic blueprint which will be headed by the party which wins the election, and it will do well to capitalize on it." Concerning possible international alignments, he said that these are in crisis: "We are not seeking those we resemble; only how to resolve, every instant, Spain's problems."

ETA CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR RECENT ATTACKS

[Excerpts] Early this morning a quite powerful device exploded at the Banco Hispanoamericano's branch in Irun, Guipuzcoa. No one was hurt in the blast but there was extensive damage to the building.

In a telephone call to the EGIN daily newspaper ETA-Militar has claimed responsibility for yesterday's attack in the Vizacaya town of Marquina on a Civil Guard convoy in which two guards were wounded. ETA-Militar also claimed responsibility for the attack in Santurce on 8 October in which a Civil Guard was seriously wounded and for the attack last Saturday in Behobia in which a retired Civil Guard captain was killed. The terrorist organization said that it will continue its actions during the election campaign.

THOUSANDS PROTEST ECONOMIC AUSTERITY PROPOSALS

NC141650 Paris AFP in English 1549 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Copenhagen, Oct 14 (AFP) -- Thousands of workers, students and unemployed demonstrated in Denmark's major cities today to protest the government's economic austerity proposals. Some 100,000 people assembled in front of the parliament building in Copenhagen, police said. An estimated 100,000 public employees held an anti-government demonstration there yesterday.

Prime Minister Poul Schluter's month-old four-party coalition risks being toppled in 100 days if a parliamentary majority votes down its economic program, which includes a wage and price freeze, abolition of inflation index-linked wage regulation, and cuts in welfare benefits and services.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE ON SWEDISH DEVALUATION

PM140919 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 9 Oct 82 p 6

[Editorial: "The Swedish Krona"]

[Excerpts] The devaluation of the Swedish krona follows in the wake of devaluations of the Norwegian krone and the Finnish markka. The Swedish decision is by no means a surprise, since it has been expected for a while in connection with the government changeover there. However, a devaluation of 16 percent is somewhat more than most people had been expecting.

In reality, Sweden's economic problems are a great deal more massive than they seem at first sight -- from Sweden's unemployment figures for instance. For many years, economic trends in Sweden have been cosmeticized by the effects of a comprehensive system of public support, and on the whole, production and employment in Swedish industry have been moving for a lengthy period in what is a worrying direction in the international context.

In itself, the Swedish devaluation will improve Swedish exporting industry's competitiveness. This could create difficulties for a number of Danish companies, since these will find it harder to compete on the Swedish market, which is one of the most important for Danish industrial products. However, there is no reason to assume that the Danish Government will follow the Swedes along the road of devaluation.

GOVERNMENT PARTIES APPROVE 13 OCT 'COMPROMISE'

LD141700 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] The government parties today approved the compromise settlement achieved yesterday between the Social Democrats and People's Democrats. The Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Politburo this morning approved the compromise agreed between Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa and the representatives of the SKP and the Finnish People's Democratic League [SKDL] after a ballot. The voting was 4-3. According to a Politburo statement, it holds the view that the compromise on the procedure will create prerequisites for a continuation of the present left-center government cooperation. The negative effects of the devaluation package for the workers, especially for families with children, are great. For this reason, the SKP cannot accept the view of the majority in the government or contribute in the Diet to decisions in accordance with the package, the statement approved by the Politburo reads.

Yesterday's government compromise is presently being discussed by the SKDL League Board and is expected to be approved by the Board after a vote. The situation will be examined by the People's Democrat Diet group in the afternoon.

The Executive Committee of the Social Democratic Party [SDP] today expressed its satisfaction with the fact that it is possible to overcome the government crisis in such a way that no government party will vote against the economic decisions made in the Diet. In its statement, the Executive Committee said that the continuation of government cooperation is of primary importance from the point of view of the economic measures connected with the devaluation and stabilization talks. Immediately after the devaluation decision, the SDP began preparing measures aimed at lessening the negative effects of the devaluation, especially with regard to families with children and others with low incomes, the statement says.

The Executive Committees of the Center Party and the Swedish People's Party [RKP] held their own meetings about the government situation today, but did not issue any statements on the matter. It was noted by the Center party that a statement is not necessary since the government crisis was resolved yesterday. Within the RKP the settlement has, however, aroused irritation. According to party Secretary Peter Stenlund, the RKP is concerned over the fact that the parliamentary rules have not been observed in a truly orthodox manner. The cause of the irritation in the RKP is the fact that the People's Democrats will be allowed to abstain from voting in the Diet in the debate on the economic package connected with the devaluation without any consequences for the government.

FOREIGN MINISTER POSTPONES VISIT TO ISRAEL

NC141448 Paris AFP in English 1434 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Oslo, Oct 14 (AFP) -- Norwegian Foreign Minister Mr Svenn Stray has postponed an official visit to Israel, originally planned for next month, it was officially announced here today.

Observers here said the visit had been postponed because of the recent massacres of Palestinians in Beirut.

S. STRAY VIEWS NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING

PM141537 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 8 Oct 82 p 20

[Interview with Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray by Per Egil Hegge: "Unwise To Force an Agreement Which Does Not Exist"]

[Excerpt] "The dominant tone of the NATO foreign ministers' informal meeting in Canada last weekend was the strong desire to demonstrate that the alliance is standing together, and that we are aware that this coherence is of vital importance," Foreign Minister Svenn Stray said in an interview with AFTENPOSTEN. He said that recently the disagreements over the Soviet gas pipeline has destroyed this picture. The matter was mentioned but not discussed at the meeting in Quebec. In the foreign minister's view, the atmosphere there was a clear expression of the fact that everyone took the view that this unfortunate business is without importance for coherence and agreement on vital questions.

"There was great interest in the idea that there should be discussion of a number of problems in expert groups which do not directly affect NATO's military position so that there would be more reliable material for the evaluation of the allies' joint interests when decisions have to be made. Many were anxious that the free trade system which has grown up since the war could find itself under pressure in a period of recession. The idea of these expert groups won broad support -- from France, too, which has traditionally taken the view that NATO should not discuss things which are the province of other bodies. However, France did strongly stress that a decision should not be made on this. But the Canada meeting was not one for making decisions and had no agenda."

[Question] In a couple of speeches recently, you have said that NATO should not strive for agreement on matters which are not of vital importance, but should content itself with a lower level of ambition. What view do the other NATO nations take of this?

[Answer] Attempts to force agreement on questions where there is no agreement seldom lead to good results.

[Question] But does this mean that a beginning will now be made to categorize issues to decide whether they are vital or not?

[Answer] This should be done more informally. My idea is based on the notion that NATO should discuss as many questions as possible. But on issues which do not affect defense and security policy directly, we should not try to force agreement when the circumstances are not right for this. It would be better to note that differing views exist. If you do try to force agreement, you will end up with conflict. This could give misleading signals both to the general public and to the Eastern bloc in particular. I find it easy to imagine that the conflict surrounding the pipeline could affect the Soviet Union's attitude toward the Geneva negotiations. The Russians could think that there is disagreement about the missiles when there is a disagreement about the pipeline. What I have tried to say to the East European foreign ministers I have met is this: Do not bet on being able to divide Europe and the United States, for then you would be doomed to fail.

[Question] It would seem reasonable to ask you about the latest moves by the Norwegian Labor Party on the missile question.

[Answer] It is most important that doubts are not created about the following: If there are no results from the Geneva talks, the new missiles will be deployed, no matter how regrettable we think this is. Statements from the Labor Party could also indicate that they are based on a misunderstanding that Norway, by allocating funds for preparatory work for the missiles as part of the NATO infrastructure program, is interfering in the internal affairs of Belgium and the Netherlands -- that is, the question whether the missiles should be deployed on their territory. This is something which Norway, which does not want nuclear arms, must not do. The Belgians and Dutch must reach their own decisions. If they say 'No,' the missiles will be deployed elsewhere.

[Question] But could not the 49 million kroner have been "buried" in the defense budget?

[Answer] It is a somewhat remarkable idea that we should try to keep hidden the fact that we are involved in this. It would also conflict with the present government's basic view that nothing should be kept secret for political reasons, but only when security considerations require it.

[Question] As far as the lower level of ambition is concerned -- is not the gas pipeline so important that it cannot be seen as a second-class problem?

[Answer] It is not that easy to answer 'Yes' or 'No' to that. The type of problem the pipeline represents has an important aspect which affects the alliance's security -- the fact that energy dependence on the Eastern bloc would be dangerous. But I believe that the question was tackled wrongly by the United States. For when the Americans reacted, the pipeline was contractually a fait accompli. It is also clear that the pipeline will not lead to any real dependence on the Soviet Union. The Americans should therefore have said: "Is it wise to travel further along this road?" Then the reactions in Europe would have been different. I also have the impression that there are strongly divided opinions in the United States on whether the country acted particularly wisely here. But those who were behind the U.S. actions are probably those who are today finding it most difficult to accept the opposite view.

[Question] Would it be exaggerating the disagreement to say that the pipeline is to be taken as an expression of different views of how the relationship with the Soviet Union should be?

[Answer] In the United States there is a greater emotional interest in reacting to the Soviet Union by implementing measures because of Poland or Afghanistan. The European nations are more aware that no matter how much you may dislike Soviet behavior, you cannot alter it through economic sanctions.

MINISTER WARNS AGAINST U.S.-EEC 'FOOD TRADE WAR'

PM121001 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 12 Oct 82 p 4

[Dispatch by agricultural correspondent Godfrey Brown: "American-EEC Food Dumping Feud 'Danger to All' Says Walker"]

[Text] Copenhagen [no date as received] -- For America and the Common Market to compete to dump their food surpluses on to world markets would be absurd, irresponsible and damaging, Mr Walker, agriculture minister, said in Copenhagen yesterday.

He was commenting on reports that Mr John Block, the American agriculture secretary, is seeking President Reagan's backing to introduce a subsidy programme for selected American agricultural exports in retaliation against the Common Market's subsidised food exports.

And Mr Paul Dalsager, EEC commissioner for agriculture, spoke of serious consequences if the Americans undercut the world market price for dairy products, where the EEC had marketing agreements with New Zealand.

World prices would fall, and this would increase the cost to the EEC budget. The cost of supporting the dairy sector was already considerable, and one of the biggest budget items.

But he maintained that in cereals, the Common Market was selling grain to countries like the Soviet Union, China and North Africa, at higher prices than the Americans.

Both men were speaking after an informal meeting of Common Market agriculture ministers in Copenhagen.

Mr Walker said he thought it was important for the European Community and the United States to come to an agreement on trading policies.

Asked about the impact on the Common Market budget of a food trade war with America, Mr Walker said that if the Americans got into the game of competing with the Europeans in dumping foods around the world, Europe could afford it more than they.

"The American farm subsidy at present is of gigantic proportions," he said. Whereas Europe had some social excuse because of the large numbers of small farmers on low incomes who had to be supported through subsidies, the American subsidies went to very big farmers.

"If they want to go in for a world dumping competition it would be very bad for the United States and for America's budget -- Mr Reagan is very keen on his budget," Mr Walker observed.

Such a position would be absurd. "We are both free democracies in a world where free democracies are not all that common and we need to have a sensible, rational policy together and not against each other," Mr Walker said.

He said earlier that it was totally untrue for the Americans to argue that the Community was outrageously subsidising farm exports and must stop. "If you look at the American pattern of supporting agriculture, they do things on a very similar scale," he said.

It must be in the interest of the Western world to recognise that between now and the end of the century it was likely the world was going to want more food. The West was capable of producing more food and must organise its world distribution to try and meet those demands.

"Some of those demands will be paid for commercially, and some will be in the form of food aid programmes," he said.

"But to go in for disagreement and irresponsible dumping of food against each other would be bad for the economies of the Western world and bad for the rational system of food distribution throughout the world."

He hoped there would be objective talks between the United States and the Community on these matters, and by objective he meant taking clear account of the reality of the American scene as well as the reality of the European scene.

EDITORIAL URGES 'OPEN TRADING ENVIRONMENT'

PM120941 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 12 Oct 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Back to Protectionism"]

[Text] World recession is proving the kind of malarial swamp in which protectionism breeds freely. The American threat to counter Common Market subsidies to food producers in Europe is only the latest symptom of deteriorating trade relations between Europe and America. The long-standing argument over European exports of steel to America and the more recent disagreement over equipment for the Russian pipeline have already undermined the health of the trading relationship to the point where an atmosphere of deep suspicion prevails.

In these circumstances it is better to negotiate from a position of strength inside a large trading bloc like the EEC than for a relatively small country like Britain to swim amongst the sharks in the open sea. Nevertheless the government's aim should be to reduce the barriers between rival trading blocs rather than lend its support to increasing them. There are disturbing signs that protectionism is on the increase even inside the community. Cod wars and wine wars are fought, government preference for national suppliers continues and more sinister non-tariff barriers involving the creative interpretation of local standards are sometimes reported. Nor can one pretend that our own government's general attachment to free trade is unqualified. On the principle of helping some of our less competitive industries to adapt by buying them time (with consumers' money) the government has actively participated in negotiating a new multi-fibre arrangement and has passively supported the industry to industry agreement on Japanese penetration of the car market.

As the first ministerial meeting for nine years organised by the Secretariat of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade approaches next month, it is as well to re-state the case for as open a trading environment as possible. Restrictions on trade reduce the incentive to industry to build on its strengths and withdraw from the areas in which it is weak. Taxes on imports fuel inflation to the detriment both of consumer and producer. A tax on imports, it has been said, is a tax on exports after the effect on wage claims of higher import prices is taken into account. Import protection embalms jobs rather than creating them.

HONECKER, ENTOURAGE BEGIN 3-DAY OFFICIAL VISIT

NC141149 [Editorial Report] Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek at 0916 GMT on 14 October broadcasts live from Larnaca International Airport the arrival of GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker. Honecker is accompanied by Guenter Mittag, SED Politburo member and Central Committee secretary; Minister of Foreign Affairs Oskar Fischer; Dr Gerhard Beil, member of the Council of Ministers and state secretary in the Foreign Trade Ministry; and Guenter Sieber, head of the International Relations Department of the SED Central Committee. The announcer says that Honecker is paying a 3-day official visit to Cyrpus at the invitation of President Kiprianou, who visited the GDR in June 1980.

The announcer states that the plane carrying the GDR State Council chairman touched down at 0921 GMT. At 0922 GMT President Ciprianou, House of Representatives President Ladhas, Minister of Foreign Affairs Rolandhis, and the Cypriot ambassador in Berlin and the GDR ambassador in Nicosia walk toward the plane. The announcer states that GDR State Council Chairman Honecker and his accompanying entourage disembark from the plane and are welcomed by President Kiprianou and other Cypriot officials. A small girl hands the visitors a bouquet of flowers.

At 0932 GMT the national anthems of both countries are played and the announcer states that the Cypriot officials are lined up to greet the GDR State Council chairman. Kiprianou and Honecker then inspect a guard of honor.

The announcer says that AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou, Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis and other party leaders, cabinet members, dean of the diplomatic corps Soviet Ambassador Astavin, house members, the National Guard, the police chiefs and other officials are among those at the airport to greet Honecker. The announcer says that the GDR leader also meets members of the GDR Embassy and East German children who are receiving treatment at Kyperounda Hospital. The live relay ends at 0941 GMT.

Begins Official Contacts

NC141757 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State and SED Central Committee secretary general, who is on a 3-day official visit to Cyprus, will shortly begin official talks with President Kiprianou. The talks, which will be continued and will end on Saturday, will deal with the Cyprus problem, bilateral relations and the international situation. Mr Honecker and Mr Kiprianou have already had a private meeting and the president of the republic is now decorating the GDR State Council chairman with the Grand Necklace of Makarios III.

At 1600 Mr Honecker received the heads of diplomatic missions at the presidential mansion. He then received the senior adviser of the UN peace force, Mr Holge, and then Peace Force Commander General Greindl. Present at the meetings were the members of Mr Honecker's entourage.

Tonight Chairman Honecker will attend an official dinner given in his honor by the president of the republic.

Receives Makarios Necklace

NC142050 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] During a special ceremony at the presidential mansion this afternoon, President Kiprianou awarded the Necklace of Makarios III, which is the highest decoration of the Republic of Cyprus, to Mr Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR State Council and secretary general of the SED Central Committee.

Speaking during the ceremony, President Kiprianou said the following:

[Begin Kiprianou recording in Greek followed by German translation -- translated from Greek] Mr President: I would like to again express the joy of all of us here in Cyprus -- of the people, the government and myself personally -- at your presence here. This is proof of your great interest in Cyprus and in the Cypriot people, who are struggling for their freedom. I firmly believe that your visit will contribute still further to strengthening the ties of friendship and cooperation between our two countries. As a proof of appreciation for your great interest in Cyprus, for your efforts for detente and peace in the world and for your consistent support of the Cypriot people, who are struggling for their freedom, I award to you the highest decoration of the Republic of Cyprus, the Necklace of Makarios III. [applause] [end recording]

In his reply, Mr Honecker said:

[Begin Honecker recording in German followed by Greek translation -- translated from Greek] Mr President: I am deeply moved by the award of this highest decoration of the Republic of Cyprus. I accept it, bearing in mind that with this our people are being honored, because they have always considered it their great duty to support other peoples in their struggles for sovereignty and independence. Thus, the award of this decoration will be accepted by our people as an expression of the close, friendly ties which link our two peoples. Allow me, Mr President, to thank you very much for the award of the decoration which bears the name of that internationally renowned statesman and first president of the Republic of Cyprus. As I have already said, it is a particular honor for me, a highest honor, to receive it from you, Mr President, because you are continuing Makarios' work to steadily defend your people's national interests and to struggle decisively for peace, sovereignty and the independence of your country, without outside intervention. Bearing in mind particularly the present international situation, the friendly relations, full of mutual confidence, and the relations of peaceful coexistence as they exist between our two states, (?all this) constitutes a positive factor for political stability, particularly in this region. In this connection, allow me to observe that I am certain the talks which we will have will promote joint action for peace and detente.

As I have already said, the honor you are giving me is a deep symbol of the friendship between our two peoples, and it is also an honor for (?the working people) of the German People's Republic, who consider this decoration an honor and obligation to support the courageous Cypriot people in their struggle for the complete restoration of independence, sovereignty [words indistinct] [applause] [end recording]

Present at the ceremony were the members of the entourage of the GDR president, the Cypriot ministers of foreign affairs, commerce and to the president, members of the diplomatic corps and other officials.

Meets With Kiprianou

NC142121 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR State Council and secretary general of the SED Central Committee, who is on an official visit to Cyprus, and President Kiprianou held their first round of talks this afternoon, lasting about 2 hours. The talks covered the Cyprus issue, bilateral relations and international issues. The two presidents had a private meeting at first, and were later joined, from the German side, by Guenter Mittag, SED Politburo member and Central Committee secretary; Foreign Affairs Minister Oskar Fischer; Gerhard Beil, member of the Council of Ministers and State Secretary in the Foreign Trade Ministry; Guenter Sieber, head of the International Relations Department of the SED Central Committee, and GDR Ambassador in Nicosia Schurath. The talks were attended from the Cypriot side by Foreign Affairs Minister Rolandhis; Minister to the President Mikhailidhis; Commerce Minister Andreou; Under Secretary to the President Stavrou; Cypriot Ambassador to the GDR Angelidhis; and by other officials.

The talks will be concluded on Saturday and a joint communique will be released.

Awarded Commemorative Plaque

[Text] Chairman of the GDR State Council Erich Honecker called on Mr Dhimitriadhis, chairman of the Nicosia Municipal Committee at the municipal building this evening. Mr Dhimitriadhis introduced Honecker to the members of the Nicosia Municipal Committee and then, during a special ceremony, awarded him a commemorative plaque. Present at the ceremony were Foreign Affairs Minister Rolandhis, Minister to the President Mikhailidhis, Commerce Minister Andreou, Under Secretary to the President Stavrou, Cypriot Ambassador in Berlin Angelidhis, and the members of the GDR State Council chairman's entourage. Honecker expressed thanks for the honor and said that he considers it symbolic of the traditional Cypriot hospitality.

Reaffirms Support for Struggle

[Excerpt] Mr Honecker, chairman of the GDR State Council, who is leading a major delegation on a 3-day official visit to Cyprus, stressed that the Cyprus problem must become the focal point of the world's conscience.

Speaking during his first meeting with President Kiprianou at the presidential mansion yesterday, Mr Honecker also said that we cannot talk about peace if international problems -- including the Cyprus problem -- are not solved.

Mr Honecker reaffirmed his country's support for the Cypriot people's struggle for an independent, sovereign, nonaligned and demilitarized country.

President Kiprianou referred extensively to the Cyprus problem, stressing that this is a question of an occupation which has been going on for 8 years.

Mr Kiprianou stressed the need for an international drive undertaken in a more intensive way so that the Cyrpus problem may be resolved in accordance with the UN resolutions. He called upon international society to strongly pressure Turkey to abandon its expansionist designs against Cyprus and repeated the proposal which he made at the UN General Assembly that the question of implementing the UN resolutions be examined by the United Nations.

President Kiprianou declared full devotion to the Final Act of the Helsinki conference and expressed the hope that the Madrid conference would be successful.

Kiprianou and Honecker spoke in favor of disarmament, detente and reducing arms levels.

During the discussion on bilateral questions, the two leaders expressed the desire for further strengthening the good relations between the two countries.

I SIMERINI VIEWS GREEK PARTIES' POLITICS

NC150903 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 15 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] According to reports received by I SIMERINI from Athens, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou is seriously concerned over the fact that the AKEL-Democratic Party [DIKO] alliance is being used by some Greek forces which are moving against him.

According to the same reports, the AKEL-DIKO alliance appears to be utilized mainly by the pro-Soviet Communist Party of Greece [KKE] (Exterior), which is cooperating closely with the AKEL leaders and which sometimes dictates the policy on Greek affairs to them.

We are informed specifically that the violent AKEL attack on Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, who was described as a tool of both imperialism and Denktas, was dictated by the KKE (Exterior) leader, Mr Florakis himself.

According to Athens reports, the main reason Mr Papandreou has failed to enforce his stance during his recent dispute with the AKEL-DIKO alliance is due to the roles played by the KKE (Exterior) and Moscow.

In the meantime, we are informed that there has been some criticism from EDEK leaders in connection with the attitude of PASOK and Papandreou toward the abusive attacks by the AKEL leaders. The EDEK leaders have described the PASOK-Papandreou attitude as "soft."

However, EDEK has secured the backing of PASOK as a party -- but not of the PASOK government -- although the EDEK leadership expected that this backing would be more decisive, due to the fact that EDEK leader Lissaridhis will be running for the office of president of the republic.

Although both the alliance and EDEK have close connections with Athens quarters — with which they have identified themselves -- recent developments have proved that the Democratic Rally does not have such connections.

ATHENS SPOKESMAN CITED ON DENKTAS' STATEMENT

NC150845 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0800 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] The government spokesman in Athens has made the following statement:

Repositioning the Cyprus problem, the PASOK government has stressed internationally that the presence of Turkish occupation troops actually impedes the effectiveness of an intercommunal dialogue, because in this way the dialogue is not one between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities, but one between Nicosia and Ankara. The spokesman added: Our government has made a proposal: With the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Cyprus and the termination of occupation, and in order to weaken the argument that the Turkish minority would be in danger in such a case, our government proposed to undertake any additional expenses that would be involved in increasing the UN peace force -- which would be capable of preventing any Greek Cypriot action. The spokesman said that it is natural -- precisely because of the great international repercussions from the Greek Government's proposal -- that Mr Denktas would try to change world public opinion by resorting to stories about the so-called aggressive intentions that Nicosia or the Athens government have. His allegations are unworthy of a reply.

Speaking at a news conference at UN headquarters, Mr Denktas alleged that the Greek Cypriots are concentrating arms.

HURRIYET INTERVIEWS DENKTAS PRIOR TO UN VISIT

NC141256 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 10 Oct 82 pp 11 12

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia], (HURRIYET) -- We have had a special interview with Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas prior to his visit to New York on 11 October. Denktas stated that he would review with the UN secretary general what has been accomplished in the intercommunal talks so far and evaluate what could be done in the future. He added that they would dwell seriously on two issues which lend importance to this meeting with the UN secretary general: One is the continually increasing militant statements of the Greek Cypriots, the second is the Greek Cypriot military parade on 1 October, which confirms their militancy. Denktas made this disclosure to HURRIYET: "A short while ago, Greek Cypriot Interior Minister Veniamin stated that they were continuing the intercommunal talks in order to gain time to complete their preparations.

"As a continuation of the same statement, he felt the need to stress that they also possess arms which they did not display on 1 October. That is, they obviously need time to complete their preparations for slaughtering us. This is clearly taking the Turkish Cypriot community for fools.

"This attitude lacks the good will which is needed in the search for peace."

Stressing that these acts and behavior on the part of the Greek Cypriots are not developments that manifest the desire to establish a joint state, head of state Denktas stated that the United Nations bore great responsibility. Drawing serious attention to the arming of the Greek Cypriots, Denktas said: "The United Nations bears great responsibility. While we are exerting efforts to secure peace and while we, as a sign of good will, are trying to keep Turkish peace forces at the minimum, the Greek Cypriots have embarked on an armament race. They are building an airfield in the Paphos district which, we are sure, they will use for military purposes.

"It is the duty of the United Nations to counter such perilous developments. Unless this is done, it will be incumbent on us to adopt defense measures against developments which will endanger our people and land. We are watching very closely all aspects of the situation. The conflagration should be prevented. Precautions should and will be taken to prevent the violation of peace."

Denktas then emphasized that the way the Cyprus question is presented by the Greeks and the Greek Cypriots is utterly wrong and fallacious. He added: "The Cyprus issue is not confined to certain rights which Greece will grant to the Turkish Cypriot community on the island. It is an issue which requires the reestablishment of a republic based on partnership, which was destroyed in 1963. Turkey has not occupied Cyprus. Turkey has eradicated Greek occupation on the island. The Cyprus question will be resolved within the framework of these facts."

CAGATAY RETURNS FROM 'CONSTRUCTIVE' ANKARA VISIT

TA141439 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Excerpt] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has returned to the federated state after talks in Ankara with the Turkish Government on the problems of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Speaking at a news conference in Ankara this morning before his departure, Mr Cagatay described his talks as very constructive and said that they had dealt with the political, economic, financial and transportation problems of the Turkish Cypriot community. He repeated that the efforts of the Turkish Cypriot side for a just and peaceful settlement of the Cyprus problem had not yielded any results because of Greek Cypriot intransigence. The prime minister said: The recent display of Greek arms secretly shipped to the south (?gave) the necessary warning about the danger of the armament that had been given to the Greek Cypriot side through the United Nations.

In reply to a question on the Greek Cypriot proposal for a withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus and for increasing the number of the UN troops on the island, Mr Cagatay said that the Turkish Cypriot side had not received such a proposal. [Words indistinct] in favor of the settlement of the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal talks and the Turkish troops would stay in Cyprus until the future of the federated state is fully guaranteed.

Referring to reports on the presence of Armenian terrorists who (?settled) in Cyprus, the prime minister said that the situation is being watched very carefully. He stated that part of the claims about the Armenians could not be proven. However, other claims had come from reliable sources (?which prompted) the Turkish Cypriot side to make the necessary investigations. The claims that some militants of the Armenian terrorist organization, ASALA, settled in Cyprus during the withdrawal of PLO guerrillas from Beirut had some credibility. Consequently, the United Nations authorities had been warned and the attention of the Greek Cypriot side had been drawn to this. If the situation becomes dangerous, he said, all the necessary measures will be taken.

HURRIYET CITES VISITING CAGATAY ON ARMS, ASALA

NC150736 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 12 Oct 82 pp 1, 10

[Bulent Erandac report]

[Text] Ankara, (HURRIYET) -- Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said: "The Greek Cypriots are engaged in arming themselves in an unnecessary and meaningless manner in Cyprus, an island so close to Turkey. I hope that when this arming reaches dangerous dimensions, Turkey will not hesitate to take the necessary measures."

Disclosing his views on various issues to HURRIYET, Cagatay said: "This danger is not confined to the TFSC alone. When that point is reached, the same danger will affect Turkey, as well. When it becomes imperative to adopt precautions, Turkey will have to act in conjunction with the TFSC."

The TFSC prime minister also stated that the Greek Cypriots continue to obtain arms from Greece as well as from other countries and that the balance of power has been upset. He added: "If this is allowed to continue, it is possible that we would take certain precautionary measures, too. The Greek Cypriots paraded their arms on 1 October. It is not difficult to realize from what countries the arms are obtained once you look at their trademark. It is impossible for Turkey to permit the Greek Cypriots to be armed to such an extent."

Cagatay said emphatically that it was high time representations were made to the countries which sell arms to the Greek Cypriots.

Prime Minister Cagatay also referred to the Armenian militants who have established themselves in the Greek Cypriot sector, and said: "The southern part of the island, which is under the control of the Greek Cypriots, has become the center of the Armenian terrorist organization known as the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia (ASALA). We have ascertained that following the PLO's departure from Beirut, ASALA militants have been placed in certain camps in southern Cyprus. The Greek Cypriot administration's attention has been drawn to this. When the Armenian militants are known to have gone into action to the detriment of either the Turkish Cypriot community or Turkey, everything possible will be done to counter the activities of ASALA or other organizations."

Stating that the Greek Cypriots have been trying to distort facts concerning the existence and activities of the Armenian militants, Cagatay added: "It has been observed that the Greek Cypriots were badly disturbed by the reaction shown by Turkey and the Turkish Cypriots. We are watching the matter closely. Whenever a harmful situation arises, it will be eliminated by implementing all of the necessary measures."

TFSC Prime Minister Cagatay has begun his official contacts in Ankara. Cagatay met first with Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and then State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara.

It has been reported that the talks were centered on implementing the 1983 budget and on other economic matters.

News Conference, Departure

TA141151 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] The prime minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Mustafa Cagatay, has said that his contacts in Ankara have been concluded positively within the framework of traditional solidarity and cooperation. Cagatay said that Turkey has undertaken to finance an infrastructure worth over 4 billion lira in the federated state during the 1983 fiscal year.

At a news conference in Ankara before his departure, Cagatay said that he exchanged views on political, economic and financial issues with Turkish officials. Noting that the federated state aims at being self-sufficient in the economic field, Cagatay added that this cannot be realized without the contribution of the motherland. Cagatay said that decisions were made at the talks to establish a central bank and a development bank in the federated state, and to reorganize the public economic establishments. Noting that the transporation issue was also discussed in a bid to develop agriculture and tourism, Cagatay added that the pertinent establishments will discuss the issue again in the comming days.

Cagatay said that efforts aimed at finding a just and peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem are continuing, and that the comprehensive and acceptable Turkish Cypriot proposals are being accepted more and more by other countries. Cagatay concluded by saying that the Greek Cypriot side should see these realities and should renounce its intransigent attitude. Cagatay later left Ankara.

At Esenboga Airport, Cagatay was seen off by Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister and Cyprus Coordination Council member Seyyat Baykara and other officials. Turkish Cypriot Minister of Economy and Finance Salih Cosar and Minister of Public Works and Communications Mehmet Bayram left for Nicosia with Cagatay.

TURKISH, YUGOSLAV SECURITY OFFICIALS END TALKS

TA141648 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] It has been announced that Yugoslavia will facilitate procedures for Turkish citizens transiting the country and that it will attempt to solve their problems. These views were expressed in a joint communique issued following the 3-day meeting between the Turkish and Yugoslav security officials in Istanbul. A decision was made to effectively cooperate in the struggle against drug smuggling at the talks held between the Turkish and Yugoslav delegations, headed by Security Director General Fahri Gorgulu and by the assistant secretary of the Yugoslav Federal Secretariat for Internal Affairs, Dragutin Papovic. At the talks, views were also exchanged on the necessary measures to prevent international terrorism.

TRANSPORT PROTOCOL WITH NETHERLANDS SIGNED

TA141157 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] A Turkish-Netherlands protocol aimed at increasing highway transport has been signed in Ankara. In a statement at the signing ceremony, the deputy under secretary of the Transportation Ministry, Orhan Buldac, said that highway transport from the Netherlands to Turkey will reach 25,000 tons by the end of the year, and that transport to the Middle East countries via Turkey will reach 44,000 tons during the same period. He added that there has been a great increase in highway transportation between the two countries in recent years, but that Turkey's share in this is continuously decreasing. Noting that a unity of views has been reached on increasing Turkey's share, Buldac said that measures had been taken to encourage and strengthen the transporters.

The head of the Netherlands delegation and head of the Highway Transport Department said that the two countries share a positive approach regarding transport relations, and that the talks have been beneficial.

TCP SENDS GREETINGS TO BOLIVIAN COMMUNISTS

TA141719 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General I. Bilen to Bolivian Communist Party -- read by announcer]

[Text] Dear Comrades, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee greets you on behalf of the Turkish Communists and people.

We sincerely congratulate the Bolivian democratic forces for the great victory won following the bloody and sacrificial struggle waged for many years under the leadership of the Democratic and Popular Unity. The establishment of a constitutional order in Bolivia as a result of the active struggle of the masses against all the pressure, tyranny, torture, threats and provocations by the military dictatorship is a gain not only for your country.

The fact that the Democratic and Popular Unity has assumed power and the fact that a parliament elected by the people's vote in 1980 began to function is a development that exceeds the borders of your country. The unity of all the democratic forces within a single front in Bolivia and their courageous struggle are a great source of power and inspiration for the Turkish working class and our country's democratic forces, which are currently struggling under conditions imposed by the reactionary military dictatorship, in their struggle for peace, democracy and national independence.

Dear Comrades, we wish you new and great successes in this new phase of the struggle waged by the Bolivian people on the path to democracy, national sovereignty and social progress.

With our communist greetings, [signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 12 October 1982.

ULUSU SAYS WORKERS' RIGHTS TO BE PROTECTED

TA141301 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that even the most trivial rights of the Turkish workers employed abroad under the guarantee of laws and international agreements will not be left undefended. Ulusu asked the workers to refrain from acts which might be interpreted as renouncing these rights.

The high coordination council for the problems of workers employed abroad has met in Ankara. In an opening statement, Ulusu noted the inclination and statements of the new FRG coalition government concerning the reduction of the number of foreign workers employed in the FRG. Stating that unemployment is on the rise in the FRG and that the number of unemployed in that country is expected to reach 2 million in the near future, Ulusu said that these negative developments directly concern the Turkish workers employed in the FRG. Ulusu added that Turkey is aware of the negative economic developments in the friendly and allied FRG, but that Turkey cannot remain a spectator to the loss of Turkish workers' rights in this situation. Ulusu said that activities in connection with the workers employed abroad should be intensified, and a unity of views should be reached on the issue among the various (?units). Noting that there will be attempts to solve the problem through talks between the administrators of the two countries, Ulusu continued: Naturally, it is out of the question for our workers to renounce social rights guaranteed by the laws of the countries they reside in, and especially their retirement rights, which are to be gained soon. Therefore, we should not allow our workers, who are close to retirement and acquiring other such social rights, to panic and renounce these rights. Ulusu said that a plan will be drawn up to prevent the violation of the workers' rights, and that it will be implemented as soon as possible. Ulusu added that great duties befall all institutions of the state and especially the press on this issue. Ulusu said: Care should be taken to avoid creating an atmosphere of panic which might lead to renouncing gained rights, desperation and intimidation.

Ministers and the representatives of various related establishments are participating in the high coordination council meeting.

FORMER MINISTER'S VIEWS ON CONSTITUTION REPORTED

TA121918 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Former Minister Hasan Esat Isik has criticized the draft constitution saying that it will bring an authoritarian system. In his statement, published in various dailies, Isik briefly said: The authorities of the president have been greatly exaggerated in this draft constitution. This draft introduces an authoritarian system. We should refrain from resorting to methods employed by the Turkish sultans.

FINANCE MINISTER COMMENTS ON INTEREST RATES

TA141657 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1610 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 14 Oct (AA) -- Finance Minister Adnan Baser Kafaoglu said a comprehensive study of the Turkish banking system was being made to determine the measures to be adopted. In a statement during his recent trip to Izmir, accompanying Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, Kafaoglu told Izmir businessmen the measures to be adopted would resolve many problems raised by the businessmen concerning high interest rates. The industrial sector had been wanting, for some time, lowering of interest rates, but all of the proposals tabled by the industrialists would "diminish state input and revenues" which the current government policies rule out, he stressed.

Studies concerning banking system would be completed by the end of the year and the credit and bank interest rates could be somewhat lowered with a series of amendments, he added.

ECEVIT'S PRESENT JAIL TERM REDUCED BY COURT

TA141618 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1605 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 14 Oct (AA) -- The Military Court of Appeals decided Thursday the 54 days Bulent Ecevit, president of the now-defunct People's Republican Party, spent in detention earlier this year must be deducted from his present jail term because he was acquitted Tuesday of charges of lowering Turkey's image abroad under which he had served detention.

Ecevit began August 10 his present sentence of 3 months and 27 days for violating Decree No 52 of the National Security Council banning former politicians from making political statements. The actual date of his release will be determined by the martial law prosecutor.

DIYARBAKIR AIRPORT TO REOPEN FOR TRAFFIC 15 OCT

TA141445 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1420 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Diyarbakir, 14 Oct (AA) -- It has been reported that the Diyarbakir Airport will reopen to traffic tomorrow.

According to information obtained from Diyarbakir Governor Erdogan Sahinoglu, the repair and maintenance work that started at the Diyarbakir Airport on 25 September has been concluded.

Sahinoglu said that with the repair work completed at the airport and with the new runways that are ready to resume traffic, flights that were transferred to Batman since 28 September will revert to Diyarbakir as of Friday.

PRESIDENT EANES RETURNS FROM VISIT TO AUSTRIA

LD142318 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The president of the republic returned from Austria a short while ago. The aircraft carrying Ramalho Eanes back to Portugal landed at Oporto's Pedreas Rubras Airport. Here is a report from our Oporto newsroom:

The president of the republic was welcomed by Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, General Garcia dos Santos, Major Souse e Castro, General Melo Egidio and other distinguished public figures. After reviewing the honor guard, the president of the republic addressed the Portuguese people:

[Begin recording] The objectives of my state visit to Austria have been achieved. I believe that the cordial relations between the two countries and the long-standing friendship between the Austrian and Portuguese peoples were very evident during my visit.

During this visit we signed a cultural agreement which will enable us to consolidate activities which are already being carried out in the framework of cooperation between the two countries and to widen such activities to other sectors.

I invited President Kirchshlaeger to visit Portugal and the invitation was accepted. Thank you. [end recording]

After this statement at the airport, the president of the republic proceeded to the Bolsa Palace where the congress of the Business Council of Northern Portugal is being held.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT BACKS PALESTINIAN STATE

NC141559 Paris AFP in English 1320 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Strasbourg, France, Oct 15 (AFP) -- The European Parliament called today for the first time for the creation of a Palestinian state. Expressing "solidarity with the Palestinian people in their trials," it adopted a resolution tabled by the Socialist, Conservative and Liberal groups, as well as the Christian Democrats and the Italian and Greek Communists.

The assembly noted that the "odious massacres" at Beirut's Sabra and Shatila Palestinian camps took place at the time when the Israeli army was in Beirut with the stated aim of maintaining order.

The parliament demanded the immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon which were not there by express agreement of the Lebanese Government.

It said an overall solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict meant "political recognition of all the states in the region, a country for the Palestinian people and the restoration of the Lebanese state's full sovereignty."

EEC COMMISSION FORECAST ON ECONOMY 'GRIM'

NC171054 Paris AFP in English 1019 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Brussels, Oct 17 (AFP) -- In a broadly grim forecast for the economy of the European Economic Community (EEC), the Community Commission has estimated that unemployment will exceed 11 million at the end of 1982, rising to 12 million in 1983.

The economy will continue to stagnate overall and there is a danger that the 10 members could be caught in long-term economic doldrums partly because of a failure to adapt to a new business climate, the Commission has indicated in its annual 1982-83 economic report to be adopted on Wednesday.

The report said that this autumn the EEC entered the second phase of a two-stage recession, adding that the fourth year of economic recession will begin in a few months' time.

The Commission, the administrative arm of the EEC, has had to revise its forecast for 1982 because the expected upturn did not occur. The Commission now says that EEC output will increase by only 0.3 percent against an earlier forecast of two percent, and unemployment in member countries will exceed 11 million at the year-end, representing 9.4 percent of the working population.

But inflation will have slowed down more than expected to 10.5 percent against 11.8 percent last year.

The balance-of-payments deficit on current account will also have fallen to 15,000 million dollars, or 0.4 percent of gross domestic product, against 20,800 million in 1981, or 0.8 percent of GDP.

National budget deficits will remain stable overall in relation to the 1981 figure amounting to 4.9 percent of GDP.

The Commission stressed that 1982 was marked by two realignments within the European Monetary System (EMS) which reflected inadequate convergence of fundamental factors in member economies.

In 1983, activity will remain weak, with GDP growing by 1.1 percent provided there is an upturn in the second half of 1983. Another condition is that lower inflation and interest rates boost consumer spending and investment.

The Commission is also counting on a 2.2-percent upturn in world trade due to a two-percent increase in GDP in the United States.

This weak outlook, coupled with the contracting labour market and school-leavers, will increase unemployment to above the 12 million mark, or 10.3 percent of the working population, at the end of 1983.

The EEC's terms of trade should continue to improve with the balance-of-payments deficit on current account amounting to 0.3 percent of GDP, while the deficit could be overcome altogether so that a balance is achieved. West Germany and the Netherlands will continue in surplus, while other countries, including France and Italy, will remain in deficit.

Low growth means that budget deficits could worsen, although the Commission's broad forecast is that they will remain stable.

The Commission fears that the Community could enter a long period of low growth amounting almost to recession. One cause could be external upheavals such as oil price hikes and major international conflicts. Another cause might be the Community's delay in adapting its economy and its increasing difficulty in reacting to the changing economic environment.

To reduce the threat of unforeseen developments, the Commission has stressed the need to press ahead with moves toward energy independence on the basis of nuclear power and appropriate energy pricing policies.

It also urged the establishment of adequate arrangements to monitor the world banking system as Europe is one of the foundations of the banking network.

Europe has fallen badly behind in the development of new technology because of inadequate integration of the domestic market and the maintenance of protectionist structures in member states, the Commission said, adding that priority should be given to investment.

This will require a transfer of resources into real productive activity which in turn will require a restructuring of public expenditure which currently comsumes 50 percent of GDP.

On world trade, EEC members must push Japan and newly industrialized countries into adopting a trade policy which is as open as the Community's, the Commission said.

KOHL RECEIVES EUROPEAN COMMUNITY'S THORN

LD160622 Hamburg DPA in German 1690 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 15 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl received in Bonn and Friday, Gaston Thorn (Luxembourg), president of the commission of the European Community, for an exchange of views on topical political questions which lasted over 1 hour. According to the Federal Press Office, the further development of the Community and the preparation of the accession to the EC Presidency by that Federal Republic in the first half of 1983 were at the center of the talk.

Earlier, Thorn had had separate talks with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) and Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU). During the talk with Genscher, which was attended also by Food Minister Josef Ertl (FDP), problems of fishery policy were also discussed. Stoltenberg indicated to Thorn that the new Federal Government was not considering changes of the existing arrangement for the financing of the Community. Stoltenberg also explained to the EC president the difficult budget situation of the Federal Government and its financial policy concept.

JENNINGER COMMENTS ON INTRA-GERMAN RELATIONS

LD171050 Hamburg DPA in German 1020 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Stuttgart, 17 Oct (DPA) -- Philipp Jenninger (CDU), state minister at the chancellor's office and in charge of contacts with the GDR, has said that the most important task of intra-German relations is "to arrange practical solutions and results."

Jenninger, speaking on South German Radio, said there is no point in wanting to enforce -- especially at the present time -- different legal views on which no agreement has been reached since the Bonn-East Berlin basic treaty was concluded. Jenninger also commented on GDR Council of State Chairman Erich Honecker's criticism of Chancellor Kohl's government statement. He expressed the Federal Government's hope that "a detailed and careful examination by the GDR leadership will lead to a more balanced and more realistic assessment of the chancellor's government statement."

STOLTENBERG PRESENTS ECONOMIC RECOVERY PROGRAM

LD161832 Hamburg DPA in German 1454 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 16 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU) has presented a three-stage program to improve state finances, revive the economy and afford relief to taxpayers. In an interview in the WELT AM SONNTAG, Stoltenberg said there would be interest relief for housing construction retroactive to 1 October this year. Relief for medium-sized firms is planned from 1 January 1983, and at the beginning of 1984 there will be a reduction in taxes paid independently of profits for the manufacturing industry. After that, major tax reform will be tackled.

In Stoltenberg's view, the additional revenue from the increase in VAT [value added tax] would create a broader framework for tax relief beginning in 1984. This is primarily aimed at providing tax relief for firms.

The aim was to find quick-acting methods of combating the negative trend in the economy. This included an investment loan, which would raise Dm 2.5 billion and benefit the housing industry. Stoltenberg stressed that the loan will be interest-free and repayable in any event.

LAST OF DETAINED IRANIAN STUDENTS RELEASED

[Text] Mainz, 15 Oct (DPA) -- The last 43 of a total of 82 Iranian students who had been kept in detention since April, following the bloody attack on their compatriots in Mainz, have been released, Bernhard Vogel (CDU), Rhineland-Palatinate minister-president announced in Mainz on Friday. On Thursday, 26 Khomeyni followers had been deported.

Vogel said that general amnesty had not been granted to the 43 Iranians still remaining in the Federal Republic. They would be allowed to remain on German territory until they had completed their studies. Due to their involvement in the attack on their compatriots with different political views, in a Mainz students' hostel, the usual criminal investigation procedure will be started against them.

MITTERRAND TO MEET WITH AL-JUMAYYIL 20 OCT

NC152032 Paris AFP in English 1953 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Canjuers military base, southern France, Oct 15 (AFP) -- French President Francois Mitterrand said here today he will receive Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil in Paris on October 20.

Mr Mitterrand made the announcement during an inspection visit to his military base.

Mr al-Jumayyil, due at the United Nations in New York, and in Washington, on October 18 and 19, was expected to spend 24 hours in Paris, including a working lunch with Mr Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace. French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson was expected to attend.

An authoritative source in Paris said the two presidents would discuss the post-war reconstruction of Lebanon and restoration of its unity and independence.

The visit by Mr al-Jumayyil, elected September 21 after his brother, President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil, was assassinated, would be the first by a Lebanese head of state since President Ilyas Sarkis was received by former President Valery Giscard-d'Estaing in 1978.

Mr al-Jumayyil, who will be accompanied by Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salim, was expected to go from Paris to the Vatican.

MITTERRAND VISIT TO MOROCCO OFF; HASSAN TO VISIT

NC152034 Paris AFP in English 2020 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 15 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand will not visit Morocco, as planned, at the end of this month, but instead Morocco's King Hassan II will shortly visit Paris, official sources said today.

The Foreign Ministry, in a communique explaining the cancellation of the visit, said because of King Hassan II's wish to visit France, it had been decided that the two leaders should meet in Paris.

The communique added that a date for the meeting would be fixed shortly.

JORDANIAN-PALESTINIAN TALKS ENCOURAGED

JN151631 Amman Domestic Service in Arabic 1600 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Replying to a question by a PETRA-JNA correspondent in Paris, the official spokesman of the French Ministry of External Relations explained his government's assessment of the Jordanian-Palestinian talks. He said that France is following these talks with concern and stresses its support for any Arab or international efforts that may contribute to the establishment of a just and durable peace in the Middle East. France, he added, underlines the importance of taking into consideration the Palestinian people's legitimate rights in determining their future and the right of each state in the region to live in peace.

SOVIET ENVOY DISCUSSES FRENCH-SOVIET TIES

[Maurice Delarue report: "Mr Mitterrand and the USSR Ambassador Discussed the Deterioration in French-Soviet Trade"]

[Text] USSR Ambassador Chervonenko had a meeting lasting a little more than 45 minutes at his request with Mr Mitterrand on Tuesday, 12 October. The essence of the talks, the ambassador stated on leaving the Elysee, was "a detailed exchange of views" on French-Soviet relations in the political, economic, commercial, scientific and technical spheres.

When the journalists asked him whether the Polish crisis was not likely to jeopardize French-Soviet relations, the ambassador replied: "We believe that what has been undertaken in Poland will, on the contrary, help to improve the situation in that country. The best thing is not to interfere in those internal affairs. We must believe in the Polish people's wisdom, patriotism and political will. They will find their own solutions."

It is true that the meeting was not directly connected with events in Poland. Mr Chervonenko, who has had regular meetings with French presidents for nearly 10 years, requested an audience in July, and the date for it had been fixed for some time. The world situation was reviewed, and it is highly unlikely that Poland was not discussed at least briefly.

Nonetheless, as Mr Chervonenko said, the main part of the meeting was apparently devoted to bilateral relations, which are still rather cool. Of course, ministerial visits are scheduled (Agriculture Minister Mrs Cresson will visit Moscow shortly, as will Research and Industry Minister Chevenement -- probably a little later), and the PS is restoring contacts with the CPSU. It is also true that Moscow welcomes the French Government's firm line in the gas pipeline affair.

But France does not appreciate in the slightest the considerable deterioration in French exports to the USSR (the deficit will reach Fr 10 billion in 1982), and the French Government is wondering whether the Soviets are using trade as a means of blackmailing France into a more flexible line on the international problems concerning the USSR. We cannot assume that Mr Mitterrand made his feelings on the subject known to Mr Chervonenko.

In this context, no visit to Moscow by Mr Cheysson, still less by Mr Mitterrand, is being envisaged in the near future, although Paris is not ruling out the possibility of such a visit when it seems useful for improving relations between the two countries.

MALI PRESIDENT TRAORE ARRIVES FOR 2-DAY VISIT

NC171734 Paris AFP in English 1637 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 16 (AFP) -- President Moussa Traore of Mali arrived here today for a two-day official visit to France which is expected to be essentially devoted to the Mali's serious economic and financial problems.

France is a major source of financial aid for the west African state. It is chief among its import suppliers, and is also chief client for Mali's exports, notably cotton.

During his visit, General Traore is to meet Cooperation Minister Jean-Pierre Cot, Finance Minister Jacques Delors and Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson. He is to meet President Francois Mitterrand on Tuesday evening.

In Algiers earlier today during a stopover, General Traore had [words indistinct] with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid.

No details of the two men's talks were revealed, but observers believed the crisis in the organisation of African unity prompted by the admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic (SDAR) may have been raised.

Algeria has backed the Polisario Front guerrillas who have [words indistinct] the western Sahara. The guerrillas, who are fighting Morocco for control of the territory, have an office in Algiers.

The Malian president is member of a five-state committee seeking to reconvene the OAU summit before the end of the year. The summit [words indistinct].

MITTERRAND: NO PRODUCTION OF NEUTRON BOMB YET

NC151741 Paris AFP in English 1721 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Conjuers military base, southern France, Oct 15 (AFP) -- France is not going ahead with production of the neutron bomb yet because "the time is not ripe", President Francois Mitterrand said here today.

In his first visit to a French Army camp since taking office 17 months ago, Mr Mitterrand said he had asked for further research on the neutron bomb to allow France "to begin production immediately...if I so decide".

"But the time is not ripe," he said. "We have other military priorities".

The president was queried on whether France had decided to produce the bomb following a report by the Paris-based English-language daily, the INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

The paper said Mr Mitterrand informed the new West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl that France was going ahead with production of the neutron bomb during talks a fortnight ago.

(In Washington, a State Department spokesman denied that America had given any technological aid to help France produce a neutron bomb or that France had asked for such aid. THE NEW YORK TIMES today claimed that the French Government had given the green light for the production of the neutron bomb.)

Mr Mitterrand, who today watched a demonstration launch of the Pluton tactical nuclear missile here, stressed his firm commitment to a further buildup of France's nuclear deterrent force.

France can defend itself only if "we succeed in integrating Navy nuclear forces, airforce nuclear capacities and the army's nuclear weaponry", he said.

The country must build up a strategic nuclear deterrent force strong enough to persuade its enemies that if France goes to war, it can inflict considerable damage, he added.

INDIA TO PURCHASE MIRAGES, EXOCET MISSILES

[Text] It would appear that India has signed an agreement for the purchase of forty Mirage-2000 aircraft as well as other equipment including some Exocet missiles. The news given out by an Indian news agency adds that the agreement was signed last night. The Indian Ministry of Defense has refused to make any statement. Last January, Paris and New Delhi had concluded a protocol concerning the purchase of the Mirages.

'PAINFUL' FOREIGN TRADE DEFICIT ANNOUNCED

LD161728 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] The figures for France's foreign trade are painful for Mr Michel Jobert [foreign trade minister] who this morning announced that the deficit for September has risen to 12.2 billion francs. It is the worst figure since the beginning of the year, except for June when the deficit was 13.2 billion francs.

Exports are stagnant, the minister of foreign trade said, but imports are rising at a rate of 5.5 percent, which is a strange phenomenon after two devaluations which have made French goods more competitive abroad.

PCF MINISTER ON GOVERNMENT ACCORD, POLISH CRISIS

[Unattributed report on Radio Luxembourg interview with French Minister of Public Office and Administrative Reform Anicet le Pors -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] To the ritual question "is being a Communist minister a comfortable position?" Anicet le Pors replied by stating the conditions which prevailed on the Communists' entry into government: the agreement reached with the PS and the result of the recent elections. "It is in that context that the Communist ministers are acting." Anicet le Pors said that "there has been no instance in which the Communist ministers as such have been isolated from the rest of the government." Then he stressed that "the government must speak with one voice once decisions have been taken" and that the Communist ministers "express their views in the cabinet or interministerial committee meetings." "In my view," the minister added, "we are in the government, fully in the government, and for a very long time to come."

With regard to the positions recently adopted by the PCF Central Committee, he said that "the free debate on major ideas, which is valid for the ministers, is all the more valid for the majority parties."

With regard to the forthcoming municipal elections, A. le Pors hoped that there would be "a union of all the leftwing forces which led to the formation of this government."

Finally, turning to Polish problems, Anicet le Pors stated: "The premier has spoken on the government's behalf. Anything which attacks workers' rights in any country is not good for the world's development." Then he expressed the hope that those problems might be approached "with responsibility," without doing "anything which might undermine any effort in the right direction." He continued: "I am not in a position to express a judgement with confidence: This is a matter of concern for all men and women of feeling in our country."

PCF MEMBER PAUL LAURENT ON POLICY TOWARD POLAND

LD151136 Paris Domestic Service in French 0645 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Interview with Paul Laurent, PCF Political Bureau member, by unidentified reporter; date and place not specified, -- live or recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Good morning, Paul Laurent. You are a member of the Communist Party Political Bureau; now when we looked at events in Poland almost a year ago now, the PCF, put a priori confidence in General Jaruzelski to return some order to Poland. Today it seems you are changing your attitude slightly. Does this mean that almost a year later you have been disappointed by General Jaruzelski?

[Answer] A year ago we were already very worried by the situation in Poland and wanted things to develop in the direction of a resumption of dialogue and national agreement in order to progress toward a release of prisoners and to develop independent trade unions. It is true that this process is complex and that it is still not at all well underway in Poland at the moment. We are continuing the same direction because our original choice was that of rejecting a bloodbath, of avoiding a growing tension within Europe and of removing the risks of outside intervention.

But our wishes are even stronger than a year ago. We see that the government is maintaining its search for understanding and dialogue even if it is not meeting extraordinary success at the moment, and I heard your guest yesterday [reference to an interview on 14 October]. It seems to me that we must continue to hope that things will be not be resolved by violence, but by dialogue among the Polish people. This is our position, which has not changed, but we are looking more urgently for a development of the situation, I would say.

[Question] Do you think, for example, that the new trade union law adopted just a week ago constitutes a good chance for opening up a dialogue?

[Answer] It does open the door legally for the existence of trade unions, for trade union pluralism, for the existence of the right to strike under certain conditions, so perhaps there is an opening, and we fervently hope that all social forces in Poland will get involved in it.

[Question] If the situation in Poland does not settle down -- for the moment calm has returned to Poland because the shipyards in Gdansk in particular have been militarized, which is a way of ending dissent -- if this situation does not develop, would you not be tempted to distance yourselves rather more from the Polish regime; would you not be tempted to go further than a simple concern, even a serious concern that you have?

[Answer] Let us not prejudge events. Our wish is in the opposite direction, and that's what we are aiming for. We think we should not take the side of those who are stirring up the embers; things are sufficiently complex and sometimes even tragic, so we do not need to add to them.

PCF PAPER REJECTS CHARGE OF COALITION SPLIT

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "Trial of Strength?"]

[Text] "Trial of strength started between the PS and PCF", "Technique of tripping people up or giving selective support" -- various commentators think that the recent [PCF] Central Committee meeting give reasons for boosting their hope of seeing us leave the government coalition.

LE MATIN, which seems to want to outdo LE FIGARO on this subject, has difficultly in concealing its jubilation at the thought that there might be a split between the Communists and the Socialists.

In support of its theory, Mr Perdriel's [LE MATIN editor] daily invokes the statements made by [PS First Secretary] Lionel Jospin and [PS National Secretary] Jean Poperen, who, according to it, "reminded the Communists that government policy cannot be divided and must be judged as a whole."

That interpretation does not correspond exactly to the Socialist leaders' public statements, since [French Premier] Pierre Mauroy recently stressed in an interview to DER SPIEGEL that our party was "playing its role normally while upholding its own positions" and that he had not "noticed the slightest deviation from government solidarity" by the Communist ministers.

However, in view of what is at stake and the complexity of the situation, it is useful to try to shed a little light on a problem which some people are trying to obscure, with some success.

We are participating in the government on the basis of a compromise agreement involving reciprocal pledges. We are struggling for the success of the new policy and we do not want any return to the course followed by a right which demonstrated its harmful nature for so many years. That is the choice which we made and to which are sticking.

That does not mean that we have been turned into disinterested spectators or into harem mutes. We plan an active part in government action at all times.

PS National Secretary Paul Quiles once expressed the hope that the PS would not become a "shapeless" party but rather a "proposing, driving force" and asserted that it "should use all its critical qualities, without going to extremes, to influence the final decisions" taken by the government.

It will be readily understood that what is valid for the president's party is even more valid for ours.

Our overall support for the government -- and we did not set conditions for it -- is not inconsistent with our opposition to some decisions which run counter to the pledges made.

It is true that since June 1981, the government has adopted major social measures and democratic reforms. For instance, there was the initial revival of consumption, thanks to the increase in the minimum wage and social benefits. There were the nationalization, decentralization, the extension of workers' rights, the wealth tax, the 39-hour week, the week of paid leave, vocational training for young people, research, the creation of a fund for major works and the incentives for young farmers to get established.

It is also true that a number of recent government decisions appear to be more like concessions to the right and the employers: for instance the wage freeze; the granting of exemptions from the wealth tax; the hospital living charges under social security; the continuation of closures in the iron and steel industry and the stagnation of coal production.

Hence the emergence of some discontent in the country which was expressed in the by-elections. Only yesterday, [RPR leader] Jacques Chirac, who has a short memory, asserted that the policy pursued by the Socialists and Communists was leading "to social regression and a drop in living standards."

It is precisely because we do not want those bankruptcies to return, and because we want the government's policy to succeed; it is because we want to maintain a leftwing course and keep the promises made to the electorate, it is because of all those things that we are calling on the workers to intervene in the debate, defeat the pressure exerted by the financial powers, and take part en masse in large-scale national action to win back the domestic market and achieve social progress.

Our objective is not to weaken the governemnt, but instead, give it the broadest possible popular base by enabling it to keep the promises it made. If a trial of strength has been started, it is with the right.

CHIRAC ACCUSES GOVERNMENT OF SPYING ON RPR

NC132102 Paris AFP in English 2045 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 13 (AFP) -- Conservative opposition leader Jacques Chirac today accused France's Socialist government of setting up a special political police force to spy on his neo-Gaullist Rally for the Republic (RPR) party. But the Interior Ministry denied the accusation and said that Mr Chirac was trying to divert attention from damning charges levied against him this week.

Mr Chirac, who is also the mayor of Paris, was charged earlier this week with involvement in two corruption scandals involving nine million francs (1,285,000 dollars).

The satirical weekly CANARD ENCHAINE today accused Albin Chalandon, an RPR leader and chairman of the state-run ELF-Aquitaine Oil Company, of having secretly financed the 1981 presidential campaign of Mr Chirac. The paper said that two million francs (285,000 dollars) were siphoned off from the firm's West Africa subsidiary ELF-Gabon for the Chirac campaign. But the oil company today denied all involvement in the pay-off.

The second case revealed this week involves seven million francs (one million dollars) that the Paris Town Hall allegedly arranged to be paid to "dummy" consultancy firms before building contracts were awarded.

In a press conference today, Mr Chirac described the allegations as a political campaign geared to "discredit the Paris Town Hall," six months before the vital French municipal elections. He said he was conducting his own inquiry into the alleged housing scandal and termed the ELF-Gabon affair a pack of "lies."

The charges and counter-charges come in the wake of increasing friction between the Socialists and the RPR following the government's decision last week to go ahead with a centralisation bill geared to undercut the powers enjoyed by the mayors of France's biggest cities. But while the Socialists have said the bill is necessary to give people greater powers in local government, the RPR has charged that it simply aims at whittling away Mr Chirac's hold over the Paris Town Hall.

AMBASSADOR TO INDONESIA -- The Journal Officiel for this Tuesday, 5 October, carries the appointment of Mr Jean Soulier as ambassador to Indonesia, replacing Mr Dimitri de Favitski who was recently appointed ambassador to Cyprus. [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Oct 82 p 4 PM]

NEXT ARIANE LAUNCH -- During the 33d congress of the International Aeronautics Federation in Paris, Mr Vignelles of the Center for Space Studies stated that the next launch of the "Ariane" rocket will take place "at the end of January at the earliest." Everything will depend on the conclusions of the commission of investigation comprising the European Space Agency and the National Center for Space Studies, and of the working group made up of specialists. On 15 October at the earliest, the former should publish its report on the exact causes of the failed launch of 10 September. On 8 November, the latter will make a statement on the compliance of the sixth launcher with the results of this investigation. The definite decision concerning the launch date should be made on 15 November, according to the same source. The next "passenger" of the "Ariane" rocket on its sixth launch could be one of the two European satellites: "Exosat," a scientific satellite which was to be launched in November, or "ECS-1," a European communications satellite. RESPONSE TO U.S. SEIZURE OF PIPELINE EQUIPMENT

[Text] The Foreign Ministry has intervened over the halting or seizure in the United States of four General Electric rotors destined for the Nuovo Pignone Company in Florence. The Italian Embassy was instructed to take action in Washington to clarify the nature of the measures.

A Foreign Ministry note pointed out that as far as the fulfillment of contracts already signed between the SAIPEM company and the Soviet Union is concerned, the Italian side confirmed the position to the effect that contracts already signed most be observed. If there is any question of an indirect impact on Nuovo Pignone because of the sanctions against supplies for the Soviet gas pipeline, then its consequences would be even more serious.

TRADE UNIONS PROTEST BANNING OF SOLIDARITY

AU161543 Rome ANSA in English 1511 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Palermo, October 16 -- The unified Italian trade unions, CGIL-CISL-UIL, sent a message of solidarity today to the outlawed Polish trade union Solidarnosc and levelled charges against the Warsaw regime which banned the first free Polish trade union last week.

The three unions have organized two days of "democratic struggle against the mafia" here and the union secretary generals, Luciano Lama, Perre Carniti and Giorgio Benvenuto, arrived in Palermo yesterday.

The message said, "The trade union movement and the one hundred thousand Italian workers gathered in Palermo to demonstrate against terrorism and organized crime and for development and democracy, firmly condemn the banning of Solidarnosc.

"Even in this moment, once again so tragic for the destiny of Poland, the union movement of Italian workers stands alongside the underground Solidarnosc and its jailed leaders.

"The gains of Solidarnosc were not only gains for the Polish people but have enriched the patrimony of ideas, of struggle, of values and experiences of workers throughout the world."

SPADOLINI VOWS TO CONTINUE FIGHT AGAINST MAFIA

AU161941 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Palermo, October 16 -- "Democratic Italy fully accepts the mafia's challenge", Premier Giovanni Spadolini solemnly pledged today at the end of a two-day anti-mafia demonstration organized by the nation's three major labor organizations.

"We came to Palermo to testify that we have not forgotten, that we do not want to forget anything of what has happened", Spadolini exclaimed. He was referring to the September 3 slaying in downtown Palermo of Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa, the government-appointed prefect sent here in the spring to coordinate anti-mafia police operations, his wife and police escort.

The two-day demonstration got off to a start Friday at the prefecture with the unveiling of a bronze bust of the slain law enforcement official. Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni was on hand at the unveiling ceremony with a statement vowing to break into the mafia's nationwide and international connections.

The union organizers of the event threw the weight of the entire workers' movement behind the fight against the mafia which, it was recalled, makes fourteen billion dollars a year -- 16 times the Italian Justice Ministry's entire annual budget -- just [on] profits from heroin sales.

Spadolini described the triple slaying in the Sicilian capital as "one of the worst and most disquieting acts of terrorism in Italy's tormented post-war history" which represented an all-out challenge to "this democratic and republican state".

INVESTIGATION LAUNCHED ON PLO, RED BRIGADE TIES

AU150917 Rome ANSA in English 0825 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Venice, October 15 -- It has been revealed that an investigation is under way here on alleged supplies of arms from the Palestinian Liberation Organization to the Red Brigades urban guerrilla group in Italy.

According to unconfirmed reports, the public prosecutor's office has requested the investigating magistrate to issue an international arrest warrant against PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat. No decision has yet been taken.

The investigation began after the kidnappers of General James Dozier were captured at the beginning of the year and many of them decided to cooperate with the police.

According to their account, in 1979, Red Brigades chief Mario Moretti sailed to Lebanon where a group of Palestinians loaded a large quantity of arms on the boat which then returned to Venice where the weapons were divided among the various Red Brigades columns and foreign terrorist groups.

Meanwhile in Rome, Thursday PLO representative Nimr Haddad charged that the leak of the Venice investigation is a "political act of provocation" against the PLO. In a statement, Haddad said that "the PLO has always condemned international terrorism, both by the Red Brigades and (by other groups) and for many years has offered every form of cooperation in the battle against terrorism.

"Leaks of this kind do not help the truth in the battle against terrorism in Italy or in the rest of the world or in the battle for a just peace in the Middle East.

"This is an act of a political nature, a provocation against the PLO at a time when Israeli propaganda insists on repeating such charges and insinuations".

ALESSANDRO NATTA PREVIEWS PCI CONGRESS DEBATE

PM151541 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 10 Oct pp 1, 24

[PCI Secretariat member Alessandro Natta interview granted to Enzo Roggi in Rome; date not specified]

[Excerpt] Rome -- The recent meeting of the PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission marked the start of the PCI's congress campaign. We discussed this with Comrade Alessandro Natta. Our conversation began with an aspect rather neglected by the press, namely the profile or character that it is intended to impart to the congress. Natta said:

"The fact that it was decided to make a document the basis of the debate means that the aim is not a general reorganization and redefinition of party strategy, but a major, direct intervention in a political situation that will clarify and advance our proposal of a democratic alternative.

For this very reason, I fail to understand the worries expressed by some comrades regarding the date of the congress. It seems to me that a period of 4-5 months cannot be considered insufficient, and that there is no basis for the fear of the profundity and freedom of our debate being influenced excessively by outside events. It is true that the political situation is acute, tense and exposed to possible rapid evolutions. But, apart from the fact that there is no guarantee that the situation in the second half of 1983 will be any more relaxed, we believe that a congress debate is all the more specific and productive inasmuch as it is not separated from the overall political and social dynamic. Obviously, this does not mean restricting ourselves to immediate and short-term issues.

[Question] An "entirely political" congress is something of an innovation in our tradition. Does this not leave us open to the objection that there is an intention to ignore or minimize certain ideological problems, certain "awkward" issues which have hitherto not found the entire party united?

[Answer] You are referring to major issues such as the third way, the verdict on events in Poland and our conception of internationalism and real socialism, in general. Well, I really do not believe that concentrating our congress deliberations on our political proposals can obscure any of these elements. Nobody has in mind any pragmatic evasiveness. That would be absurd. Our very proposal embodies and is based on an ideological substance and socialist outlook that we do not want to see obscured: Indeed, it will be necessary to stress the links between strategy and political proposals, to have the most open and elucidating debate on this topic, with the intention of taking up whatever valid points may exist even within critical stances and the outside contributions that we will invite.

[Question] This raises the question of the forms and what you call the "spirit" on the congress debate.

[Answer] It seems to me that Berlinguer's report to the Central Committee was itself an innovation. He did not present a document in which every issue was complete and resolved. Of course, the democratic alternative proposal as the linchpin of the agenda was quite explicit. But all the issues connected with it were presented precisely as subjects to be examined in depth and defined in the document that we will approve in November and that will, in turn, be not a platform to be accepted or rejected, but a document to be discussed, enriched and explained. With regard to innovations, I consider important the decision to publish, at the request of those concerned, amendments and political stances that are not approved at the various levels of the congress. There will thus be a full circulation, an awareness and a dialogue throughout the party on the themes of the congress dialectic.

[Question] On the subject of the democratic nature of the congress debate, Comrade Cossutta has said that it must be prevented from becoming a "campaign of elucidation...."

[Answer] I do not understand the objection about "elucidation." On the contrary, I believe that it is the right and duty of the leadership bodies to give an account of their work and the congress proposals, to explain and to elucidate their decisions and proposals. If we really want clarity, this is the precondition. As for the relationship between democracy and unity, I believe they are both interrelated and essential values. There is no need to smash down doors that are already open. It is entirely obvious and natural for us Communists that we must pursue the objective of unity. Democracy is the form of this process: Otherwise there is false unity or crystallized splits.

[Question] Do you mean that the dialogue must necessarily be based on a unitary premise?

[Answer] What I mean is that the debate must be open, sincere and direct, but also correct: That is, it must not proceed from the preconceived desire to set oneself apart irrespective, to transform points of discussion into antitheses, into a platform within which to gather and to condense various forms of dissent.

We need to debate, understand, deliberate and decide. This implies great democratic vitality and openness, which is something different from a census of forces around a "truth" conveyed from above. I would like to add that unity is certainly no fetish, but a political factor to be pursued and defended always for the sake of the party: indeed, not only does it give us strength in action and confidence in initiative, but it also gives us the confidence of those who look to us and a guarantee to our interlocutors. Unity is also a guarantee of the party's autonomy -- political and national. This is a linchpin that we will allow nobody to undermine. Basically, the democratic dialectic is a stimulating and creative element: Predetermined and systematic contraposition is an element of weakness.

[Question] The question of the representation of dissenters at successive levels of the congress has been raised....

[Answer] I cannot understand what is being proposed here either -- perhaps a "fast lane" that passes vertically through the congresses." But at all levels, the congress assembly is the ultimate authority and decides who the delegates are to be: There can be no automatic privileges for anyone. It is something else that must be guaranteed: Everyone's absolute freedom to speak, to make themselves understood, to put forward proposals, to request a pronouncement on their proposals and to be elected on the basis of whatever consensus they may secure.

[Question] I would like to ask you: In your opinion, were this "spirit" and these criteria for the debate reflected at the latest Central Committee and Central Control Commission session?

[Answer] Yes, apart from Cossutta's speech, the central bodies did, I believe, send the correct message to the party -- the will and the commitment to hold an open discussion and to deliberate in depth and in a spirit of unity. The differences of viewpoint had the valid character is a -- partly critical -- effort of enrichment and reflection. This has absolutely nothing to do with "power" tactics or any intention to keep score.

OFFICIAL SUGGESTS POLICY FOR HORN OF AFRICA

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 18 -- The West, and Western Europe in particular, should act urgently and energetically to work out a policy for the strategic Horn of Africa, according to Italian Foreign Undersecretary Roberto Palleschi. Writing in Sunday's edition of the Socialist Party mouthpiece, AVANTI, Palleschi, who recently got back from a visit to Somalia, claimed that the zone, together with Afghanistan and Iran, is one fork of the "Soviet pincers" designed to block the Middle Eastern region, "which guarantees the most important energy sources necessary for the West European countries".

According to Palleschi, West European policy for the area should consist of three main points: A strong economic, diplomatic and military aid for Somalia, which he claimed was "now the principal objective of the Soviet Union's aggressive maneuver". A renunciation of the military option for solving the Somali national problem in Ogaden, and the analogous problem to the north in Eritrea. Moves to ensure the rebirth of Ethiopian independence before it is lost to Soviet hegemony.

According to Palleschi, there are two conditions for "committed" European and Western cooperation with Ethiopia: A pacification of the southern frontier and the opening of unconditional peace negotiations with Somalia. The opening of Ethiopian society to "cooperation with our society and our culture".

He added that the West must stand by Somalia to "ensure its security against any aggression or threat of destabilization". At the same time, he asserted, there must be economic and cultural cooperation with Ethiopia so as to "build, with facts, a peace alternative and real non alignment against Soviet political and military hegemony."

PRESIDENT EANES ON CURRENT POLITICAL PROBLEMS

[Unattributed report: "Portugal Is Experiencing Crisis of Confidence"]

[Excerpt] The president of the republic has said that it is necessary for the central bloc of Portuguese society to unite on what is essential to make it possible to surmount the "grave crisis" which the country is experiencing and which he described as a "widespread crisis of confidence." Ramalho Eanes made this assertion yesterday at a luncheon held for him by young supporters of his repeat candidacy in the 1980 presidential election. In the head of state's opinion, it is essential that the central bloc of Portuguese society overcome the stage of "discord and dispute," with a view to resolving the nation's problems.

Within this context, he said, lie young people's problems, which range from securing their first jobs to housing, and to which he promised, within his sphere of competence, to make the response which is "feasible." In passing, he regretted not having undertaken systematic contacts with citizens of this age group, explaining this shortcoming by the "systematic campaign of slander" of which he has been a target.

Eanes linked the lack of a solution to young people's problems with the absence of an adequate response to the crisis which Portuguese society is experiencing, which, in his opinion, is a widespread crisis of confidence whose repercussions on the economic field have finally affected the country as a whole. To explain the atmosphere of "lack of confidence," Ramalho Eanes said that there are reasons of an exogenous nature, such as inconsistency, ambiguities and the mistakes made over the last few years; and of an endogenous nature, in which connection he made a historical digression which he took back to the Salazar regime and the fall of the empire.

Although maintaining that the crisis was inevitable with the end of the era of empire, Eanes asserted that this continuation is partly due to the absence of a cultural blueprint providing an alternative to that of the conservative bloc on the part of the left which took power after 25 April [1974].

"Without it," the president of the republic said, "the essential galvanizing element of the political transformation of Portuguese society was lacking."

Without fully answering the question of how to emerge from this deadlock, Eanes confined himself to pointing out the need for unity of the central bloc of Portuguese society, from which a blueprint may emerge accommodating everybody -- specifically, young people -- as he made a point of emphasizing. However, he promised that in due course he will express more clearly his thinking on the issues raised.

BALSEMAO COMMENTS ON DOMESTIC POLITICAL THEMES

[Unattributed report: "Balsemao Deems Campaign by 'Critical Sector' Unlikely"]

[Excerpts] "As Social Democratic Party [PSD] chairman, leader of the Democratic Alliance and prime minister, I am above all mindful of the problems of the Portuguese people and the state, Pinto Balsemao said in an interview broadcast yesterday by Radio Commercial's "Domingueiro" program, referring to the forecast offensive by the "critical sector" against him, following the local elections and at the time of the Social Democrats' congress, scheduled for January.

Asked about the "guerrilla warfare" between the government and the president of the republic, Balsemao blamed forces outside the two state bodies for the problems which have arisen.

"Public opinion has gradually found who the originators and instigators of the 'guerrilla warfare' are; frequently, neither the president nor the government but forces which are seeking to create an atmospehre which will make it possible to serve better their not always clearly democratic aims," the prime minister stressed.

Regarding both the president and the government as legitimized by democratic elections, Balsemao stated that on the part of the government "the intention to respect the sphere of competence and powers of the other state bodies has always existed, while demanding in return that those state bodies respect the government's sphere of competence and powers."

Confronted next by a listener with the possibility of an alliance between the PSD and the Socialist Party [PSP], Balsemao, although not totally ruling out that hypothesis, described it as not very feasible, at least until 1984, stating that the matter can only be tackled in practice "when the PSP begins to define its stance."

"We are firmly committed to the Democratic Alliance," he stated, "and regard it not only as a coalition but as a blueprint for society which will only be ended when any of those taking part sees fit. When we signed the agreement in 1979, we set out a horizon until 1984. If at that time we believe that the Democratic Alliance remains the political formula which best defends the Portuguese people's interests, nothing prevents its continuing."

Referring directly to the possibility of alliance with the PSP, Balsemao asked: "With what PSP? -- with Dr Soares? With the Secretariat? With Eanes' supporters?"

"Alliances entail clear and not weak and hesitant programs, strategies and leaderships," he stressed.

Support for Opposition Is Decreasing

Last, answering the accusation that the government which he heads is unpopular and is losing support, Balsemao said that the number of those who believe that the government "is governing better rather than worse" is significant.

"Whereas a percentage above 30 percent say that the government is capable of tackling the major national problems, a decreasing percentage say the same of the opposition," he said, stating that the number of those who believe in the opposition is not much above 15 percent.

"Obviously there are difficulties, and we do not disregard them," he asserted, pointing out that Portugal is highly vulnerable to what happens abroad -- to "all the fluctuations of stronger economies."

"There is an international crisis, and that crisis, unfortunately, is not fiction," he said, stating that this is reflected in government actions, citing the instances of the FRG, Sweden and Japan.

"At this moment," he added, "I must be one of the most long-standing prime ministers in Europe, and this is certainly symptomatic of the political difficulties caused by the economy."

AUTHORITIES SEEK TO BLOCK TEJERO CANDIDACY

LD160148 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0100 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Excerpt] At the press conference following [Friday's] cabinet meeting, the secretary of state for information reported that the government has ordered its judicial services to study every means possible of appealing the court decision granting Lieutenant Colonel Tejero Molina the right to be an election candidate.

Controversy Heightens

NC170844 Paris AFP in English 0713 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, Oct 17 (AFP) -- The Madrid Electoral Board confirmed Saturday that jailed putschist Antonio Tejero Molina could run for parliament, but mounting national outrage made it questionable whether the right-wing extremist would be allowed to serve even if elected.

The electroal board has first ruled out the candidacy of Lieutenant Colonel Tejero, who is serving a 3-year prison term for his leading role in an attempted military coup in February 1981.

Overruled by a Madrid court, on grounds that the putschist had appealed against his sentence and had applied for retirement from the paramilitary Guardia Civil, the board certified that he could run in the October 28 legislative elections as top candidate for a newly-created extremist splinter party, "Spanish Solidarity."

Felipe Gonzales, leader of the Spanish Socialist Worker Party (PSOE), who is expected to become the first leftist prime minister in Spain since the end of the civil war in 1939, said that if Col Tejero were elected, he would ask the Congress of Deputies to declare him unfit and unworthy to sit in parliament.

State Prosecutor Jose Maria Gil Albert said that the prisoner Tejero could not exercise his political rights even if he were elected to the Cortes.

The outgoing centrist-conservative prime minister, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, said his government would study all possible legal methods of annulling the Tejero candidacy before the balloting. Mr Calvo-Sotelo said in the northern city of Oviedo that there was no risk of a coupe d'etat in Spain, despite the failed 1981 attempts and the discovery early this month of a plot scheduled for the day before the expected Socialist electoral victory.

The premier expressed confidence in the government and military intelligence services -- which short-circuited the latest planned coup -- and said the vast majority of the army opposed putsch tactics against Spain's young post-Franco democracy.

FIVE MEMBERS OF TEJERO-BACKED PARTY ARRESTED

NC171655 Paris AFP in English 1515 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Granada, Spain, Oct 17 (AFP) -- Five members of the extreme rightwing Spanish Solidarity Party, headed by Lieutenant-Colonel Antonio Tejero Molina, were arrested here Friday, police said today.

Four of the Solidarity Party members, two of them minors, were apprehended while engaged in target practice. They reportedly told police that the 9 mm Star pistol they were using was given to them "for no specific purpose" by another party member, who was then arrested. The arrests took place as tension mounted in Spain prior to the October 28 parliamentary elections.

5TH MILITARY REGION OFFICER ARRESTED 17 OCT

[Text] Zaragoza, Spain, Oct 17 (AFP) -- A ranking officer believed to be involved in an attempted military coup uncovered early this month has been placed under house arrest only 11 days before Spain's general elections, it was reported here today, as a new spate of overnight bombings swept the country.

A lieutenant-colonel serving in the 5th Military Region, headquartered here, was temporarily suspended from service Thursday and placed under house arrest, the daily EL DIA DE ARAGON reported today. The officer's detention follows the October 2 arrests of three ranking officers suspected of organizing an attempted military seizure scheduled for October 27, the eve of elections.

Tension meanwhile continued to mount throughout the country today with eight overnight bomb attacks in five Spanish regions. In the western town of Logrono, a bomb exploded at the headquarters of the Spanish Socialist Party, tipped to win the October 28 general elections.

Two attacks against a power-line and a transformer near the Basque town of San Sebastian, believed to have been staged by members of the military wing of the ETA Basque separatist movement, caused a blackout in several nearby villages.

Observers said that other blasts in Valencia and Barcelona may have been carried out by members of the small leftist armed GRAPO [1 October Antifascist Resistance Groups], who have called for a boycott of what they term the October 28 "electoral farce". A night-watchman was slightly wounded in the Barcelona attack on a government office building. Other explosions occurred in the northern Asturias region.

GENERAL ON 'PROVOCATIONS' AGAINST ARMED FORCES

LD152040 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1900 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Lt Gen Lacalle Leloup, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said today during a military ceremony in Madrid that whoever attempts to use arms against their own officers causes immense harm to the armed forces and to Spain, not only because they commit a crime, which carries a very severe sentence in the Spanish justice code, and because it goes against the essence of military life, but because this damages the trust which the Spanish people have in the army. Lacalle Leloup urged people not to listen to calls to provocations from any source against the armed forces, which aim to break the discipline and unity of the army.

DEMOCRATIC, SOCIAL CENTER PROGRAM SUMMARIZED

PM151032 Madrid ABC in Spanish 5 Oct 82 p 37

["R.R.S." report]

[Text] Madrid -- "There is not, nor will there be after the election, a government capable of tackling alone the crisis experienced by the country. That is why we emphasize the need for all the political forces to cooperate in a state pact with the party which emerges triumphant 28 October," Adolfo Suarez said yesterday at the ceremony of presenting the Democratic and Social Center (CDS) election program.

Suarez explained that his proposal does not represent a desire "to be in the goverment which is formed," but a support which could be reflected in parliament. "We are not seeking," he said, "positions of power, only to contribute our effort. Our idea does not involve a government of concentration."

Valid Interlocutors

"To some extent, and with greater aims, our proposal would be centered on new Moncloa pacts.

It would be advisable to define some issues to surmount the crisis through progress, never as a method for surviving. And the pact is perfectly feasible, because its success is connected with commonsense."

With respect to the valid interlocutors of that agreement, Suarez stated that the trade unions and employers should take part, in addition to the political forces. The armed forces? "No," he added, "the armed forces are under the government's orders, and there is nothing to negotiate." As regards his relations with the employers, the CDS top leader stated that "in our country, even though some people represent the employers, this does not mean that many of them do not accept our party's policy and even belong to it, because there is pluralism in the Spanish confederation of employers' organizations. We are prepared to engage in dialogue with them, despite the personal differences which may exist."

Program's Contents

"The defense of the democratic system, a response to the economic crisis and Spain's coherent and respected presence in the world" are prominent within the election program, whose basic ideological principles have been reported over the last few days. Thus the preamble states that "either we fully join now the group of [words apparently dropped in newspaper] countries heading for a regression, a relapse into underdevelopment." In broad outline, the guidelines of the CDS' election platform can be summarized as follows:

-- Spain's presence in the Western world; to negotiate the specific terms of Spain's joining NATO, which entail joining the EEC and the unrenounceable recovery of Gibraltar.

-- In defense, that the armed forces should guarantee national sovereignty and the constitutional order; reduction of the period of military service; rejuvenation of the high-ranking officers; and harmonizing the code of military justice with the Constitution.

-- In the autonomy field, reform of the administrative system and full application and implementation of the organic law on the financing of the autonomous communities.

-- Economic policy should be based on a long-term industrial policy, encouraging the setting up of future-oriented industry (electronics, agroenergy and so forth); increase investment from the current 19 percent of GDP to 25 percent; and increase of public saving through control over the growth of current expenditure.

-- In employment, the creation of 170,000 new jobs per year, 140,000 of which would be for people entering the labor market for the first time, is proposed; intensification of the image of enterprises as instruments of development and social welfare; harmonization of the various tax systems affecting enterprises; and specific lines of financing for small and medium enterprises.

-- In education, compulsory free education until the age of 16; and support for private education and university autonomy.

-- Right to operate private television; and a system of public assistance for the written news media.

-- In health, to control health expenditure by introducing rational management criteria in hospitals; and to guarantee free hospital care.

-- In consumer affairs, promulgation of the consumers' statute and classification in the penal code of the aggravating circumstances applicable to foodstuff frauds; and increased penalties.

-- Last, the CDS defends the right to life and declares itself opposed to abortion.

SKDL RATIFIES COMPROMISE; TO STAY IN GOVERNMENT

LD180204 Helsinki International Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] The Finnish People's Democratic League [SKDL] League Council today voted to approve the government compromise negotiated last week by Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa and the party leadership. The League Council, which met in Karjalohja, decided to support continued SKDL participation in the work of the government by a vote of 30-13.

In its statement, the League Council endorses the negotiated settlement and holds the view that it creates conditions for avoiding a government crisis. The statement points out that the sociopolitical measures included in the neogitated settlement must be prepared so that they are ready when the diet starts debating the matters connected with the economic solution.

SKDL Chairman Kalevi Kivisto regards the decision by the League Council as unambiguous and said that in his view it means the SKDL will stay in the government.

SOVIET PAPER ATTACKS SKDL PARTY LEADERSHIP

LD151758 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1400 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] The newspaper NEUVOSTO-KARJALA ["SOVIET KARELIA"] published in Petrozavodsk, has criticized the Finnish People's Democratic League [SKDL] leadership in harsh terms. NEUVOSTO-KARJALA also accused some Finnish newspapers of joining the campaign against socialism. Here is a report by Reijo Nikkilae in Moscow:

The NEUVOSTO-KARJALA editorial is headed: Whose Interests Does the "Reform" Serve? The word reform is in quotation marks. By reform, the Soviet paper means the recent articles by SKDL Secretary General Jorma Hentila in the SKDL Swedish-language paper and, as NEUVOSTO-KARJALA says, in the columns of several other papers, demanding that the Finnish Communist Party [SKP] should revise the outdated tenets of Marxism-Leninism. NEUVOSTO-KARJALA also accused Hentila of attacking Soviet foreign policy.

Although the article, which takes up three columns of the foreign affairs page of NEUVOSTO-KARJALA, begins by criticizing four Finnish newspapers -- UUSI SUOMI, ILTALEHTI, HELSINGIN SANOMAT and ILTA-SANOMAT -- as the Petrozavodsk paper says, for joining President Reagan's crusade started in June against [words indistinct], communist and workers' parties and all forces of peace and progress, the real target of the criticism is Secretary General Hentila. He is accused of abandoning Marxism-Leninism and, according to the paper, of trying to build obstacles between the different forces functioning in the SKDL, to isolate the communists, who are the soul of this movement, and to set the SKDL against the Communist Party. This is stated by NEUVOSTO-KARJALA, which also says that Hentila is trying to sow distrust among the Finnish people concerning the peaceful nature of Soviet foreign policy.

SKDL Chairman Kalevi Kivisto is also mentioned in the article. The paper says that Kivisto's allegation that the peace champions movement is a tool of the Communists also aims at disparaging the SKP. The SKP receives support in the article when the SKP, the paper says, rejects as erroneous the SKDL's views as a party-type organization with a kind of general socialist ideology.

TASS has transmitted the NEUVOSTO-KARJALA article in its entirety through its English-language service. This did not happen when NEUVOSTO-KARJALA criticized diet Deputy Arvo Kemppainen less than a year ago. This is Reijo Nikkilae in Moscow.

A Tallinn evening paper last week criticized Finnish television programs which were said to be attempting to influence the views of the Soviet people. According to the paper, Finland has thus directed an ideological weapon against socialist ideals.

SPA INTERVIEWS MINISTER OF STATE HURD ON MIDEAST

LD152156 Riyadh SPA in English 1900 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] London, Oct 15 (SPA) -- British Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Douglas Hurd, in an interview with SPA, praised King Fahd's contribution to peace in the Middle East.

He said that the monarch's efforts had greatly helped to get the Arab countries behind a peace strategy at the Fes summit.

Mr Hurd noted that the Lebanese "tragedy" had produced a complicated situation in the area, and expressed the hope that the Arabs would be able to reconcile the Fes plan and peace proposals made by U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

He also stressed the need for all parties to take part in the peace negotiations.

Mr Hurd said the Palestinians have a right to self-determination and to a state. He urged that the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) be associated with negotiations, "just as they are in Amman with King Husayn."

The British minister was probably referring to recent talks in Amman between PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat and King Husayn on future relations between the organization and Jordan.

The Israelis must be shown that their present policy of trying to settle in the West Bank and military occupation, "is not going to work," he said.

From the European point of view, the 10 EEC partners have decided at their Brussels meeting last month to try and help things forward along with the Americans, he added.

On the Gulf war, Mr Hurd declared that he was anxious about the security of the Gulf, and said that as long as fighting continued, "militarily, no one will win."

He welcomed the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) as a good thing and applauded Saudi efforts to achieve a mutual defence arrangement among council members.

On his views about Afghanistan, Mr Hurd emphasized that it was important that what was happening there should not be forgotten. "Britain and Saudi Arabia [word indistinct] together continue to show that they have not forgotten Afghanistan," he said.

He urged the U.N. General Assembly, when discussing Afghanistan between now and the end of the year, to renew its stand on the issue. Mr Hurd believed there would be effective cooperation between Egypt and other Arab countries in future.

The minister said Britain would continue to assist Oman militarily with loaned service personnel and a naval presence would be maintained, especially with the increasing Soviet naval presence in the Indian Ocean. He added that Britain was looking at the possibility of assisting the Yemen Arab Republic and there would likely be military training and advice from British service personnel as well as help in other fields.

Speaking about developments in Poland, Mr Hurd said Britain "is very concerned over the situation. The latest developments were serious, particularly the attempt to suppress Solidarity," he added.

Turning to the problems arising out of American sanctions on supplying equipment to the Soviet Union for the Siberia gas pipeline, Mr Hurd said he was sceptical about the use of sanctions.

"The pipeline argument had shown that there must be a framework in the future within which such East-West projects can be judged," he added.

PAPER VIEWS WEST'S IMPOTENCE REGARDING POLAND

PM141159 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 14 Oct 82 p 18

[Editorial: "Our Duty to Poland"]

[Text] Events in Poland now demand more than ever that Western governments should re-examine the moral bases of their relations with both Poland and the Soviet Union. For we must face the fact that nothing we have done so far has prevented the banning of Solidarity. Neither is any combination of financial measures available to us (withdrawal of credits, sanctions, refusal to re-schedule debts) nor even the breaking of diplomatic relations likely to save Solidarity in the foreseeable future. The Poles seem to be quite alone, heroically, romantically but hopelessly resisting a tyrannical government whose increasing repression is the very currency of its survival.

This admission of impotence does not come easily to us in the West. The liberal 19th-century concept of foreign policy, briefly exemplified by this country at the zenith of its power, taught us that beneficent states might act as moral policemen within the frontiers of less beneficent neighbours. This concept may have made some sense when one country, Britain, stood far above its rivals but it has in the 20th century proved wholly impracticable. Our so-called defence of Poland in 1939 was in reality based on far broader as well as more self-interested notions. Since the end of the 1939-45 war we have tried to pretend that where we could not alter events they were not worth altering. Now there are things happenings in Poland which we would dearly love to alter: yet we are at last forced to own up to our powerlessness.

There is, of course, an option open to the West -- and it may well be that we are incapable not only of acting as moral policemen but also of acting in our own self-defence -- and that is to arm much more heavily. But the Soviet Union could only be coerced into allowing free trade unionism in Poland by a very demonstrable Western superiority. Until that distant day, it will be more honourable for us (and more helpful to the Poles) to admit that we can at present do little than to encourage them in their struggle.

GDR STATE COUNCIL CHAIRMAN HONECKER'S VISIT

Lays Wreath at Makarios' Grave

NC151228 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Today GDR State Council Chairman Honecker and President Kiprianou went to Throni, where Honecker laid a wreath at Ethnarch Makarios' grave. The wreath had the inscription: To the distinguished statesman and founder of the state of Cyprus, as a token of memory and honor. Honecker was accompanied by Mr Guenter Mittag, SED Politburo member and Central Committee secretary general; Minister of Foreign Affairs Oskar Fischer and the other members of his entourage. Kiprianou was accompanied by Minister of Foreign Affairs Rolandhis, Minister of Commerce Andreou and other officials.

On arrival at Throni, the two leaders were accorded a warm welcome. A National Guard detachment presented arms while a guard's band played.

The two leaders were also warmly welcomed at Kykko Monastery, where they were met by Abbot Dhionisios and the monastery fathers. Answering an address by the monastery's abbot, Honecker thanked him for the welcome and said that his meeting with Kiprianou serves the cause of peace and independence of the peoples of the two countries. Honecker said he was deeply touched to lay a wreath on the grave of Ethnarch Makarios, with whom, he said, we met in Helsinki and expressed our peoples' will for peace. He added: Rest assured that the exchange of views with President Kiprianou precisely serves this humanitarian purpose -- that is, the consolidation of peace based on justice, independence and the sovereignty of peoples, and on the shaping of their lives without foreign interventions. Honecker concluded: It is in this sense that I see my presence at this holy place. Honecker and the members of his entourage toured the monastery and were briefed on its history. On the way to Throni Honecker and Kiprianou were welcomed enthusastically by the people and the students of Pedhoulas. Mr Poullis, the Pedhoulas gynmasium principal, addressed Honecker, while girl students gave him flowers. Honecker thanked them for the warm welcome accorded him.

Toasts at Banquet

NC152149 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou gave an official dinner last night in honor of Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State and secretary general of the SED Central Committee. Kiprianou expressed deep appreciation and warm thanks to Honecker for his great interest in Cyprus and its cause.

Referring to the international situation, Kiprianou said that humanity today is faced with an extremely dangerous situation and that we must work hard to revive detente and avert a deterioration of the situation.

What concerns humanity as a whole, he added, is the fact that the principles and ideals for which it has shed so much blood are being trampled upon. As a recent example he mentioned developments in neighboring Lebanon.

President Kiprianou also referred to international issues such as the Middle East, the Palestinian issue and the Iran-Iraq war. He said that while these issues exist there has been no progress toward disarmament. If there is to be peace in the world, he said, an end must be put to arms races and there must be a gradual disarmament.

President Kiprianou also said in his toast that the United Nations is not to blame for being unable to enforce its Charter and resolutions but that its member states are to blame. However, the United Nations will not survive, just as the League of Nations did not survive, unless there is a satisfactory solution to the problem of implementing UN resolutions within a logical period of time.

Referring to the Cyprus issue, President Kiprianou stated:

[Begin Kiprianou recording followed by German translation -- translated from Greek] A classic example of the inability -- not of the United Nations but of the international community -- to restore justice and implement UN resolutions is the case of Cyprus. You are well aware of the Cyprus issue, Mr Chairman. For 5 years now a large part of Cyprus has been under Turkish occupation. Repeated efforts for progress have not yielded any results. The procedures are not responsible for this. Turkey's completely negative attitude, which flagrantly ignores and violates UN resolutions and international law is responsible for this.

Many present the Cyprus issue as a complicated one. Basically, the Cyprus problem is very simple. What is our goal and our vision? It is to convert this land, this small land, into a land of permanent peace and prosperity for all its people.

To achieve this, however, we must have absolute and real independence. An end must be put to the occupation and the rights of all citizens must be restored, including the right of the refugees to return to their ancestral homes. We must have a completely sovereign, territorially integral, federated, united, demilitarized and nonaligned state. All foreign intervention must be terminated. Only then will Cyprus and its people prosper and Cyprus will be turned from a land of anomaly and friction into a land of happiness, permanent peace and freedom to the interest of all its people and to the interest of international security and peace in this sensitive area of the world. [end recording]

President Kiprianou then stressed that we will continue our efforts despite difficulties. Speaking on the purely humanitarian issue of the missing persons, he said there has been absolutely no progress because of Turkey's refusal to cooperate.

President Kiprianou then mentioned that the majority of Turkish Cypriots are suffering and stressed that the happiness and prosperity of all, the Greeks and Turks of Cyprus, lies in the unity of the country and the people.

Concluding, President Kiprianou stressed that we will continue our efforts and our difficult struggle and that Honecker's visit will contribute to the further development of the already existing ties of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

Chairman of the GDR Council of State Honecker, replying to President Kiprianou's toast, expressed satisfaction that cooperation between the two states and peoples has developed in all respects since their last meeting, in June 1980 in Berlin.

Honecker then expressed happiness over the considerable, as he described them, successe of the Cypriot people in overcoming the heavy losses since the 1974 developments, as well as in the development and reconstruction of their country.

He also expressed appreciation for the contribution of Cyprus -- an active member of the Nonaligned Movement -- to safeguarding peace.

Honecker said the principles of the UN Charter and the principle of resolving differences in international politics through negotiations must be resolute for the peaceful coexistence of peoples.

Referring to his talks with President Kiprianou, Honecker expressed satisfaction over the agreement on both the mutually beneficial further development of relations between the two countries and on their evaluation of the international situation.

On the Cyprus issue, Honecker stated:

[Begin Honecker recording in German followed by Greek -- translation from the Greek] Mr President, we agree that the principles of the UN Charter and the principle of revolving differences in international politics through negotiations must be resolute for the peaceful coexistence of peoples.

For this reason, and particularly at present, we resolutely place ourselves in support of progress toward a solution of the Cyprus issue. I share your view that the presence of NATO forces in Cyprus threatens not only the Cypriot people but is also a source of danger to peace in the Middle East.

A just and permanent solution to the Cyprus issue, including the total demilitarization and disarmament of Cyprus is, consequently, in the interest of all peoples. We share the view that settlement of the international aspects of the Cyprus problem could be undertaken through an international conference under UN auspices.

Every intervention in the Cypriot people's domestic affairs is, in our opinion, impermissible. The legal rights of the Greek and Turkish Cypriots, of both communities, must be respected.

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, our joint action toward the continuation of the cause of detente and for the creation of confidence and disarmament also aids a solution to the Cyprus issue. We are certain that the Cypriot people's struggle for independence, sovereignty, unity and the nonaligned character of their country will be successful.

Be certain that along this road to happiness and peace we will be on your side in the future with active support and solidarity. We wish you progress and new great successes. [end recording]

[Text] Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State, today conferred with AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou, with whom, according to a statement issued by AKEL, he exchanged mutual briefings in a cordial and brotherly atmosphere. The statement adds that, Honecker and Papaioannou stressed the full identity of views by their parties on all matters discussed. Papaioannou decorated Honecker with the highest AKEL decoration, which commemorates its 50th anniversary.

Delegations Discuss Trade

NC151954 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Talks were held this afternoon at the Ministry of Commerce between Cypriot and GDR delegations to review bilateral trade relations. In an address, Gerhard Beil, deputy minister for foreign trade and head of the GDR delegation, expressed the desire to purchase one million pounds worth of Cypriot products by the end of 1982; primarily wines and spirits, lemons, tobacco and clothing.

Commerce and Industry Minister Andreou, who headed the Cypriot delegation, referred to the increase of trade between the two countries and expressed the certainty that, through implementation of practical measures, there would be a further expansion of trade. Officials from both sides also attended the talks.

Honecker was seen off at Larnaca Airport by President of the Republic Kiprianou, President of the House of Representatives Ladhas, members of the Council of Ministers, dean of the Diplomatic Corps Soviet Ambassador Astavin, Cyprus' Ambassador in East Berlin Angelidhis, GDR Ambassador in Nicosia Schurath, leaders or representatives of political parties, the chiefs of the police, and National Guard and other officials. Honors were presented by a detachment of commandos and the National Guard band.

BERLINER ZEITUNG INTERVIEWS FOREIGN MINISTER

AU151643 East Berlin BERLINER ZEITUNG in German 14 Oct 82 p 4

[Klaus Wilczynski report on interview with Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis "shortly before the visit of Erich Honecker, slated to begin today" -- place and date not given]

[Text] Shortly before the visit to Cyprus of Erich Honecker, slated to begin today, Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis granted our representative Klaus Wilczywski an interview on questions of Cypriot foreign policy. In reply to the question of how Cyprus is using its great international prestige, acquired through its principled policy of peace and peaceful coexistence, in the present complicated situation, the minister declared:

"We are living in a period of very dangerous political confrontation. Cyprus is a small country which cannot play any important part regarding the development of political trends. On the other hand, we are among the active members of the Nonaligned Movement. In this capacity we have undertaken within the framework of the movement every possible step to ensure that peace and detente predominate in the world. We know that at this time it is not very easy to ensure such a development, but we must nevertheless continue our endeavors."

For the Success of the Madrid Meeting

Minister Rolandhis pointed out that the role of Cyprus in Europe is at present "much more specific." [as published] Regarding the Helsinki process and the forthcoming continuation of the Madrid meeting of the CSCE countries, he said: "Together with other nonaligned and neutral countries we have done a great deal to make the conference possible. Since then, this group of states has met repeatedly to ensure that the Madrid meeting comes to a successful conclusion. We have only just now discussed this problem at a meeting in Stockholm."

Minister Rolandhis also outlined his country's attitude toward the Middle East problem, which directly affects Cyprus because of the geographic proximity.

"We most sharply condemn Lebanon's invasion by Israel and all atrocities that have been committed in this connection in Beirut." Regarding a solution to the problem, he declared "we cannot conceive of any solution which ignores the justified demands of the Palestinian people for implementing their basic rights, including their right to a state of their own. These rights must be implemented. Nor can there be any just and genuine solution without the PLO. The world and all countries concerned over the Middle East problem must not lose sight of these aspects."

The minister then commented on the state of the endeavors to resolve the Cyprus problem.

In its present form, the problem is determined by the Turkish military intervention. "Hence, the same thing that happened these days in Lebanon could very easily happen in Cyprus.

"Forty percent of our territory is occupied; 30,000-40,000 Turkish soldiers are stationed in our country. These are the most important factors of the Cyprus problem." He described the withdrawal of the foreign forces as the "cardinal problem, the prerequisite without which there can be no solution."

In view of the difficulties confronting Cyprus, he said, his government has declared its readiness for internal Cypriot talks between representatives of the Greek and the Turkish-Cypriot populations. Rolandhis said in this context: "A just solution must guarantee the unity of the republic. The federative constitution that is to be established must be based on the same principles as it is in all other federal states -- on the guaranteed unity of the state and human rights." Only under such circumstances can the UN decisions on Cyprus be implemented, he said.

Minister Rolandhis paid tribute to the aid which Cyprus received from the international community in its endeavors to bring about a just solution of the problems. "We have received aid from the nonaligned states, the Soviet Union and the other socialist states. There has also been a certain amount of support from the Western camp. But those are exceptions. The Soviet Union, however, has always been at our side. Without this aid we would no longer exist." Cyprus regrets that the United Nations to date has not been able to put through its Cyprus resolutions. "Nevertheless, we must not cease to struggle for their implementation."

High Point in Relations with the GDR

With the statement "our relations are excellent," the minister began answering the questions about GDR-Cyprus relations. He referred to the vivid dialogue between the two sides, his own visit to the GDR, the return visit of Foreign Minister Fischer to Cyprus, and President Kiprianou's GDR visit, during which he accompanied him, and drew the following conclusions:

"GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker will arrive in our country shortly, paying us a visit for the first time. This completes the full cycle, a cycle that we have with only a very few countries. This proves how good our relations are." Minister Rolandhis said this assessment also applied to the personal relationship between the politicians of the two countries, as between the two foreign ministers, and said: "The visit by Erich Honecker will be the high point of the relations between Cyprus and the GDR. We know that."

KLIRIDHIS DISCUSSES TALKS WITH GREEK LEADERS

NC142202 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Democratic Rally [DISI] Chairman Kliridhis has made a statement on his recent visit to Athens and his meetings with Hellenic Republic President Karamanlis and Greek Prime Minister Papandreou. Mr Kliridhis said that during his meeting with Mr Karamanlis he noted that Mr Karamanlis' interest in Cyprus is still strong. He added: The president of the Hellenic Republic continues to have a national affection for martyr Cyprus.

The DISI chairman said that his meeting with Prime Minister Papandreou was equally friendly and cordial and that Mr Papandreou's concern for the Cyprus issue is touching and creates a feeling of optimism for Cypriot Hellenism.

Mr Kliridhis said that during his Athens talks his suggestion to hold a national conference in Athens under Mr Papandreou's chairmanship was discussed. He also said that he does not question the timing of the conference and that DISI is ready to participate in such a conference, either prior to or after the presidential elections. In conclusion, he said he considers Greece the Cypriot people's mainstay.

SPOKESMAN DENIES ALLEGATIONS ON ARMS BUILDUP

NC160920 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 16 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government has vehemently denied "preposterous allegations" of Turkish Cypriot leader Mr Denktas in New York, about arms pile-up in the south to attack Turkish Cypriots.

The government spokesman in Nicosia yesterday underlined that the weapons of the National Guard are purely defensive and the intentions of the Cyprus Government peaceful.

Greek Cypriots have no intention to attack Turkish occupied areas, he said in the most emphatic denial ever of Turkish allegations about threats from the Greek Cypriots in the south.

"The military superiority of the Turks with thousands of troops from the mainland is such that the Turks themselves describe as 'suicide' any Greek Cypriot attempt for military confrontation". This gave both the right and the duty for strengthening defences for protection against a possible new advance by the Turks.

He said the constant repetition is undoubtedly aimed at misleading world opinion and creating wrong impressions regarding the correlation of military power in Cyprus and of the intentions of the two sides.

Mr Denktas said Turkish forces in the north numbered only 17,000 men, but the government spokesman said "it is well known" that an occupation force of about 40,000 Turkish troops, armed with the most modern weapons, is stationed in the north and there was a substantial and well trained force of armed Turkish Cypriots.

The government spokesman said: "Indicative of the bellicose spirit which the Turkish Cypriot leadership has been trying to instill in the Turkish Cypriot youth, is the fact that even girls and primary school pupils bearing arms took part in military parades organised in the occupied areas on various occasions, and photographs published at various times in the Turkish Cypriot papers are irrefutable evidence of this".

Greek Cypriots have no intentions of attacking areas under Turkish occupation, not only because they believe in peaceful means but because they do not have the military means.

STATEMENT OUTLINES POLICY ON TURKISH DEFECTORS

NC161332 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 16 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] An official statement issued yesterday confirms the reports that two Turkish Cypriots, who appeared in the free areas as defectors, have been arrested on charges of spying. Specifically, it was reported that the two arrested Turkish Cypriots, after having asked for refuge in the area under the government's control, returned secretly to the occupied areas and then came back again to the free areas.

EDEK and the Cyprus Democratic Labor Federation [DEOK] announced that two Turks who had taken refuge in the free areas and later returned to the occupied areas have been executed by the Turkish junta.

Because of this announcement, an official statement was issued saying that the government has no information or evidence confirming this allegation and noting the following: "The Ministry of Interior and Defense is fully conscious of its responsibilities and the clamor around this issue does not serve any useful purpose."

With regard to the question of Turks and Turkish Cypriots defecting to the free areas, the [official] statement says that the government's policy is the following:

"The Cyprus Government is dealing with the question of Turkish Cypriot defectors and Turkish fugitives on purely humanitarian criteria and guided by the more general interests of the state. It has never refused any legal services to Turkish Cypriot defectors and Turkish fugitives and has always satisfied their every logical and just demand. The government has helped many of the Turkish fugitives to go abroad, at their own request, to countries of their own choice. The Turkish Cypriot defectors, who live in the free areas controlled by the state, enjoy equal treatment and have the same rights as all the citizens of the republic without any discrimination and any allegations that any form of pressure is being exerted on them are absolutely unfounded. The Turkish fugitives enjoy the treatment of a 'visitor,' as is the case with all foreign nationals who live temporarily on Cyprus. The government's impartiality toward both the Turkish Cypriots and Turkish fugitives and its sincere interest in serving them, of course, does not mean nor is it possible to imply any intention of tolerating any possible illegal activities by them."

With their announcements, EDEK and DEOK referred to press reports about the handing over of two Turkish dissidents to the occupation troops and their execution by Ankara's military junta noting that:

"These reports -- if they are true -- make the Cypriot Government an accessory and accomplice of the Turkish fascist regime as well as coresponsible for the murder of democratic people fighting against fascism.

DENKTAS MEETS PEREZ DE CUELLAR IN NEW YORK

TA151023 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, has said that the Greek Cypriots are continuing their armament and has asked the United Nations to prevent this dangerous development.

Denktas, who is in New York, met with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar today. In a statement on the meeting, Denktas said that he had reached a unity of view with the UN secretary general that progress is being made at the intercommunal talks and that there is no other way for a peaceful solution of the problem. Denktas said that he had briefed Perez de Cuellar on recent statements made by Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou that were in contradiction to the intercommunal talks, the Greek Cypriot proposal to take the problem to the nonaligned conference and armament in the south. Denktas added that he drew Perez de Cuellar's attention to the economic embargo imposed on the Turkish Cypriot community and that he had asked that the Greek Cypriot leadership be called to pursue the right path regarding other issues as well.

After his meeting with Perez de Cuellar, Denktas held a news conference at UN headquarters in New York. Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots were continuing their armament through advanced weapons purchased from certain countries and that they were reinforced by some 12,000 Greek soldiers. Denktas added that in the event of an armed clash the Greek Cypriots can mobilize some 80,000 armed soldiers, that they are in the process of building an airport in Paphos and that they have started training pilots. Noting that there are reports to the effect that Greece is (?supplying) aircraft to the Greek Cypriots, Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot community cannot remain silent in the face of these developments. Denktas added that the United Nations should prevent these dangerous developments in southern Cyprus.

Denktas will return to Cyprus on 25 October.

DENKTAS ADDRESSES TURKISH CYPRIOTS IN NEW YORK

TA180556 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0500 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] President Denktas has said that if the Greek Cypriots insist on being armed, they will ultimately regret it. Denktas, in New York for talks with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar on the Cyprus problem, made this statement during a meeting he held with the Association of Turkish Cypriots in New York. Turkish Cypriots from New Jersey were also present at the reception given in honor of the Turkish Cypriot president.

A report by the Turkish Cypriot news agency [TAK] says that the meeting opened with an address by the president of the association, Ali Sencer, who expressed his pleasure over President Denktas' visit.

Speaking at the meeting later, President Denktas expressed his gratitude to Turkish Cypriots in New York and New Jersey for their support for the Turkish Cypriot cause. Reviewing the latest developments in the Cyprus issue, Denktas said that he doubted that the Greek Cypriots wanted to solve the Cyprus problem based on a partnership with the Turkish Cypriot side. Recalling that the Greek Cypriots were constantly buying missiles and other modern arms from foreign countries, the president said: The policies pursued by the Greek Cypriot side are unreasonable. These are the same policies practiced by Papandreou. If they continue in this way, they will face problems and will ultimately regret it.

Recalling that Turkish Cypriots rights have a history of 400 years, and that there is no way to deny them, Denktas said that these rights were preserved at the expense of sacrifices and lives from 1955 to 1974. He continued: These rights are aimed at providing the Turkish Cypriots with a decent life, with opportunities to advance and with the possibility of refusing to bow to the Greek Cypriots. These rights are based on the existence of two entities living with equal rights in a bizonal Cyprus. These rights were saved from usurpation by the Greek Cypriots through the sacrifices of the Turkish soldiers during the July 1974 peace operation as well as by the Turkish Cypriot fighters and through our solidarity with our motherland in the accomplishment of our cause. It is the realization of these facts that will pave the way to the solution of the problem. Whether a solution is reached with the Greek Cypriot side or not, the Turkish Cypriot community will continue to progress in all fields.

Denktas concluded his address by reviewing the benevelant efforts being exerted by Turkey for the solution of the Cypriot problem. An album of Ataturk pictures was presented to Denktas in a ceremony held after the meeting.

Denktas is expected to continue his contacts in New York today.

PRELIMINARY RESULTS OF MUNICIPALITY ELECTIONS

NC180841 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Here are the latest results of the country's four largest municipalities: Athens municipality: At 1006 out of 1060 polling stations, Dhimitris Beis, who is supported by PASOK, KKE (Interior) and EDA [United Democratic Left] received 38.27 percent; Vassilis Efraimidhis, who is supported by KKE, 18.57 percent; and Tzanis Tzanetakis, who is supported by New Democracy, 37.94 percent. There will be a runoff election next Sunday between Beis and Tzanetakis.

After the election results, Athens Mayor Beis made the following statement: I address my warmest thanks to the people of Athens, who once again honored me with their ballots. Next Sunday the victory of the people of Athens will be overwhelming; it will be one mor victory for change. With all of the democratic population of Athens, we will continue the struggle in order to broaden its directions and make life in the capital more human.

Referring to the results of yesterday's Athens municipal elections, Athens mayoral candidate Tzanis Tzanetakis made the following statement: With their verdict yesterday, the people of Athens gave a proud victory to the independent and supraparty slate -- new breath for Athens. At the same time, they irrevocably condemned the previous municipal authority's incompetency and party subjugation. With their ballots, Athens men and women also expressed their disapproval of the municipal elections' factionalization, which was imposed by the government and followed by the other parties.

Piraievs municipality: At 332 out of 366 polling stations, Yiannis Papaspirou, who is supported by PASOK, received 36.68 percent; Aristidhis Skilitsis, who is supported by the right, 42.14 percent; and Dhimitris Salpeas, who is supported by the KKE, 20.02 percent. There will be a runoff election next Sunday between Yiannis Papaspirou and Aristidhis Skilitsis.

Thessaloniki municipality final results: Thanasis Yiannousis, who is supported by KKE, received 22.55 percent; Sotiris Kouvelas, who is supported by New Democracy, 40.86 percent; and Theokharis Manavis, who is supported by PASOK and KEE (Interior), 34.10 percent. There will be a runoff election next Sunday between Kouvelas and Manavis.

Patrai municipality: At 133 out of 134 polling stations, Theodhoros Anninos, who is supported by KKE, received 30.31 percent; Grigoris Solomos, who is supported by PASOK and KKE (Interior), 41.64 percent; and Andonis Filias, who is supported by New Democracy, 28.05 percent. There will be a runoff election next Sunday between Anninos and Solomos.

Minister Views Elections

NC180857 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Statement by Minister of Interior Yiorgos Yennimatas; date and place not specified -- read by announcer]

[Text] In an atmosphere of tranquillity and democratic exaltation, the people freely choose their municipal and communal representatives. As the responsible minister, I believe that in these elections the great winner will be local self-government itself. The municipal and community elections will give a new impetus to this democratic institution that has been borne from the people, so that we may intensify efforts to acknowledge the municipalities and communities and all new institutions for popular participation and decentralization as bastions of democracy, creativity, development and progress. Now is the time of the people in the towns and villages of our country.

Spokesman on Results

[Text] Commenting on the first results of the municipal elections, Government spokesman Dhimitris Maroudhas stressed the following: There has been a sweeping PASOK victory in the municipal elections and a shrinking of the New Democracy because towns have been lost where for years New Democracy has traditionally elected mayors. To prove this, I shall give some data which have become known thus far: New Democracy has lost the towns of Rethimnon, Aiyion, Corinth, Lamia, Komotini, Ioannina, Xilokastron, Kiato, Dhidhimothikho, Soufli, Ayios Nikolaos, Livadhia, Glifadha -- a traditional area of the right -- Kilkis, Lefkadha and Navplion; that is, 21 towns which always elected a mayor of the right did not do so this year.

In the previous municipal elections, New Democracy elected a total of 118 mayors. According to our calculations, in the first and second rounds New Democracy will not elect more than 18 or 19 mayors this year. Conversely, in the previous municipal elections PASOK elected 73 socialist mayors. Now, on the basis of the emerging data, it has elected 40 mayors in the first round; and in the second it will elect 172 to 173 out of a total of 276. As regards communities and towns with less than 10,000 inhabitants, the PASOK victory amounts to 70 percent.

Then the government spokesman gave an example from the nome of Evritania, where out of 81 communities and one municipality PASOK won 73 communities and the municipality. Then the government spokesman reiterated that so far PASOK has won 40 municipalities, KKE has won 8, an independent has won in Mikonos, and New Democracy has won 12. From among the municipalities where so far PASOK was the first, the government spokesman went on to say: I mention as typical examples Iraklion, Kalamata, Rethimnon, Sitia, Iera Petra, Ayios Nikolaos, Neapolis of Crete, Thivai, Andritsaina in the Peloponnese -- which used to be an old bastion of the right -- Zakinthos and Igoumenitsa.

As regards Athens and Piraievs, the government spokesman mentioned the following: As of 0010, Tzanetakis had won 38.39 percent, Beis 38.03 and Efraimidhis 18.00 percent. However, very many polling stations have not yet been reported -- more than 300; thus, we may have changes. In the previous municipal elections in 1978, Beis had won 40.63 percent -- always in the first round -- Plitas of New Democracy had won 42.15 percent and Mikis Theodhorakis of the KKE had won 16.31 percent. In Piraivs, Skilitsis had won 48.70 percent and Mikhetis of New Democracy 5.6 percent. Kiriakakos, who had been supported by PASOK, had won 45.70 percent. Therefore, I want to say that voting in the municipal elections differs from voting in the parliamentary elections because New Democracy -- in the parliamentary elections -- did not attain the 42 percent that Plitas did. If we compare the figures of the previous municipal elections with the 38 percent which Tzanetakis has currently won, a reduction of 4 points is apparent. Furthermore, Beis won 40.63 percent in 1978, but PASOK won 44.02 percent in the parliamentary elections. Thus, here too we see another difference.

Party Statements

[Text] Party leaders and mayoral candidates made statements tonight on the municipal election.

The prime minister made a statement to Greek Radio and Television, ERT, correspondent Ikonomopoulos: [Begin Papandreou recording] I must tell you that I am deeply touched by the huge victory for change. This is the first time in the recent history of the country that the people have expressed their support, through the municipal election, of the government's task. It is clear that in most capitals of the country's administrative divisions, in most of the great and small cities, the slates of change have won a crushing victory.

Naturally, there are great cities in which the battle continues. The crush of the right-wing, however, will be final in these cities next Sunday. It is a fact that the rightwing has been decimated. Nearly all its bastions, with the exception of some (?small ones) have fallen. I must admit that for me and my aides, the members and cadres of PASOK, this great victory gives us strength and hope for the great, creative task which we have undertaken -- to bring about the great change in our fatherland.

I must add something else. Because we, as a movement and as a government, greatly rely on the role of local self-government, on decentralization, on the participation of the people in all the processes that have to do with the people and are critical for their future, we feel that the people have given us mayors, community leaders, and municipal and communal councils with which we can work in order to create the Greece of tomorrow. [end recording]

Statement by Evangelos Averof, chairman of New Democracy [read by announcer]:

The political message from the municipal elections is clear and impressive. In all the great cities and despite the fact that PASOK was bolstered by alliances, it lost approximately 15 to 20 percent of the strength it had 1 year ago in the parliamentary election. In contrast, New Democracy has shown increased percentages everywhere, despite the wild exploitation of authority carried out by PASOK through threats and an unprecedented effort to influence the electorate through the information media or through its party cadres. I must note that thanks to their maturity, the Greek people have warned the government to put an end to its course, which is destructive for the country. I must also laud the fact that this warning is shared by the younger generations which voted for the first time and which proved they know how to protect the nation and the future of Greek youth. PASOK wanted to give a political character to the municipal elections and the opposition parties accepted the challenge. The results are catalytic and any effort to alter the fact and change the result given by numbers will not change these results. All can draw their conclusions.

Commenting on the results of the municipal election, KKE Secretary General Florakis made the following statement: The first results of the municipal elections bring a clear political message. They confirm that the greatest majority of the people are firmly in favor of the cause of change. The difference is that today broader democratic forces of the people understand that the cause of change also enjoys considerable support from the KKE. The proper political conclusions must also be drawn from the fact that joint slates of the democratic forces are demonstrating an impressive success.

The political office of the KKE Interior Central Committee issued the following statement:

The slates of democratic cooperation won the first position in many municipalities of the country. This fact confirms the firm insistence of the people upon the cause of change. The rightwing lost a great number of municipalities and communes and has shown a drop, in comparison to the municipal elections of 1978, yet it has large percentages in the great urban centers. The disruptive policy of the dogmatic Communist Party [KKE Exterior] has contributed to this result, because it aimed at purely narrow party benefits. The great majority of candidate municipal councillors of the KKE Interior and the democratic cooperation slates demonstrate the effect of the unification policy and views of our party on local self-government among the people. In most municipalities the battle will be continued next Sunday. Today's results show this battle will be victorious for the democratic cooperation slates and open up new prospects for local self-government.

Athens mayoral candidate Tzanis Tzanetakis, referring to yesterday's municipal election results in Athens, made the following statement:

The people of Athens gave an obvious victory to the independent and nonpartisan slate "new spirit for Athens" with their vote yesterday. At the same time, they unreservedly condemned the failure, inefficiency and party servility of the incumbent municipal authority.

With their vote, the Athenians also condemned the party character given to the municipal election which was imposed by the government and which was followed by the other parties. The Athenians proudly showed that their views were not being affected by the scandalous intervention of the government in the election confrontation and that they were not intimidated by its efforts to influence the will of the people.

This is purely a victory of the people of Athens, a victory which will be completed next Sunday when what remains of the party spirit and servility which, until yesterday, resorted to a fight to the death between the parties, will try to unite with the sole purpose of capturing the municipality for party benefits. I call on all Athenians to meet the second, more critical battle with the same feeling and faith and with even greater enthusiasm. Every vote is valuable for the final victory and definitive for the fate of Athens.

Athens mayoral candidate Vasilios Efremidhis [KKE] stated: I salute the tens of thousands of democrats of Athens who honored us with their vote. We are also determined to honor their confidence in us through our struggle. Although our slate is not among the two leading slates which will take part in the second round, change in Athens has won an important victory. Our slate has so far received 50 percent more support than in the 1981 election. For the slates of Beis [PASOK] and Tzanetakis, the percentage differences were either insignificant or negative. Our slate surpassed the percentage received under the slate with Mikis Theodhorakis in the 1978 municipal election. By contrast, the Beis and Tzanetakis slates do not even meet the percentages of 1978. Our slate ensured its presence on the Athens Municipal Council, something which did not occur in 1978 under the Mikis Theodhorakis slate.

From the political aspect, therefore, we emerge as the ascendent force from these municipal elections in Athens. This confirms our insistence on the need for cooperation on an equal footing between the democratic forces. As we bound ourselves prior to the election, our struggle for Athens will be continued with the same intensity and feeling after the election, both in and out of the Municipal Council. Our victory is not just an election percentage. It is a live and vital force which will continue the struggle against large-scale interests and for a human city which will be the bastion of change and democracy.

PAPANDREOU REITERATES ISRAEL'S RIGHT TO SECURITY

NC152310 Athens ATHENS NEWS in English 15 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Prime Minister Papandreou was quoted today as saying an overwhelming majority of the Palestine Liberation Organisation's (PLO's) members no longer wanted to question Israel's existence or security.

The official Greek news agency ANA said Mr Papandreou who is a strong supporter of the PLO made the comment yesterday to Greek journalists accompanying him home after a visit to Kuwait.

Asked if Arab countries understood the cost to Greece of its pro-Arab policies, the prime minister replied that there was a widespread and deliberate misunderstanding of the government's position.

"At no stage have we adopted a position that cast doubt on the existence and security of the State of Israel. We have made that absolutely clear in all our contacts with the Arabs and the Palestinians" Mr Papandreou said.

"And I should add that they (the Arabs) at least today -- and the PLO in its overwhelming majority -- do not desire to raise the question of the existence and security of Israel" he said.

Mr Papandreou who gave an emotional welcome to PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat when he arrived in Greece from Beirut six weeks ago at the start of the Palestinian evacuation from Lebanon has maintained close contact with the PLO since his election last year.

KIPRIANOU ARRIVES IN ATHENS, MAKES STATEMENT

NC172113 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Excerpts] President of the Republic of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou went to Athens today. Tomorrow he will meet with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou. As Kiprianou stated, there will be an exchange of views on Cyprus developments, while general aspects of handling the Cyprus problem will also be discussed.

At Ellinikon Airport, Kiprianou was received by: Alevras, president of the Greek Chamber of Deputies; Deputy Foreign Minister Kapsis; director of the prime minister's political bureau, Makheritsas; Cyprus Ambassador to Athens Khatzimiltis; and Greek Ambassador to Nicosia Zakharakis.

[Begin Kiprianou recording] Our purpose in visiting Athens is to exchange views with Prime Minister Papandreou on Cyprus developments. I will also brief him on my recent contacts in New York. We will also discuss matters related to the handling of the Cyprus problem between now and the discussion of the Cyprus issue at the UN General Assembly, which is expected in March. We will, naturally, also discuss more general matters related to the handling of the Cyprus problem. I am particularly happy to be in Athens once again. [end recording]

Tomorrow's meeting with Papandreou will take place at 1030 at Kastri. [Papandreou's private residence].

SPOKESMAN ON ULUSU REMARKS ABOUT RELATIONS

NC161342 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] At a press conference he gave today, Turkish Prime Minister Ulusu also referred to Greek-Turkish relations. Ulusu said that the Turkish side is assessing as a positive step the fact that the two countries' foreign ministers decided to meet again in December in Brussels to define the procedure of the talks that will be held between Greece and Turkey.

We believe, the Turkish prime minister said, that if solutions are found through negotiations that will balance the interests of the two coastal countries of the Aegean and which will be consonant with equity, it will be possible to restore friendship and cooperation between Greece and Turkey on a stable basis.

In connection with Ulusu's statements, the government spokesman noted the following: First, in the meeting in Canada between the Greek and Turkish foreign ministers, Kharalambopoulos and Turkmen, it was agreed that they should again meet on 9 December in Brussels to discuss and investigate possibilities for formulating a framework for a dialogue between the two countries.

Second, the principle of equity, which Turkey has always put forth, aims at disputing the legal status in force in the Aegean as this has been determined by international treaties and agreements.

Third, Greece undoubtedly wishes and aims at consolidating peace in the area and at developing relations of good neighborliness between the two peoples.

ECONOMIC TIES WITH ARAB STATES TO BE PURSUED

NC132046 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Greece is promoting the signing of economic and technical cooperation agreements with all Arab countries within the framework of the multidimensional foreign policy for closer ties with the Arab world, stated Ioannis Pottakis, alternate minister of national economy.

He added: Along with this, the Greek services abroad will be manned with commercial counselors; a department for Arab countries will be established at the ministry of national economy; and more frequent conferences with the Arab ambassadors in Athens will be promoted, because they play an important role in the development of Greek-Arab relations.

Mr Pottakis also pointed out the vast opportunities for an increase in Greek exports since the 18 Arab countries represent an important market of 165 million people. During 1981, these countries imported $107 billion worth of goods.

I KATHIMERINI VIEWS SIGNIFICANCE OF KUWAIT TALKS

NC142305 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 14 Oct 82 p 5

[Editorial: "The Talks in Kuwait"]

[Excerpts] The enthusiastic prelimary announcements on the visit by the prime minister and four ministers to Kuwait are -- at least thus far -- not in line with the results. It is not known whether the delay in signing specific agreements is due to insufficient preparation or to a true inability by the friendly Arab country to undertake commitments in the direction desired by Greece.

However, since the Greek economy's current needs, both for financing investments by the state sector and -- principally -- for increasing the Bank of Greece's exchange reserves to cover imports for more than 20-25 days, cannot possibly be postponed, the blocking or lack of Arab sources of capital compels us to seek other sources.

One of these alternative sources, to which we traditionally resort, is the international banking system, but the possibilities for securing loans to cover our increasingly burgeoning balance of payments will be lessened by two factors. One negative factor is the currently unreserved hostility of the Jewish element, which significantly controls the international banking system. The second negative factor is the absence of "support" by the International Monetary Fund for significant -- not less than $2.5 billion -- loans if the Papandreou government rejects the tough conditions this organization sets for its loans, which also encourgage private banks.

It is very reasonable for the Greek Government not to appear especially eager to accept such conditions on our economy for IMF loans, especially since accepting these conditions would mean completely abandoning our economic and social policy. This policy may not have been clarified yet and the measures that have so far been taken may not presage it, but it does not cease to want to be "socialist," that is, of an anticapitalist nature.

It is now clear that margins for additional solutions to finding foriegn capital have become very narrow. The results of the economic talks in Kuwait prove to be more important than usual interstate contacts, even if they were not successful.

ULUSU NEWS CONFERENCE ON ECONOMY, FOREIGN POLICY

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that the economic policy being implemented will be continued, the healthy balance being established in the economy will be preserved, savings will be encouraged, and the rate of inflation, which has been brought under control, will not be allowed to grow through monetary expansion. Ulusu said that development cannot be realized through foreign loans, and that special importance has been attached to activating the country's potential to earn foreign currency instead of supports such as foreign loans, which have a certain price. Ulusu noted that with submitting the constitution to a referendum, another significant phase in the path toward establishing a healthy democratic system will have taken place. He added that any foreign individual or organization wishing to observe the referendum can do so. Ulusu expressed these views at his eighth press conference, which he held in Ankara today.

At the beginning of the news conference, Ulusu said that the anxiety-ridden period prior to 12 September was far behind, and that an atmosphere of tranquillity and security has been achieved. Ulusu added that as a result of measures taken, there has been a considerable decline in incidents of anarchy. He noted that this success has been achieved within the framework of the laws, and without establishing extraordinary courts. Ulusu expressed his views on the economic situation and the policy being pursued on this issue as follows:

[Begin recording] The most important factor in the solution of our social problems and unemployment is to continue economic development in a regular manner, within the framework of a sound economic structure. We have achieved positive developments in this direction through various measures, despite the stagnation in world economics. The production increase and the economic revival which began in 1981 are continuing. Recent estimates show that national income will increase by 4.4 percent in 1982. Economic development will gradually speed up and continue. We have aimed at an increase of 4.8 percent in our national income during 1983, with an approach which will avoid much pressure on the economy. We expect the rate of inflation, which was reduced from 100 percent to around 30 percent in 1981, will continue to decrease as planned in 1983 as well. The price index during the period between September 1981 and September 1982 went up by 23.5 percent. We will continue to combat inflation. Our goal for 1983 is to reduce the price indices to around 20 percent.

The foreign currency balance is a critical issues for our country. It is impossible to continously depend upon special foreign loans. It is impossible to continue development based on artificial support. Actually, such kinds of support are not without a price. Therefore, we have attached great importance to activating our country's potential to earn foreign currency. As a result of the measures taken, important developments have been achieved on the path to establishing a healthy balance of payments. Our foreign currency needs are being met more and more by our own resources. Our foreign currency earnings from exports and from worker remittances are more and more able to meet our imports. While we were able to meet only 70 percent of our imports a few years ago, we expect this to increase to 95 percent this year. I would especially like to point out that our foreign currency deficit, which was over $3 billion in the recent past, will be reduced to a level below $500 million in 1983. Our exports, which increased by over 60 percent in 1981, are continuing to develop. Our export figures reached $3,360,000,000 by August. On the other hand, the structural change in exports is continuing. Our industrial goods exports, which were some 30 percent of our total exports for many years and which reached 49 percent in 1981, are continuing to increase. We expect our industrial exports to make up 57 percent of our total exports in 1982.

As for our imports, we are able to import without interruption and on time all the goods we need for both production and investment. The volume of imports has been fixed at $10 billion for 1983 in line with our development targets. [end recording]

Commenting on the problems of workers employed abroad, Ulusu expressed the belief that it is necessary and beneficial for the authorized Turkish and FRG organs to discuss the problems that arise in this field. Ulusu said: Our government believes that a return is possible if all the social rights of our workers, and especially their retirement rights, are secured and if they return of their own free will. We would like to express once more our determination on the issue. He added that the government will stand by the workers with all its resources, and with the domestic and foreign workers organization.

Ulusu then expressed his government's views on foreign policy. Recalling that the tension between the East and West is continuing, and that this tension is adversely affecting the disarmament talks, Ulusu said that the government takes care to contribute to efforts aimed at reducing tension, and to adopt a constructive and positive attitude regarding issues concerning Turkey.

Recalling that the Israeli occupation of Lebanon and the subsequent deplorable developments increased tension in the Middle East, Ulusu said that Turkey condemns the massacre committed by Israel and shares the profound sorrow of the Palestinians and Lebanese in the face of their human and material loss. Ulusu added: Efforts exerted in the international field toward the speedy withdrawal of Israel from Lebanon, especially following the evacuation of Palestinians from Beirut, are very important.

Noting that Turkey is very concerned about the continuing war between Iran and Iraq Ulusu expressed the wish that the war, which is a source of pain for these two neighboring and brotherly countries and which depletes their resources, end as soon as possible.

Referring to Turkish-Greek relations, Ulusu said that Turkey maintains the view that the disputes between the two countries can be solved only through negotiations, and that it is ready to negotiate. He said that the agreement reached between the foreign ministers of the two countries in Montreal is assessed as a positive step. Ulusu said: We believe that if equitable solutions balancing the rights and interests of these two coastal countries in the Aegean region are found through negotiations, then relations of friendship and cooperation based on strong foundations can be established between Turkey and Greece.

Ulusu said that the EEC has various difficulties, but that it has adopted a stand exceeding the dimension of these difficulties in relation to Turkey. Ulusu expressed the hope that the Community will change this unjust stand which is contrary to the basic philosophy of the partnership.

On international terrorism, Ulusu said:

[Begin recording] Armenian terror, which is a link in the chain of international terror, is trying to stand on lies and slander which distort the realities of the past. This foundation, which constitutes racist propaganda aimed at slandering Turkey and the Turks and at instigating enmity against our nation, is bound to collapse. As a matter of fact, we now see that those who had been content to believe in unilateral claims are beginning to have more objective views on the issue as more and more historic facts, based on documents, begin to surface. We will continue our determined efforts to enlighten the public on the issue. Armenian terror, which is walking hand in hand with international terrorism, and the Armenian propaganda supporting this terror should be viewed as a whole. Various West European and American press and news organs that supply material for this propaganda or are a tool of this propaganda are actually serving terror. Furthermore, we are sorry to observe various acts of deplorable irresponsibility such as the light sentences given to Armenian terrorists, or even their release, due to various domestic interests. [end recording]

Ulusu said that Turkey believes in the benefits of international cooperation on the issue, but that at this stage the most effective and reliable measures can only be taken by Turkey. He said: Everyone should know that we defintely will not allow the Armenian terrorists, who were based in Lebanon, to find a new base in the region.

In the last part of his news conference, Ulusu said the following:

[Begin recording] As a nation which has defeated domestic terror in a short time, we know how to deal with international terror. Our country, which now has a more stable and strong situation than in the past, is capable of invalidating the goals of those who hope to secure certain interests through Armenian terror. Those who have caused the death of many innocent people and the destruction of their families because of an imaginary cause should prepare to account for their bloody deeds. The 12 September operation has brought peace and tranquillity to the country. Our government has taken the necessary measures to eliminate the impasse faced by the country's economy, and is succeeding in keeping the rate of inflation, which had reached some 100 percent, below 30 percent. Our efforts on the issue will continue and there will be no return to the difficult days caused by excessive inflation.

With the submittal of the constitution to a referendum on 7 November 1982, another stage in the path to establishing a healthy democracy in Turkey will have been realized. [end recording]

Ulusu later replied to questions by journalists. In reply to a question, Ulusu said that activities aimed at uniting the various social security organizations, and at eliminating the differences in salaries paid by the various organizations, are continuing. Ulusu said that the situation of various social security organizations, which were faced with bankruptcy prior to the 12 September period, has been ameliorated and that they have reached (?self-sufficiency).

In reply to another question, Ulusu said that civilian and military vehicles will be manufactured at the installations to be built jointly by the Federal German Mercedes firm and the Turkish Motor Industry and Trade Corporation [TUMOSAN], which will cost some 25 billion lira with foreign capital of some DM200 million. Ulusu added that no one should be anxious about this partnership, which is based on national interests.

In reply to another question, Ulusu said that the government has not invited an observer or delegation to the country for the referendum. Recalling that Turkey is a free and democratic country, Ulusu said those who will arrive in Turkey to observe the referendum, no matter who they are, will be assisted.

Comments on Cyprus Issue

TA171621 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1130 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Press conference by Prime Minister Ulusu in Ankara on 16 Oct -- intercepted in progress]

[Excerpt] [Passage indistinct] Cyprus

At a time when the world witnesses grave international disputes without the slightest trace of a dialogue or an effective negotiating process between the interested parties, for the last eight years a stable tranquility prevails in Cyprus. The efforts to reach a final, peaceful solution to the Cyprus question [words indistinct] procedure and gained sustained momentum. We would like to hope that this positive development with regard to Cyprus will be reckoned as an historic opportunity by the two communities to find a just and lasting settlement to the Cyprus question without delay. We believe that a final solution to the Cyprus issue can be achieved if the existing negotiating process under the auspices of the UN secretary general and the agreed concrete framework are preserved. We appreciate the constructive and responsible attitude adopted by the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC].

The importance we attach to the economic and social development of the Turkish Cypriot community in a peaceful and secure [words indistinct] support to the TFSC in this respect is well known. During the recent visit to Ankara by the prime minister of the TFSC, Mr Cagatay, economic and financial issues within the framework of the draft budget for the 1983 fiscal year were considered. It was agreed that measures relating to the realization of the healthier economic order in north Cyprus should be implemented in the near future. The positive results we have obtained represent a new manifestation of the close cooperation and solidarity existing between Turkey and the Turnish Cypriot community.

Foreign Economic Relations

As I indicated earlier, Islamic and Arab countries continue to occupy the most important place in the external economic relations of Turkey. This fact at the same time highlights the role of Turkey in meeting the needs of the regional countries.

On the other hand, Turkey has started contributing effectively to the efforts of the regional countries in developing their industries and infra-structure. Turkish contractors and entrepreneurs have undertaken contracts in the Middle-East and North-Africa worth 15.3 billion dollars.

While entering these new markets and opening its economy, Turkey also wishes to further promote its existing trade with industrial countries. The increase in our commercial relations with the United States is indeed significant and testifies to our capability of exporting to industrialized countries in volume.

The problem of cotton yarn between Turkey and the EEC has been temporarily solved by an agreement signed on 30 July 1982. In this agreement, our government accepted the minimum price application to cotton yarn exported to the EEC, and the exporters associations have agreed to a restriction of 75,500 tons during 1982. This volume will be increased in 1982 and the rate of increase will be determined through negotiations.

On the other hand, the Community has decided to freeze our T-shirt exports to EEC markets as of July 28, 1982. This decision had an adverse effect on our textile industry.

This question has been taken up with due importance at the talks of Minister of State Mr Pasin held in Brussels on 23 and 24 September. Finally, it has been agreed that the Community phase out the restrictions according to formula, that the dialogue be continued in order to explore possibilities of working out a just and constructive solution to the textile problem, a sensitive issue for both sides, and that as a first step, representatives of the Turkish private sector discuss the question with the representatives of the Community. In this context, contacts by our government and the private sector are continuing.

We observe that the Community has adopted an attitude far beyond what can be justified by their difficulties in this respect and which to a certain extent we view with understanding. Our government sincerely hopes that this attitude, which not only contradicts the very philosophy of our association relationship but is also unjust, will be changed.

FRG LABOR OFFICIAL ARRIVES FOR TALKS ON WORKERS

TA180728 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0600 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] The labor minister of the state of Baden-Wurttemberg in the FRG, (Schiller), arrived in Turkey yesterday to begin talks with Turkish officials in Ankara today. Baden-Wurttemberg is an area in which a great number of Turkish guest workers are employed. The FRG official and the delegation accompanying him will meet with Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and Labor Minister Turhan Esener. The visiting official is expected to meet later with the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] leader as well as Turkish Confederation of Employer Unions [TISK] administrators. Various problems of Turkish workers employed in that area will be discussed during the meetings.

The FRG labor delegation will then proceed to the Kulu district of Konya to visit a factory built with funds from Turkish workers employed in the FRG. The delegation will depart Turkey on Thursday, 21 October, after visiting Istanbul.

U.S.-LICENSED FIRM TO SHIP TRACTORS TO IRAN

NC172357 Paris AFP in English 1026 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, Oct 17 (AFP) -- The Turkish Cumitas firm has won a contract to export 5,000 JG-2040 (79BG) type tractors to Iran, economic circles have reported here.

The first shipment is due to be forwarded to Iran this week, the delivery of the total being completed by May 1983, the sources added.

Cumitas, in agricultural machinery firm in southern Turkey, operates under licence from the U.S. John Deere agricultural machinery constructor.

Meanwhile, Turkey has exported 47,668 tons of wheat and barley worth about five million dollars mainly to Libya, and also to Jordan and Lebanon, in the space of a single month, economic sources said. Exports of wheat and barley will continue to these countries, the sources added.

Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu told a press conference this weekend that Turkey's exports to Islamic countries constituted 41 per cent of its total exports 1981 and 49.8 per cent during the first six months of this year.

EVREN, ASSEMBLY SPEAKER VIEW LEGISLATIVE PERIOD

TA151105 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has said that if the laws on elections and political parties that are to be prepared by the Consultative Assembly are not well adapted, various difficulties might arise.

General Evren received Assembly Speaker Sadi Irmak, who has been reelected, and the Chairmanship Council members at the Cankaya Mansion today. Speaking at the meeting, General Evren said that the Consultative Assembly went through a period of intense work and that this was appreciated by the entire country. Noting that new, important duties befall the Assembly during the new legislative period, General Evren said that if the laws on elections and political parties to be prepared during this period are not well adapted, various difficulties might arise. He expressed the belief that the Consultative Assembly will continue its activities successfully and he later congratulated the newly-elected members of the Chairmanship Council.

Irmak said that the Assembly will continue its activities with determination and firm belief in its work. Irmak added that the commonsense of the Turkish nation, tested many times in the past, will once again manifest itself at the referendum on the constitution. Noting that the laws on elections and political parties are very important, Irmak said the Assembly will exert extensive effort to prepare these two laws in a way that will best answer the country's needs. He added: Above all, the needs of the nation and the world situation will be taken into consideration. However, the great experiences of recent history, which are more important, will be borne in mind. We are charged with creating and preserving an atmosphere that will not drag the country to another pre-12 September period.

ASSEMBLY MEMBER ON FUTURE POLITICAL SYSTEM

[Text] Ankara, Oct 17 (AA) -- The armed forces would return to the barracks following the general elections and the "system Turkey seeks is not a political life without politics," announced in a written statement Sunday Tevfik Alpaslan, member of the Constitutional Committee of the Consultative Assembly.

The retired general went on to say: "It is quite evident now who had been and have been those persons who tried to divide the motherland, their collaborators, anarchists and terrorists who want to divide the state, provokers of sectarian strife, stagers of marches with red flags in their hands, killers of hundreds of citizens." Not only politicians were responsible for the events of the pre-Sep 12, 1980 period, he said, adding that Head of State Gen. Kenan Evren's recent speech in Afyon testified to that fact.

On the other hand, Alpaslan said those politicians who have not been investigated or convicted should not be banned from elections.

TA151521 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1440 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 15 Oct (AA) -- The Supreme Council of Coordination of Economic Affairs met Friday with Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu in Cahri and discussed the EEC decision to halt raising imports from Turkey and the problems related to EEC purchases of Turkish cotton yarn, teeshirts and readywear.

Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara, State Minister Sermet Refik Pasin, ministers of finance, trade, industry, energy, customs and transportation as well as state planning organization officials attended the meeting.

ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE DISCUSSING FISCAL BUDGET

TA151337 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] The Consultative Assembly Budget Planning Committee has begun to discuss the 1983 fiscal draft budget. Finance Minister Adnan Basar Kafaoglu has said that the 1983 fiscal draft budget aims at struggling against inflation, securing a continuity in export increases and solving unemployment in accordance with economic developments.

In a statement while presenting the draft budget to the committee, Kafaoglu said that the 1983 budget has been fixed at 2.6 trillion lira. He added that an inflation rate of 20 percent and a growth rate of 4.8 percent are foreseen during 1983. He noted that exports are expected to reach $7.1 billion, with an increase of 16.8 percent.

Noting that the draft budget aimed at a price increase of 20 percent, Kafaoglu said that employees' salaries will be increased in line with the price increases. Kafaoglu added that, with this in mind, the coefficient of civil servants' salaries has been increased from 30 to 34, the coefficient of fringe benefits has been increased from 8 to 9, and heating allowances have been increased from 3,500 lira to 5,000 lira.

Kafaoglu said that with the implementation of the amendments to the income tax and the financial balance tax, the government will decrease by 5 percent the overall tax burden of salaried persons. He added that additional net increases of some 20 percent are planned for travel expenses, children's allowances, family aid and others. He noted that the necessary legal arrangements will be submitted to the legislative organ as soon as possible to secure a net increase of some 20 percent in retirement salaries.

Kafaoglu said that of the public expenditures of some 2.6 trillion lira envisaged in the 1983 fiscal draft budget, 1.98 trillion will be secured from tax revenues, 150 billion from domestic loans and the remainder from various other sources. Noting that 60.26 percent of the investment planned during the 1983 fiscal year will be realized by the public sector, and 39.74 will be realized by the private sector, Kafaoglu added that more weight was given to the energy, transportation, communications, manufacturing, civil servant and village teachers' housing sectors by the public sector.

Kafaoglu said that more importance will be attached to measures aimed at reducing costs and increasing productivity in public economic enterprises as compared to last year, and that the bill prepared to enable enterprises to make a reassessment will soon be submitted to the legislative organs. Kafaoglu added that, thus, the capital market will be given an opportunity to function and develop.

Giving information on new arrangements to be made within the tax management during 1983, Kafaoglu said that tax declaration forms will be simplified, that the contents of conciliatory establishments will be expanded [as heard], and that bureaucratic procedures will be reduced. He added that measures will be taken to enable tax collection through banks.

Kafaoglu said that the financial policies to be pursued in 1983 aim at stability and eliminating obstacles blocking development. He expressed that belief that this draft budget will create new possibilities in the nation's economic and social life, and that it will speed up development in a stable atmosphere.

Also speaking at the committee, Chairman of the Budget and Planning Committee Tandogan Tokguz said that the committee will approach the draft budget with a totally technical method, and that it will take care to carry out its work with a full sense of responsibility, bearing in mind the historic duty it has undertaken.

Work on the draft budget will be concluded on 5 November. The draft will later be referred to the Consultative Assembly General Council where it will be discussed for 20 days. The draft budget will then be taken up at the other wing of the constituent assembly, which is the National Security Council. The 1983 fiscal budget will be implemented as of 1 January 1983.

PANEL DISCUSSION ON CONSTITUTION CANCELLED

SWISS FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR TALKS

AU151205 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 15 Oct 82 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Vienna -- Swiss Foreign Minister Pierre Aubert arrived for an official visit in Vienna on Thursday. The visit is part of the regular annual exchange of opinions between Austria and Switzerland. During the visit, international questions of mutual interest will be discussed, primarily the East-West situation in the light of the latest events in Poland, the policy of the neutrals and nonaligned countries at the Madrid CSCE followup conference, questions of the Council of Europe and the Austrian experiences as a member of the United Nations.

During his stay in Vienna, Pierre Aubert will have talks with his counterpart Pahr as well as with Chancellor Kreisky. He will also be received by President Kirchschlaeger for a talk. The Swiss guest was last in Vienna in September 1980. His first visit to Austria was shortly after he took office in 1978.

POLICE ARREST PAKISTANIS IN HIJACK PLOT

NC172124 Paris AFP in English 2032 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Amsterdam, Oct 17 (AFP) -- Dutch police today arrested 18 Pakistanis suspected of plotting to hijack a Pakistan International Airways (PIA) jetliner, a public prosecutor said here.

The prosecutor of the Amsterdam court, E.R. Manschot, said Dutch police made the arrests in Amsterdam and three other cities in raids on the homes of 16 of the suspects, one of whom was a woman.

The police were tipped off that a group of Pakistanis hostile to the current regime of President Mohammad Ziaul Haq were on the verge of highjacking a PIA airliner in either Amsterdam or London, Mr Manschot said.

The suspected plotters were probably members of the radical wing of the Pakistan People's Party, led by the son of the late Prime Minister Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, Mr Manschot added.

Mr Bhutto was executed for complicity in murder after General Ziaul Haq took power in a military coup.

As plotting a crime is not an indictable offence in the Netherlands, 16 of the suspects, who are Netherlands residents, were later released after being booked for illegal possession of arms. The two others, who were found to be residing illegally in the country, would be turned over to immigration police for expulsion, the prosecutor added.

The PIA jetliner scheduled to leave Amsterdam today for Karachi with a stopover in London departed after special security measures were taken, Mr Manschot added.

PRESIDENT OF EEC ON SUPPORT FOR LEBANON

NC181534 Beirut MONDAY MORNING in English 11-17 Oct 82 pp 42-46

[By Claude Khoury]

[Text] Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Elleman-Jensen, currently president of the 10-nation European Economic Community (EEC), has pledged that the EEC will continue to support efforts to bring about a "complete and prompt withdrawal of all Israeli forces, as well as the departure of Syrian and all other foreign forces" from Lebanon and to strengthen the authority of the Lebanese Government.

In an exclusive interview, Elleman-Jensen told MONDAY MORNING last week that the EEC's commitment to a strong and independent Lebanon was best demonstrated by the participation of some of its members in both the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut and the United Nations Interim Force in south Lebanon (UNIFIL). The continued presence of UNIFIL was an important factor for stability in the area, he said.

The September 23 accession of Amin al-Jumayyil to the presidency held out hopes of strengthening government authority and moving towards national reconciliation in Lebanon, although this appeared conditional on the removal of foreign forces from the country, the EEC president said. In written answers to MONDAY MORNING's questions, he also expressed the Ten's readiness to help in the momentous task of rebuilding Lebanon from the rubble.

Elleman-Jensen, a liberal member of the Danish Folketing (parliment), welcomed President Ronald Reagan's Mideast peace propoals as "an important opportunity for peaceful progress on the Palestinian question." He also described the Arab peace strategy outlined at the Fes summit meeting in September as "an important development," and reitereated the EEC's call for a similar expression of a will to peace on the part of Israel."

The Reagan proposals call for Palestinian "self-government" in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan. The Fes plan stipulated an Israeli withdrawal from all territories occupied in 1967 and the creation of an independent Palestinian state. It implicitly recognizes Israel's right to exist by proposing "Security Council guarantees (for) peace among all states of the region, including the independent Palestinian state."

While the Reagan proposals do not foresee any role for the Palestine Liberation Organization in peace negotiations, the Fes plan reaffirms the Arabs' commitment to the PLO as "the sole legitimate representative" of the Palestinian people.

The EEC chairman expected intensive diplomatic activity in the coming months to see whether common ground between the two plans could be developed. The Ten will pursue their efforts to "help reconcile the parties' conflicting aspirations... (and) bring differing views closer to each other," he said.

Elleman-Jensen held talks with the head of the PLO's Political Department, Faruq Qadumi, in New York on October 1 in the first high-level EEC-PLO meeting since the PLO's August evacuation from Beirut under a U.S.-negotiated agreement. He said he told Qaddumi, who is the PLO's equivalent of a foreign minister, that "if the PLO will pursue a political course, then the Ten are prepared to expand their contacts with the organization."

In the EEC chairman's view, one event that will have "profound political repercussions" in the Middle East is last month's massacre of Palestinian civilians in refugee camps in Beirut, while the city was under Israeli occupation. "History tells us that tragedies have brought people together in a common attempt to avoid recurrences," Elleman-Jensen said. "We must all pray for this to happen in Lebanon."

Lebanon and the Ten

I asked Elleman-Jensen how the EEC proposed to help Lebanon's new President Amin al-Jumayyil achieve his stated aim of freeing the country of all foreign forces and what, in his opinion, were the chances of an early pullout by Israeli and Syrian forces from Lebanon.

"The Ten have often spoken in favor of a united and independent Lebanon," he said.

"We firmly believe that the election of Mr Amin al-Jumayyil as president of Lebanon holds out hopes of a strengthening of central authority in Lebanon and of moving towards national reconciliation.

"However," he added, "progress in this direction seems conditional upon the complete and prompt withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Lebanon, as well as the departure of Syrian and all other foreign forces, except those which may be authorized by the Government of Lebanon. The Ten will continue to support any efforts to this end.

"Let me also recall that member countries of the Ten participate in the multinational force in Beirut and in UNIFIL. These forces bear witness to the attachment of the Ten to the strengthening of the authority of the Lebanese Government."

Troops of the two EEC members, France and Italy, together with the United States, make up the peacekeeping force sent to Beirut first to supervise the PLO evacuation in August and again to support the Lebanese authorities and protect civilians following the camp massacre.

UNIFIL was sent to south Lebanon following Israel's 1978 invasion of the area, and the mandate of the force -- made up of contingents from, among others, EEC members France, Ireland, the Netherlands and Italy -- will be up for renewal at the UN Security Council on October 19.

The international force was brushed aside by the Israelis when they invaded Lebanon on June 6, and Tel Aviv, which is demanding "appropriate security arrangements" for the south before it agrees to withdraw from Lebanon, is said to oppose extension of the force's mandate.

But the Lebanese authorities are in favor of keeping the international troops in the southern region, Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan told UNIFIL Commander Major General William Callaghan last week.

Elleman-Jensen, speaking for the Ten, took a view similar to that of the Beirut government:

"The continued presence in Lebanon of UNIFIL is in our view an important element for stabilizing the situation in the area," he said.

As to the humanitarian problems created by the Israeli invasion, and efforts to rebuild war-shattered Lebanon -- a task which Lebanese officials have estimated will cost at least 12 billion dollars -- Elleman-Jensen said: "The Ten continue to assist in the relief operations in Lebanon.

"We have also expressed willingness to assist in the reconstruction of the country."

War and Peace in the Middle East

This summer's fast-moving developments in Lebanon have reaffirmed the EEC's view that a comprehensive settlement is needed to bring peace to the Middle East, the Danish minister told me.

"The tragic events in Lebanon are but the latest element in a chain of violence and counter-violence in the Middle East. These events have in the opinion of the Ten once again demonstrated that only through a comprehensive settlement between all parties concerned can the region enjoy true peace and lasting stability.

"In the view of the Ten, the basic principles on which such a settlement should be based are those contained in the Venice declaration of June 13, 1980 -- namely, security for all states in the region, including Israel's right to exist, and justice for all peoples, including the right of self-determination for the Palestinians with all that this implies. Acceptance of these principles would imply mutual recognition by all the parties involved.

"President Reagan's new Middle East initiative contained in his speech of September 1 offers an important opportunity for peaceful progress on the Palestinian question and a step towards the reconciliation of the parties' conflicting aspirations. The Ten also consider the statement adopted by Arab heads of state and government at Fes on September 9 to be an important development. The Ten have called for a similar expression of a will to peace on the part of Israel.

"President Reagan's proposals and the statement adopted at Fes contain points of potential convergence, although we recognize that there are also marked differences between them. We expect intensive diplomatic activity in the coming months with a view to seeing whether common ground between the two sets of principles can be developed.

"We think that a hopeful basis has now been established on which to proceed. That is why the Ten have urgently appealed to all parties to seize the present opportunity to initiate a process that may lead to a comprehensive peace settlement.

"When I met with Mr Qaddumi in New York on October 1, I pointed out that the Palestinian people may never get a better opportunity than at present to be rewarded for a courageous gesture. By this I referred to the need for a clearer and more explicit statement by the PLO concerning Israel's right to existence and security."

Since the EEC welcomed both the Reagan initiative and the Fes strategy, I asked Elleman-Jensen whether it intended to try and bring the American and Arab viewpoints closer together.

Without specifying a bridging role between the U.S. and the Arabs, he spoke of a generally conciliatory approach by the Europeans.

"Since the adoption of the Venice declaration in June 1980 the Ten have pursued an active diplomatic role in order to help reconcile the parties' conflicting aspirations, on the basis of what we consider basically a balanced approach," he said.

"We will continue these efforts and do our utmost to bring differing views closer to each other," he added.

The EEC chairman skirted questions on whether the Fes plan's implicit recognition of Israel represented a breakthrough in the Arab-Israeli conflict and on the Ten's readiness to support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state. He also declined to give an opinion on the desirability of an international conference to solve the Middle East conflict, saying this had not been discussed by the Ten.

I asked Elleman-Jensen if the EEC supported Jordan's Palestinian-Jordanian federation.

"The Ten are convinced that King Husayn has an important role to play in the efforts towards a comprehensive settlement," he answered without further elaboration.

Political PLO

Elleman-Jensen's October 1 talks with Qaddumi were the latest in a series of meetings between EEC officials and PLO leaders. Although EEC member states -- with the exception of Greece -- do not formally recognize the PLO, they have called for the PLO to be "associated" with peace efforts, and there has been some speculation that the Europeans, or at least some of them, could play a key role in bringing about a U.S.-PLO dialogue.

The American Government says it will not talk to the PLO unless and until it unequivocably recognizes Israel's right to exist.

I asked Elleman-Jensen to clarify the EEC's position on the PLO and to enlarge on his talks with Qaddumi.

"We find that the role of the PLO in a negotiated settlement of the Middle East conflict is an important one. When I met Mr Qaddumi in New York on October 1, I pointed out that if the PLO will pursue a political course then the Ten are prepared to expand their contacts with the organization.

"My meeting with Mr Qaddumi was a political signal from the Ten. We want the PLO to show willingness to choose political means. We think the PLO has already given proof of this through the Fes declaration and we want them to continue to pursue this line. Our attitude to the PLO is based on the clear expectation that the Palestinian people will pursue its objectives by political means."

Following his meeting with Qaddumi, Elleman-Jensen had said that expanded ties would not include EEC recognition of the PLO as the sole representative of the Palestinian people. Such recognition, he had said, would be "contrary to the traditions of a democratic country" because the PLO was an organization -- not a state -- and because the Palestinians had not expressed their preference in a vote.

The EEC chairman expressed revulsion at the Beirut massacre. But he suggested this event, tragic as it was, might offer an opportunity for peace in the future.

He put it like this: "We were all as human beings shocked and revolted at this barbaric act against the Palestinian refugees. I believe that the massacre will also have profound political repercussions for developments in the area.

"History tells us that tragedies have brought people together in a common attempt to avoid recurrences.

"We must all pray for this to happen in Lebanon also."

SWITZERLAND'S AUBERT ON POLAND, CSCE CONFERENCE

[Excerpts] The serious situation in Poland will undoubtedly also affect the negotiations of the Madrid CSCE followup conference which is to be resumed on 9 November after an interruption of over half a year. This was stated [at a press conference] in Vienna yesterday by Swiss Foreign Minister Pierre Aubert, who said that he was sharing his host's -- Willibald Pahr's -- concern over the process of detente. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German on 16-17 Oct 82, page two, cites Aubert as having said in this context "that it would not do to hush up the 'brutal violation of human rights' in Poland and not to talk about it in Madrid, since Poland after all, is one of the signatories of the UN Charter and of the Helsinki Agreement and thus is committed to respect human rights." Nevertheless, Aubert went on to say, Switzerland and Austria want to do their duty and go to extreme lengths to exhaust all opportunities for dialogue. However, their aim is not to sign a document at any cost, he said. The importance of this conference, he declared, lies in the fact that it is Europe's only forum where questions of security can be discussed. The only tabled document, No 39, as is known, is an initiative by the neutrals and nonaligned countries, in whose drafting Austria and Switzerland played a prominent role.

Aubert named as another topic of his Vienna talks the endeavors to have the Council of Europe play a more active role. No other institution has adopted anything like the European human rights convention and set up a human rights tribunal.

On Thursday Aubert had a first working talk with his Austrian counterpart and a 1-hour talk with Chancellor Kreisky, primarily about the Middle East and Poland. Yesterday he continued his working talks. At noon he attended an official luncheon given in his honor by Pahr, and called on President Kirchschlaeger in the afternoon. Commenting on pending bilateral problems, he said that they were so insignificant that they were not discussed at the minister's level but merely by civil servants of the two countries.

CSSR'S GUSTAV HUSAK PLANS VISIT IN NOVEMBER

IRANIAN AIRLINE PILOT DEFECTS IN VIENNA

AU181456 Vienna KURIER in German 18 Oct 82 p 14

[Text] An Iranian aircraft captain defected in Vienna on Saturday. As has been learned from Iranian exile circles, 34-year old Kehyan Djahan Fakhr is going to apply for political asylum today. The pilot, who is in a hideout at present, explained his step by referring to the mass executions by the regime of terror in his home country.

Fakhr took advantage of the regular "Iran Air" flight: Tehran-Istanbul-Vienna-Frankfurt-London, to defect during the stopover in Vienna. As was learned at the Vienna-Schwechat Airport on Sunday, 75 passengers on the plane left the Boeing 727 at 1243 hours on Saturday, among them presumably also the Iranian captain, who did not report for duty on Sunday morning. Thus, the scheduled flight to London via Frankfurt was cancelled and the aircraft was rerouted to Istanbul without its captain and with 35 passengers aboard.

At Schwechat Airport, no one from the "Iran Air" Company could be contacted on Sunday afternoon. And the Iranian Embassy also denied any detailed knowledge of the incident. The Austrian Interior Ministry at this stage has confined itself to waiting until the pilot contacts Austrian authorities.

NETHERLANDS

MINISTER SAYS UNIFIL MANDATE MUST BE CHANGED

PM181153 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 12 Oct 82 p 3

[Unnamed "own correspondent" report: "UNIFIL Participation Depends on Conditions"]

[Text] Schiphol -- Outgoing Netherlands Defense Minister van Mierlo considers that certain conditions will have to be fulfilled if the Netherlands is to participate in the UNIFIL force in southern Lebanon for longer than the 2 months to which the cabinet has agreed. Lebanon must create the conditions under which responsible help can be given; the UNIFIL mandate must be altered to fit the new situation and foreign troops (Syrian and Israeli) must withdraw, the defense minister said at Schiphol Airport after returning from a week's visit to Lebanon.

The visit convinced Van Mierlo of the necessity of temporarily extending Netherlands participation in the peacekeeping force for a further 2 months. A withdrawal would wipe out all the plans currently being worked on to help the country out of its present difficulties. All the plans assume that the UNIFIL presence will continue for a number of months, the minister said. On Friday, [15 October] Van Mierlo will brief the cabinet on these plans. This afternoon he will hold consultations with the Second Chamber Foreign Affairs Committee, and on Thursday there will be a debate in the Chamber.

In Lebanon, Van Mierlo held talks with President Amin al-Jumayyil and U.S. negotiator Morris Draper. He said that he had made it clear to both of them that it would be a great mistake to take the continued presence of the UNIFIL forces for granted. Van Mierlo wants to see certain conditions fulfilled because, he said, it is being too easily assumed that the UNIFIL force can continue on the present basis with its present composition. He considers that the mandate must be changed to fit the new objective. If this is to be the preservation of order and security in southern Lebanon, the UNIFIL force must be given greater powers, Van Mierlo said. There must also be further discussion of the rule that infiltrators have their confiscated arms returned to them after 24 hours.

Van Mierlo was full of praise for the work of the Netherlands UNIFIL battalion of around 800 men; the cornerstone of the peace force, as the minister put it. He said that the picture of a battalion demoralized by the Israeli invasion was completely untrue. The battalion is once again convinced of the usefulness and necessity of its work. Not being able to intervene during the Israeli presence was irksome, but otherwise order was well maintained, especially the exclusion of Major Haddad's Christian militia, which is hated and feared in the region, Van Mierlo said. If the UNIFIL force were withdrawn, Haddad would move directly into the vacuum -- something which the population views with alarm, the minister said.

KOHL ADDRESSES BERLIN SENAT, PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Berlin, 18 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl has assured the Berlin Senat that the subsidies for air traffic passengers to and from Berlin will continue at the present level. The former government had wanted to gradually reduce the subsidies. This met with strong criticism in Berlin. The federal chancellor made this announcement at a special session of the Berlin Senat which he attended today to mark his inaugural visit to Berlin as the new head of government.

It was also agreed that a conference of top representatives of major firms would be held on 11-12 December with the chancellor to discuss investments in and for Berlin. The conference, which is intended to help safeguard the dramatically diminishing number of industrial jobs in Berlin, had been planned by the previous Federal Government.

Kohl, speaking at a press conference in Schoeneberg Town Hall this afternoon, stressed that Berlin must be regarded as a national responsibility. It must also be made clear to the average citizen that the city is a seismoghaph of political and historical developments and a piece of the future. It must be made clear to the citizens to a greater degree that Berliners are not to blame for their situation, but that it is a result of German policy and history. Kohl announced that during his international contacts, he would increasingly draw attention to the city's special situation. This also applied with regard to the world economy.

The federal chancellor expressed a desire to keep anything connected with Berlin out of Bonn party politics. They must succeed in making everything that was done for Berlin a matter for joint action.

Kohl announced that in the future he would pay more private visits to Berlin, the birthplace of his wife Hannelore, who was accompanying him. Whether his desire to also visit East Berlin from there could be arranged in his new post remained open. He would, however, regard it as a "painful restriction" of his personal freedom of movement if he, "as a German, could not go to Germany." The federal chancellor stressed at the same time that his government is proceeding in its relations with the East from realistic positions. Particularly in relations with the [word indistinct -- presumably GDR], it is important not only to observe the existing treaties but to fill them with life.

Governing Mayor Richard von Weizsaecker (CDU) thanked Kohl before the press for having paid the first of his "visits in Germany" to Berlin. During their talks they discussed not only basic issues but specific day-to-day policy matters. Berlin's current main problems -- the job situation and economic future -- were the main subjects of the Senat session with the chancellor and of a 90-minute conference with representatives of employers, trade unions and parliamentary groups, Weizsaecker said. Kohl earlier met with officials of the CDU in the Town Hall.

During the evening, Kohl visited the Kurfuerstendamm and afterwards visited the archives of state porcelain manufacture recently exchanged by the GDR in Schloss Charlottenburg. There followed a reception in the palace given by the governing mayor for Kohl, who leaves Berlin later this evening.

On his arrival at Schoeneberg Town Hall at about 1330 GMT, Kohl was greeted by approximately 100 people. Many welcomed him with applause, but there was also some booing. This was repeated when Kohl later appeared on the Town Hall balcony.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON FDP PRESIDIUM SESSION

DW181409 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 15 Oct 82

["Excerpts" from interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and foreign minister, by reporter Friedrich Nowottny in Bonn; date not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Genscher] We had a discussion of several hours [in the FDP Presidium] and achieved a number of results. Colleagues Bangemann, Graf Lambsdorff and Baum were given the task of working out a document for the national party congress on the political aims of the Free Democrats. Then we discussed what our actions would be at the party congress on the coalition problem. Everyone present indicated that he would not demand that the decision to form a coalition with the CDU be overturned at the congress.

[Question] How about the FDP chairmanship -- will you run again?

[Answer] Yes, I intend to be a candidate at the national party congress. I explained that to my colleagues today. We discussed it very frankly. Colleague Ronneburger expressed his intention to run as an opposition candidate for federal FDP chairmanship at the Berlin FDP congress.

[Question] Candidate to run for the chairmanship? How will the party accept all this? Hasn't your renewed candidacy put the party to a new test of internal strength?

[Answer] I supported the formation of a coalition with the CDU/CSU once the old coalition had come to an end on 17 September. I consider it necessary to place this decision before the national party congress so that this decision can be confirmed, and that the one who was and is heading the party in this situation can face the decision of the party congress. I consider it absolutely correct, however, for an opposing candidate to have been nominated because criticism has been expressed. Those who expressed the criticism must have an alternative regarding the person of the chairman. I think this is the proper opportunity for the party congress delegates to make a decision. It will be easy to decide because both candidates agree that the decision to form a coalition with the CDU/CSU will not be rescinded.

[Question] Didn't Mr Ronneburger fail to vote for the new FDP/CDU/CSU alliance?

[Answer] He did, and he has never denied it. Now that the decision has been made, however, he believes it ought to be supported.

Ronneburger on Candidacy

DW181443 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2335 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Interview with FDP Bundestag Deputy Uwe Ronneburger by reporter Illert in Bonn on 15 October -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Ronneburger] We are in agreement that the coalition which has now been formed will continue and that there will be no turning back. The federal chairman has decided to run again for candidate, and for the sake of clear positions I decided to oppose him to give those party groupings which are currently irritated the opportunity to express their will.

[Question] If you should win the election, what would your program be like? How would you explain the FDP's position to the voters? How would you explain the FDP, which forms a coalition with the CDU/CSU but which has a chairman who is very reserved regarding this coalition?

[Answer] I don't believe it will be difficult at all to make our party's own position clear in a coalition. This was the case in the old coalition and it will be the same in the current coalition, only in different fields because political decisions will over? on different points now and not on the same points as before.

[Question] If Hans-Dietrich Genscher wins a slight majority at the Berlin party congress, how do you see your own future? How do you see the future of those party members who will vote for you? Will there be a split or will the party remain together?

[Answer] We will remain together. I will do what I can to make the Berlin party congress one of integration, not separation.

STENBACK, GENSCHER TALK ON CSCE, DETENTE

LD181628 Hamburg DPA in German 1511 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 18 Oct (DPA) -- Finnish Foreign Minister Par Stenback arrived in the Federal Republic today for a 2-day visit. During lunch with his German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Stenback stated that there is no feasible alternative to detente.

The Finnish foreign minister spoke of his desire for detente, particularly in connection with the CSCE followup conference in Madrid, which is to be resumed on 9 November. The prospects for this conference were the main subject of the first discussion between the ministers this morning. Genscher stressed in this respect West Germany's conviction that talks must continue and aim for success despite the strain resulting from circumstances in Poland, according to a Foreign Ministry spokesman. The aim will continue to be a "substantial mandate for a disarmament conference in Europe."

At the start of the talks, Genscher praised Finnish policy as a factor of constancy and stability in Europe and called German-Finnish relations "excellent."

The extensive exchange of views also covered East-West relations, including economic relations in particular and questions of arms control talks. The Middle East situation and the state of the Namibia issue were also discussed.

A Finnish spokesman also announced that Minister Stenback underlined his concern at the weakening of the United Nations in settling disputes. Finland and the rest of the Nordic states were seeking means of reestablishing the United Nations' role as envisaged by the Charter.

Stenback and Genscher will meet again tomorrow morning for a working breakfast. The Finnish foreign minister will then pay a courtesy visit to Federal President Karl Carstens. In the afternoon, Foreign Minister Stenback flies to Hamburg, where he will address the Overseas Club.

In his luncheon speech, Genscher praised the steady contribution by Finland's policy of neutrality toward peace and political stability in Europe and in turn, took the opportunity of describing the new Federal Government's concept of continuity. "We shall continue in the future to aim for dialogue and not confrontation with the East European states," Genscher said. Real detente between East and West is only possible, however, on the basis of a military balance at the lowest possible level. Genscher stressed the high degree of agreement between the two governments, "especially on the central issues of safeguarding peace." This included both talks on medium-range missiles and efforts to seek better ways of solving conflicts in the Third World.

CHEYSSON HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE IN TUNIS

AB151311 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1110 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Press conference by French External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson in Tunis on 13 October]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Minister, What was the topic of your discussion with the chairman of the PLO Executive Committee?

[Answer] I am here on an official visit to the Tunisian Government. This visit follows many others and also precedes many others because the Tunisian prime minister himself will visit Paris within a few days. The PLO chairman, who has just returned from a very important journey, kindly agreed to receive me. As you know, we seize every opportunity to meet with the PLO leaders. I personally had the honor to receive the members of the Executive Committee several times in Paris. I met with Mr Qaddumi in New York. I have just met with Chairman 'Arafat. We discuss the same topics each time.

First of all, the fate of the Palestinians. The Palestinian civilians [words indistinct] in the greatest penury and even under some threat. This was the first topic we discussed and this is not surprising. The PLO chairman is first of all responsible for the lives of his compatroits. He asked me questions concerning what our contingent within the multinational force can do as well as the role of the UN International Force in Lebanon. This occupied a large part of our discussions.

Second, we naturally talked about the possible and imaginable developments which the PLO chairman placed within the framework of the declaration adopted at the Fes summit. He wanted to know how I and the French envisage the possible followups of this Fes summit. This led me to compare the Fes summit declaration with other declarations such as the Reagan declaration, which constitutes a very incomplete overture as far as the French are concerned, as well as with the French-Egyptian proposal to the Security Council which contains -- as Chairman 'Arafat has admitted -- all the principles which could lead to a settlement. These were the topics of our discussion.

[Question] Did you discuss Chairman 'Arafat's possible visit to Paris?

[Answer] No!

[Question] What is the French position concerning the mopping up operations now going on in Palestine?

[Answer] First of all, we do not accept the expression "mopping up." Because right from the beginning we have had some fears concerning this plan, we intervened jointly with our two partners of the multinational force and told the Lebanese authorities that we could not, even passively, contribute help in or be present in mopping up operations. There have been operations by the Lebanese Armed Forces. We asked the Lebanese authorities to give us every assurance concerning the conditions in which the arrests were being made. We have been assured that the aliens in an irregular situation would be expelled to their countries of origin. We have also been given assurances concerning the treatment of those being detained. Our ambassadors have the right to visit them.

[Question] Mr Minister, do you now feel that the PLO is definitively engaged on the path of a political settlement which could lead to the recognition of the State of Israel?

[Answer] I would have like to say yes because as you know, this has always been the French theme: that in the very serious circumstances which followed the invasion of Lebanon, there is a chance that the PLO will take the path of a political settlement and adopt political channels; I cannot yet say yes because to take the path of a political settlement, all the partners must reach an agreement.

I am not revealing any secrets by telling you that at the moment, the most heavily armed and most powerful partner in the field -- that is Israel -- is not showing any sign of adopting the path of a political settlement.

[Question] Was this 2-hour meeting with Mr 'Arafat in the PLO chairman's residence in Tunis designed by France to give some more comfort to the Palestinian leader?

[Answer] If Mr 'Arafat was comforted by anything, it was by the authority which his organization demonstrated during the tragic events I have just recalled, because this authority was indeed demonstrated in the struggle as well as the very difficult decisions which had to be made in Beirut and the discipline with which these decisions were executed. These are the things which give comfort to Mr 'Arafat's authority and not the visit of an external affairs minister.

JOBERT HOLDS TALKS WITH IRAQI OIL MINISTER

[Text] Paris, Oct, 18 (AFP) -- Iraqi Oil Minister Qasim Ahmad Taqi and French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert today began three days of meetings here of the mixed Franco-Iraqi commission, touching on possible French financial help for Baghdad.

Iraq is France's major arms client, but future cooperation is being hampered by Baghdad's growing financial difficulties, and particularly by Iraq's war with Iran, which is forcing Iraq to cut back its oil exports.

French sources said Mr Taqi stressed his wish to restore oil shipments to France, which until 1980 made Paris its second-biggest oil client. But these shipments have since dwindled to only 2.3 percent of France's total oil imports.

They added that the ministers also discussed nuclear cooperation.

The two sides have been holding talks, albeit with steadily-dwindling enthusiasm, on the possible reconstruction by the French of a new nuclear research center in Iraq following the destruction of the Tammuz nuclear plant by Israel in June last year.

LE MONDE VIEWS OUTCOME OF AFRICAN SUMMIT

[Philippe Decraene dispatch: "The End of the Kinshasa Summit"]

[Text] Kinshasa -- "This region has made it possible to gently reintroduce Hissein Habre into the circuit," a French delegation member told us on Saturday, 9 October, at the end of the ninth conference of French and African heads of state. Development and Cooperation Minister Jean-Pierre Cot told us shortly before the reading of a final communique, which was almost completely devoid of interest: "After the speech at the solemn opening session had been delivered, it was a very skillful move to cancel all plenary sessions and replace them with a series of informal meetings aimed at keeping the discussing of serious affairs away from the indiscretions of the press ...or those of the ministers...." In short, some wholehearted supporters of the French ideas regarded it as "great skill," "the most perfect expression of summit diplomacy."

During the press conference which they gave at the People's Palace on Saturday, the French president and his Zairian host -- who was triumphant -- accompanied by the Rwandan president, showed great satisfaction. "The historic originality of Franco-African relations expresses the originality of this conference," Mr Mitterrand explained good-naturedly and expressed the view that "relations between France and Africa have never been so cordial." Nonetheless, it is not very likely that the experiment of these two crazy days characterized by a series of cancellations, postponements, long waits, then sudden adjournments, will be repeated soon.

Instead, there is an inevitable move toward narrowing the family circle. The next Franco-African summit, scheduled to take place in France in 1983, should clearly see that "kernel" of French-speaking countries limited to itself once again. Officially, people were pleased with the meeting. They debated with pleasure, showed a touching concern for constant harmony but, nonetheless, it is clear that the French-speaking countries were troubled by the fact that it was no longer an intimate meeting. "If you try to embrace too widely, you embrace badly," the French president said.

It does not seem that much progress was made in reconciling adversaries and supporters of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic [SDAR], which is a real bone of contention among the OAU members. "We will go to Tripoli," President Mobutu reiterated, "but Zaire does not regard the SDAR as an independent state.... Therefore if the SDAR is present, my delegation will be forced to leave the conference hall." And on Saturday morning, the Zairian president had stated on the subject of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, in referring to his statements prior to the Kinshasa meeting: "He says terrible things."

Although Mr Hissein Habre undoubtedly held the limelight, carefully cultivating his image as "a man of the desert," avoiding the press in order to meet it more effectively later, Chad's problems nonetheless remain completely unsolved. Zaire, which intends to play a role in overcoming the Chadian tragedy, has begun to advance its pawns by inviting Ndjamena's new "strongman" to visit Kinshasa. "I did not impose him, I invited him because it was necessary for Chad to be present here," the great director of the Kinshasa ballet subtly explained, and he is the one to draw immediate benefit from this high mass celebrated with an external piety which was too ostentatious to be experienced in an atmosphere of truly sincere communion.

Receiving the press at a very late hour of the night, Mr Hissein Habre stated: "It is the actual existence of power which makes the government." His remarks were clearly aimed at France, which for several weeks has made no secret of the fact that it wants a real cabinet to be formed in the Chadian capital. Then, while saying for the benefit of his peers that "the Kinshasa summit has shouldered its responsibilities," he immediately stressed what he regards as the limited character of the official recognition which has just been granted to him, stating: "The people give us legitimacy. We have had that legitimacy for a long time and we will keep it until the people withdraw it from us...." That is one way of giving a public reply to certain French objections to him which the 45-minute meeting he had with the French president possibly did not completely dispel.

A Few Conclusions

Aside from the expressions of official satisfaction which are traditional in such circumstances, aside from the personal triumph for General Mobutu, a few conclusions can already be drawn from that conference: First, the French and Africans are more determined than ever to limit themselves to interstate relations, irrespective of any political, or what is more, personal consideration: The cases of Chad and Zaire constitute two striking illustrations of that.

In addition, in Kinshasa France described the main outlines of its African policy on the basis of general principles defined at UNESCO in Paris during the conference devoted to the least developed countries. It also reassured it French-speaking interlocutors on the consequences of the reform of the Cooperation Ministry, explaining, with praiseworthy skill, that although that increased the external relations minister's authority, the preferential relations between France and its former African colonies had nonetheless been preserved.

But the ambiguity of the Kinshasa meeting's results can be most accurately assessed by noting the Africans' extraordinary expectations from the French Government. "France is irreplaceable," its partners say in essence, to the great satisfaciton of the French president and those accompanying him. But faced with the scale of such hopes, are the French not inevitably doomed to diappoint those who glorify them?

MAUROY ON GOVERNMENT 'SOLIDARITY,' ELECTIONS

PM181029 Paris LE MATIN in French 12 Oct 82 pp 3-6

[Interview with French Premier Pierre Mauroy by Didier Buffin, Alexis Liebaert, Guy Claude Pedriel -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] [PS First Secretary] Lionel Jospin has reminded the PCF that support for government policy cannot be "selective." In the final analysis, ought the majority parties to support your policy without demur?

[Answer] [PCF Secretary General] Georges Marchais told his party Central Committee meeting that progress has been made in the past 16 months but that "we have only just started moving toward the objectives chosen by the French people." That is what I have constantly said. He added that he did not want "either a headlong flight into sterile extremes, back-pedaling under pressure or the abandonment of the objectives chosen by the French people." He called for "the continutation, on the basis of the actual situation, of a policy in keeping with the joint pledges made." That is what I have constantly said and done.

I require government solidarity to be respected and I ensure that it is. As head of government, I would not fail to intervene if the slightest difficulty arose. I would like to add that in any government action there are easy and popular decisions and others which are difficult and unpopular. Neither the members of the government nor the majority can make do with supporting the former and criticizing the latter.

[Question] So you fully support Lionel Jospin's remarks?

[Answer] Our statements are based on the same analysis.

[Question] Do you set a limit on majority solidarity? For instance, would you think it natural if the Communist deputies did not vote for the social security bill?

[Answer] Things have not come to that: What I think is natural is that there should be discussions and criticisms. We had discussions within the government, then a decision was taken in the cabinet under the president's authority. The deputies are not there to say "bravo" automatically. Nonetheless, it is clearly understood that a solution must be found to the social security deficit. We have made proposals. The debate can remain open provided that the aim is to really reduce the deficit. It is impossible to say yes to everything which increases it and no to everything which reduces it.

[Question] By-elections and the canton elections have shown some disaffection among your voters. How do you view the forthcoming municipal elections?

[Answer] By-elections are still showing a degree of disaffection. They do not emulate the conditions of a major political campaign like the one which will take place in March. In addition, canton elections often show choices which conflict with those made during presidential or parliamentary elections.

I am not in the least pessimistic about the municipal elections. Six years ago the left won a victory which you yourselves described as exceptional. Young, high-quality teams were then installed. They have ensured high-quality administration in many cases. The voters will decide primarily on the basis of that situation. But, of course the national situation also affects that type of election: We are implementing a freeze policy which is increasingly well understood and is producing its first results, and they will be extended. In March we will have emerged from this situation. Provided we pursue our policy with the necessary determination to maintain good price indexes and to improve the economic situation, I am convinced that the French people will have no reason to penalize the government, still less the leftwing teams which will have proved their competence.

[Question] As leader of the majority, do you think it is important for Socialists and Communists to be together on united lists, or will you allow them to oppose each other in the first round instead?

[Answer] Look at the example of Lille: I am mayor of a big city. For 6 years I have been providing an administration with a leftwing union commune team and in good conditions. Naturally, I intend to continue, and I am going to head a united list again from the first round.

FITERMAN ON POLAND, PCF ROLE IN GOVERNMENT

[Unattributed report: "The Government's Effort Is Part of the Will To Develop France"]

[Excerpt] Transport Minister Charles Fiterman was the Europe 1 Press Club's guest yesterday evening. He was questioned for 1 hour on the main current problems.

The Communist minister was first questioned on Poland. He said he was "concerned by what is happening as a Communist, because it is a socialist country and, as a democrat, I am concerned with freedom and the necessary link between freedom and socialism and, as a Frenchman, who has ties of friendship with that country and is concerned about peace and security in Europe."

Then he continued: "I am convinced that it is up to the Poles themselves to face the problems and find solutions through national accord among all the country's forces for economic and social recovery, for resuming the path of extending democratic freedom, achieving the release of the detainees and the restoration of basic freedoms, and promoting the reforms which Poland needs."

He then condemned the attempts by the RPR and UDF to exploit this question in a petty political way.

Turning to the PCF Central Committee's recent meeting, he expressed the view that the Communists' assessment indicates that major, positive decisions have been taken by the government, progress recorded and results obtained and, at the same time, there is anxiety about the difficulties. "The Communists fully maintain their determination," he added. "Georges Marchais said: We are continuing. There is therefore no actual, planned or pending change of line. We reaffirm our intention to participate in the government.... The Communists have decided to bring about progress in the people's movement and put forward proposals to steer the country out of the crisis."

Questioned on the statements made by Lionel Jospin regarding the PCF, Charles Fiterman described them as "more balanced and moderate than people have said." With regard to government solidarity, the minister explained that "the government has rules which enable the ministers to contribute to the collective drafting of proposals. The president then has the power to arbitrate. Solidarity in action is vital, the government cannot act with broken rains."

PS' JOSPIN ON ECONOMIC POLICY, LEFT UNION

["J. M. C." report: "The PS' Explanation Campaign"]

[Excerpts] Mr. Lionel Jospin launched the PS mobilization and explanation campaign to support the left's policy at a press conference on Thursday, 7 October. "We think we have reached a key point in our action," the PS first secretary stressed, before adding: "The success of the government's economic and social plan is a decisive issue for the country."

Mr Jospin explained that public opinion is "still hesitant" and that the PS' intervention should lead it to rally to the government program. "If we succeed in persuading the protagonists in economic life to commit themselves to the present process of reducing inflation, it may be a turning point in the country's economic history," Mr. Jospin also said before pointing out: "The aim is to bring about a real reconciliation between the left and the economy."

Questioned on relations between the Socialists and Communists and on [PCF Politbure member] Andre Lajoinie's recent statements, the PS first secretary stressed: "The debate must not stagnate. The PCF's proposals must be examined for their intrinsic value and we must debate them with it. But it is clear that saying 'all you have to do is...' cannot work very well. For there is no miraculous solution and we must therefore tell the PCF: It is necessary to have a comprehensive view of things. We must show the Communists that is is necessary to judge the policy as a whole and its chances of success and, above all, remind them that the alternative will be between the left and the right and not between the left and the left."

Questioned on the desire expressed by [PCF Secretary General] Georges Marchais to see united lists drawn up to support outgoing mayors in the coming municipal elections, Mr. Jospin replied: "We cannot accept that idea. Payment according to position [rentes de situation] is not good in the economy. It is even worse in democracy.... Our advance positions are that wherever our candidates were ahead of Communists in recent ballots, they should head the union lists, aside from exceptions, which we will discuss with our partners. Where that is not the case, Socialists are in no position to demand that they head the list except in exceptional situations."

COLOMBO CALLS REAGAN STAND ON USSR 'ILLOGICAL'

AU180855 Rome ANSA in English 0847 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Hasselet, Denmark, October 18 -- The Reagan administration's decision to sell wheat to the Soviet Union while banning the sale of U.S.-licensed technology to the same country by European firms is "illogical", according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Colombo was speaking with reporters Sunday at the end of a formal session of the European Community foreign ministers here. One of the main concerns was the American ban on the sale of European manufactured equipment for the Soviet gasline to link Siberia to Western Europe.

Currently, four pump rotors ordered by the Italian company, Nuovo Pignone, from General Electric in August are being held up by the ban at the port of New York. But, according to semi-official sources on the fringe of the meeting here, the rotors are not even intended for the Soviet gasline, but for the one linking Italy to Algeria.

On Saturday, Colombo asked the Italian ambassador in Washington to take steps with the State Department to clarify the export embargo, and the American reply is still awaited.

But the Italian firm is not the only one to have been hit by the embargo, which President Ronald Reagan introduced in an attempt to bring pressures to bear for an end to military rule in Poland. Others in France, West Germany, and Britain have also been affected.

According to Colombo, the "illogicality" of the American position is that the Reagan administration has asked the European Ten to bear the weight of the reprisals against the Soviet Union while agreeing to sell the Soviet Union 23 million tons of wheat a year.

But, even if the Ten foreign ministers said they remain "perplexed" at the American position, they also confirmed their readiness to discuss overall East-West relations in the near future so as to avoid misunderstandings which might turn into a political and economic showdown between Europe and the United States.

During their talks, the ministers also voiced pessimism over the Polish situation, with some of them wondering whether the attitude of the Polish leaders was not enough to suspend the European Security and Cooperation Conference in Madrid.

(In Rome, Foreign Ministry sources said Sunday that the step with the State Department was designed to establish whether the American measure was directed against supplies under contracts already signed with the Soviet Union).

(According to the sources, if this is the case, the Italian Government will stand by its position that signed contracts must be honored). The sources added that, if the measure against Nuovo Pignone was an indirect consequence of the ban on supplies for the Soviet gasline, the Italian Government would consider it in an even graver light).

(Foreign Undersecretary Raffaele Costa added that the Italian Government has been "coherent in contesting all unilateral decisions on the gasline...between allies, the definition of the problem can only be found globally").

On Lebanon the EEC ministers agreed that the Ten EEC countries must contribute to rebuilding the Middle Eastern state. As the Ten's duty chairman, Danish Foreign Minister Ellemann-Jensen will be going to Beirut early in November to see what contribution the EEC can make.

On the fringe of the meeting, Colombo met with his French counterpart, Claude Cheysson, to discuss the imminent visit of Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil to Rome and Paris.

PLANT WORKERS PROTEST PIPELINE EQUIPMENT BAN

AU181615 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Florence, October 18 -- Workers at Nuovo Pignone's plants in Tuscany laid down their tools this morning to protest the Reagan administration's move to impound shipments of rotors ordered from General Electric in August.

The ban on delivery of the pump rotors to Nuovo Pignone was the latest move taken by Washington to implement its embargo on pipeline technology to the Soviet Union.

The material impounded in New York was to have been employed in the manufacture of turbines and compressors in Nuovo Pignone's plants in Florence and Massa Carrara. The completed equipment is supposed to be fitted into pumping stations the Italian firm is building for both the Siberian and Algerian natural gas pipelines.

PERTINI RECEIVES, REASSURES JEWISH GROUP

AU182033 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 18 -- Italian President Sandro Pertini told a delegation of Italian Jews here today that he was happy to have met Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir 'Arafat last month because it gave him the chance to tell the Palestinian leader that his people "has a right to its homeland only if it recognises the state of Israel".

Reporting on their meeting with Pertini, the delegates from the Union of Italian Jewish Communities cites the head-of-state as saying that 'Arafat accepted his viewpoint.

Rome's Chief Rabbi Elio Toaff, who was in the delegation, told the reporters that Pertini seemed "very struck and indignant over the recent episodes of anti-Semitism and offered us all his commitment on order to fight these returns to the past".

On October 9, terrorists hurled four hand-granades at the crowd outside the Rome synagogue, killing a two-year-old child and injuring 37 others leaving the building after a religious service.

DEFENSE MINISTER'S TRIP TO SOMALIA PREVIEWED

AU181652 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) Mogadishu, October 18 -- Italian military aid to Somalia, aimed at creating a "defensive and non-strategic" balance of power between Mogadishu and Addis Ababa on the Horn of Africa, will be the major topic of Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio's talks with Somalia authorities here this week.

Largorio is scheduled to arrive later today for a visit leading up to Thursday's celebrations for the anniversary of the revolution that brought Siad Barre to power thirteen years ago.

Plans for Italian defense assistance to Somalia, which have already been arranged by the two governments, will be discussed tomorrow by Lagorio and his Somali counterpart in the Mogadishu leadership, General Samatar. Lagorio has already gone over the terms agreement when he met with Somali Foreign Minister Jama Barre in Rome last summer. His talks with Samatar tomorrow will be "exploratory" in nature and the details will be mapped out later by experts establishing the exact amounts and types of aid to be extended.

Lagorio will be travelling here today from Jidda, where he went after making an inspection Sunday at (Sharm-al-Shayk) of the Italian contingent in the Sinai peacekeeping force.

Three Italian mine-sweepers with ninety men aboard are keeping a patrol on the Tiran Straits at the southeastern tip of the Sinai Peninsula to ensure peace between Israel and Egypt.

After winding up his visit to Somalia, the Italian defense minister goes to Khartoum and then returns to Egypt at the weekend to attend ceremonies marking the fortieth anniversary of the battle of Al 'Alamayn.

ARCHBISHOP GLEMP RESCHEDULES VISIT FOR 25 OCT

LD182300 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Monseigneur Glemp, primate of the Polish Church, will visit Italy on 25 October. The archbishop of Warsaw will stay in our country for about 10 days. It is known that Monseigneur Glemp was not able to be present in Rome for the canonization of the Polish Saint Maximilian Kolbe because of tension arising in Poland after the dissolution of free trade unions.

A Foreign Ministry note refers to the Polish primate's recent public stance. The note points out the Warsaw military government's unwillingness to give a constructive reply to the efforts of the Polish Catholic Church in favor of a resumption of dialogue among the main national forces.

ITALY, BRAZIL SIGN COOPERATION AGREEMENT

LD190226 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2300 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro is paying an official 2-day visit to Rome. He met President of the Republic Pertini and his counterpart Emilio Colombo. The two ministers spoke about the Falklands aftermath, about the renewed understanding between the European Community and the Latin American countries and about the main problems of the present international situation, ranging from East-West relations to the North-South dialogue. The two ministers also signed an agreement on economic and industrial cooperation.

DC LEADER CALLS FOR UNITY AT PARTY MEETING

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 16 -- A call from Christian Democrat Party (DC) Secretary Ciriaco de Mita for Italy's five governing parties to stick together through the thick and thin of the present legislature and even the next one got a cautious reception from the other four parties in the coalition.

Opening the DC National Council session in Rome Friday, De Mita announced that his party had no plans to quit the ruling partnership "even if the representative power of some of the coalition parties should alter in the meantime". The latter was an apparent reference to changes that could come about in the balance of political power in the next elections, which may be called as early as next spring.

The Socialists, the DC's major partner in Premier Giovanni Spadolini's coalition, were so cautious, they didn't comment at all. Observers expected a response to come from Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi tomorrow, when the party holds a meeting on administrative reforms.

The Social Democrats (PSDI) answered in an editorial written by Deputy Secretary Ruggero Puletti for today's edition of the party newspaper "L'UNITA".

De Mita's call for a common political stand is all right, he basically said, as long as the other four parties in the coalition -- the PSI, PSDI, Republicans and Liberals -- tighten their ranks to prevent the DC from dominating the situation and prevent coalition in-fighting from enfeebling the government's actions.

Spadolini's Republican Party also voiced guarded agreement with De Mita's proposal. PRI leadership coordinator Biasini insisted, however, that the first thing that had to be done, before any legislative pact can be made, is for the five parties to see to it that the government's financial legislation and austerity measures get parliamentary approval.

In his opening remarks to the DC National Council, De Mita criticized the Socialists for having sparked the government crisis in August. "The re-installment of the same premier, the same ruling arrangement, the same ministers," De Mita said, "did justice to an improvident crisis."

As for the Communist opposition, the DC leader reiterated his party's role as the "cultural, historical and political alternative to communism."

The contradiction-ridden Italian economic crisis, De Mita said, required a "pact for development" between the ruling parties. If the nation's social forces (labor and management) and other parties refused to discuss economic issues openly and constructively, he added, the only alternative is for the coalition to "take its responsibility."

Inside the DC, De Mita's speech was generally considered to contain an appeal for closer party unity and a more unified party management.

Party Supports Spadolini

AU180903 Rome ANSA in English 0841 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] ANSA Rome, October 18 -- There was no change in the Italian Christian Democrat Party's (DC) top leadership apparatus as a result of the meeting of the party's National Council which wound up two days of debate here in the early hours of Sunday morning.

Party Secretary Ciriaco de Mita, who leades the party's majority faction, offered the minority, led by former Premier Arnaldo Forlani and former Industry Minister Carlo Donat Cattin, representation in the party's directive apparatus, but the offer was turned down.

But the final resolution indicated that both majority and minority still support the present government led by Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini. The government is a five-way coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals, and Spadolini's own Republicans.

The major difference between the two factions was one point in the resolution on which the minority abstained voicing the party's position on this August's government crisis, this ended with an identical re-edition of the previous administration.

After the vote, spokesmen for the minority said the meeting had started "a march towards increasingly close unity" in the party, "which must be determined according to a political line elaborated with the consensus of all."

The National Council was the first chaired by De Mita since his election as secretary and, according to observers, it marked a confirmation of his policies, among which party unity has priority.

AUTHENTICITY OF PAPER'S COUP DIAGRAM DENIED

LD182204 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] This evening, the Interior Ministry issued a note in response to the report which appeared in today's issue of DIARIO-16 under the title "The Line of Investigation of the Coup Conspiracy."

The note claims that neither the anti-coup squad nor any other police department or Interior Ministry agency has drawn up any kind of diagram pointing — even as a hypothesis — to connections among persons, bodies or institutions as part of the so-called "web of conspiracy" which bears any resemblance to the DIARIO-16 report.

The note goes on to say: When the DIARIO-16 writer Fernando (?Relein) recently paid a visit to the minister of the interior and showed him the diagram which has now been published in the newspaper, he told the journalist that although the diagram might contain the names of persons who had been investigated — with different results — it was not the same as the working documents used by the anti-coup squad. For this reason, the minister recommended that it not be published. Therefore, in the case of the report's publication, the responsibility and onus for proving the authenticity of the diagram and the information it contains rests with DIARIO-16. The Interior Ministry denies the authenticity of the document, which is claimed to be a photocopy, and the anti-coup squad dissociates itself from the conclusions drawn by DIAIRO-16.

Legal Action Against Paper

LD182234 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Press note from Ministry of Defense Information Office — read by unidentified spokesman; date and place not given]

[Text] In view of the publication by a Madrid newspaper of a document supposedly drawn up by the Interior Ministry and mentioning, along with the names of persons tried for the offense of military rebellion [those involved in the 23 February coup attempt], the names of military institutions and members of the armed forces who enjoy the full right to their own honor and good names and given that no proof whatsoever exists as to the veracity of the report, the Ministry of Defense makes known the following:

1. Under the provisions of Article 176 of the royal ordinances of the armed forces, which ensures state protection for members of the armed forces when the latter are the object of insults or distortions directly related to their military status, the ministry has brought the matter to the attention of the prosecutor in the Supreme Council of Military Justice in order that as many actions as may be appropriate under the law be instituted against the appropriate persons to uphold the honor and good names of the military institutions and their members.

2. The ministry has also sent instructions to its legal assistance department to provide all the necessary assistance to those mentioned in the published report so that, where appropriate, they may be able to exercise their right of objection, as provided for in Article 4 of the law protecting a person's basic rights.

3. Democratic institutions and parliamentary monarchy are not defended by the reporting of inaccurate, suspect or incorrect information or of rumors which, as this ministry had pointed out on a previous occasion, benefit only those who would like to attack the security of the state; they are defended by the judicial and administrative means available under the law in a state based on law.

MORE OFFICERS REPORTEDLY IMPLICATED IN COUP

LD181316 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Everything appears to indicate that the coup planned for 27 October, in which three artillery officers have already been arrested, is even greater in scope as far as the persons implicated in it are concerned. In Zaragoza -- and there has been no denial by the military authorities -- a lieutenant colonel, also in the artillery, is understood to have been temporarily dismissed from his position as head of the second section of the General Staff of the Captaincy General. The person concerned is Lt Col (Juan Vicente Grande Saez de Censino). This military officer is now at his home at the headquarters of the captaincy general.

All the news media in Zaragoza today say that another man of the same rank has been arrested. His name is not known at this time.

At the second section of the General Staff in the Zaragoza Captaincy General there has been no comment on this possible arrest in response to requests from the media, which had good relations with Lt Col (Grande) because of his position. Lt Col (Grande) had just undertaken a military retraining course in Madrid.

Several newspapers recall that the coup conspirators' intended to replace the present captain general of that military region, Lt General Carvuano, with the retired Manuel Cabeza Calahorra, a codefendant of the putschist Milans del Bosch, who was condemned for his part in the 23 February coup attempt.

Possible Suspect Transferred

LD181432 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] We have just received a report that Lt Colonel (Juan Vicente Grande Saez de Censino) has been ordered immediately transferred to Pontevedra, according to an order published today in the Army Official Gazette. The officer was on the General Staff of the 5th Captaincy General headquartered in Zaragoza and has now been transferred to recruitment and mobilization zone No 82 based in Galicia under the Pontevedra military administration. As you will recall, Lt Col (Saez de Censino) is the same man mentioned in the Madrid daily EL PAIS on Saturday and in today's ABC as the one presumably under house arrest as a result of the investigation into the coup plot planned for 27 October.

TWO ARRESTED FOR PLANNING BOMB ATTACK ON UCD

LD151322 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Excerpt] This morning, two of the ultrarightwingers arrested in Madrid on Monday were handed over to the national high court. They are (Francisco Lopez Laguna), 21, and (Jose Maria Calle Celestino), 18, members of the Youth Front. The police found them in possession of a sports bag containing an explosive device with which they intended to carry out an attack on the Union of the Democratic Center's [UCD] offices in Toledo. The other two detainees, brothers (Ricardo) and (Martin Saenz de Ynestrillas), 17 and 16, respectively, were still being held incommunicado this morning under the antiterrorist law at police headquarters. According to a police note, the (Saenz de Ynestrillas) brothers were going to provide the transport to Toledo. The two will be handed over to the national high court tomorrow.

THREE SUSPECTED GRAPO MEMBERS ARRESTED

NC151547 Paris AFP in English 1322 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, Oct 15 (AFP) -- Three members of the anti-fascist terrorist organisation GRAPO, suspected of being involved in a recent spate of bomb blasts in the north western province of Galicia, have been arrested, police announced today. The three were named as Enrique Alvarez Abalde, Sebastian Rodriguez Veloso and Pedro Duque Rodriguez.

GRAPO -- meaning Anti-Fascist Resistance Groups of October 1 -- has called for an "active boycott" of the legislative elections set for October 28 in Spain.

EIGHT BOMBINGS IN VARIOUS CITIES LINKED TO ETA

PA171645 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1307 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 17 Oct (EFE) -- Eight explosive devices were detonated at dawn in electric power companies, financial institutions and a headquarters of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, PSOE, in various parts of Spain. One person was slightly injured. Two of the bombs exploded in a high-tension tower and a transformer of the Iberduero Electric Company in Oyarzun and San Sebastian, respectively, in the Basque region. Although no terrorist group has claimed responsibility, the attacks on Iberduero fall within the campaign that the Basque terrorist organization ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] is waging against that electric company in charge of the Lemoniz nuclear powerplant.

Explosive devices were also detonated in banks and commercial establishments of Asturias and Valencia in northern and eastern Spain, respectively. They caused no casualties. In Asturias, the homemade bombs equipped with timing devices damaged the branch of the Gijon savings bank and the central offices of the hydroelectric company El Cantabrico in Oviedo. In Valencia, the attacks on an automobile dealership and the main office of the Spanish bank of credit were also carried out with explosives set off with timing devices.

The attack on a PSOE headquarters occurred in Logrono. According to the initial investigation, the bomb contained more than 1 kg of C-2 [Goma-2] activated by a time fuse. The explosion destroyed the front door of the headquarters and caused heavy damage inside the building.

One person was slightly injured by the explosion of a time bomb in the National Social Security Institute in Barcelona in northeastern Spain.

GUARD POST IN NAVARRA ATTACKED, ONE KILLED

PA152317 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2156 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Pamplona, Spain, 15 Oct (EFE) -- A civilian was killed and two civil guards -- rural policemen -- were slightly wounded, in a terrorist attack on a civil guard post in Leiza, Navarra, in northern Spain today. The civilian was killed by a burst of machinegun fire during a change of guard.

Civil guard sources told EFE that the attack was perpetrated by several men, who threw a grenade and fired machineguns from bushes near the post, causing heavy damage to the facade of the building. Although no one has claimed responsibility for the attack, the techniques used, experts say, bring the ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] terrorist organization to mind.

This is the fifth attack to produce victims in the Basque region and in Navarra since the announcement of general elections in Spain. In previous attacks, four policemen, a sailor and an insurance company director were killed and three civil guards wounded. Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson recently said that these attacks were expected and that "terrorist actions against the electoral process would continue."

SOVIET MINISTER'S VISIT -- USSR Meat and Dairy Industry Minister E.F. Antonov has begun his 1-week visit to Finland. Antonov had talks with his host, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry Taisto Tahkamaa, this afternoon. Later today the visitor is to negotiate with representatives of the central union of agricultural producers about the cooperation between Finnish and Soviet meat and dairy industries. In the course of the week, Minister Antonov is to acquaint himself with Finnish food industry enterprises in various parts of the country. On Friday an agreement on cooperation in this sector for the next few years will be signed. [Text] [Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1400 GMT 18 Oct 82 LD]

SOVIET OIL TO FINLAND -- Neste Oy [National Oil Company] will buy from the Soviet Union 1 million tons of crude oil for marketing in the world markets. The deal will take place within the framework of the normal Finnish-Soviet bilateral trade and will thus significantly reduce the imbalance in the trade between the two countries, it is stated by Neste. This is the first time that Neste will receive crude oil from the Soviet Union for further sale to third countries. The value of the deal is over Fm 1 billion. The deal will raise Neste's oil imports from the Soviet Union this year from the earlier agreed 8 million tons to 9 million tons, Neste states. The imbalance in the Finnish-Soviet trade at present is just under Fm 5 billion in Finland's favor. The additional purchase of crude oil will thus reduce Finland's surplus to under Fm 4 billion. FINNISH-SOVIET ORE COOPERATION -- The transport of iron ore pellets from the (Kostamus) mine in the Soviet Union to the Raahe works of Rautaruukki Oy will begin on an experimental basis at the beginning of next year. It is estimated that 50,000 tons per year will be transported during the first stage, with the amount growing to 400,000 tons later. An agreement on the practical arrangements for this railway traffic was concluded between the Finnish and Soviet railway authorities at talks which ended in Kostamus today. IRANIAN CHARGE SEEKS ASYLUM, DENOUNCES REGIME

[Aasmund Willersrud report: "Iran's Embassies Are Real Gestapo Centers"]

[Text] "I ran the Iranian Embassy in Oslo like a real embassy, not like a "Gestapo center" as the terrorist regime in Tehran ordered," the asylum-seeking Iranian charge d'affaires, Parvi Khazai, said at a press conference in Oslo yesterday.

The day before he had asked for political asylum in Norway and officially given his support to the Iranian Mojahedin opposition movement. He showed documents which he had received from Tehran recently with instructions for him to work against and denounce Iranians in Norway.

"They gave us orders to persecute Iranians who are opponents of the regime. We were asked to name them and refrain from helping them with passports or other consular services. In fact, we were not even allowed to issue documents stating that they were students. All someone had to have done was to have said something negative about Khomeyni."

"Every week we used to receive circulars full of names in the diplomatic mail. When an Iranian came to the embassy, we were supposed to check the name immediately. If he was on the list, his passport was to be confiscated. Then we were supposed to put the person in such a position that he would be forced to leave the country." However, Khazai said that he had never taken a passport from anyone.

At the press conference, the diplomat said that it is Khomeyni himself who is staging many of the big explosions in Tehran in order to discredit the opposition movement in the eyes of international public opinion. Khazai showed a telex he had received from Tehran immediately after one of the major bombings. "Use the explosion in the press, put the blame on the opposition movement," was what it said. "I have proof that the message was written and made ready for dispatch to all embassies BEFORE [word italicized in original] the explosion took place," Khazai said.

The former charge d'affaires said that he remained at his post as long as possible to help his fellow countrymen in Norway instead of informing on them to Khomeyni's executioners. He decided to act quickly when an Iranian arrived from Stockholm to replace him 2 weeks ago. Does he feel personally threatened?

"These people are capable of anything," Khazai said. "They are not official diplomats, but they are chosen from the roughly 50 Iranians loyal to Khomeyni living in Stockholm."

"He also claimed that Iranian Charge d'Affaires in Stockholm (Kalantar Nia) organizes the hunt for Mojahedin supporters in Sweden. He is a real terrorist, and was one of the so-called students who occupied the U.S. Embassy in Tehran," Khazai said.

The persecution of opposition supporters in Sweden has, for example, taken the form of attacks on Iranian students' homes in Lund, Norrkoping and Stockholm simply because of peaceful demonstrations. Khazai was himself stationed at the embassy in Stockholm before coming to Oslo.

Now Parvi Khazai talks of "We in the Mojahedin." He presented documents which confirm in his view that the most grotesque violations against people occur daily with the regime's blessing. "The Revolutionary Guards tap the blood of condemned people before they are executed," Khazai said, and showed a cassette with the Ayatollah's voice giving orders about procedure: "We need the blood badly, please take it from all prisoners. It cannot be obtained any other way."

SWEDISH DEVALUATION SHOWS 'UNCOMMON CYNICISM'

[Editorial: "Swedish Cynicism"]

[Text] It goes without saying that it is up to any government to take the measures necessary in the light of its country's interests. But we would arrive in a chaotic situation if everyone acted like the Swedes and tried to solve their economic problems by exporting them -- to their neighbors in the first instance. The 16-percent devaluation of the Swedish krona represents a gross violation of the rules which apply to currency cooperation among the industrialized nations. And the Swedish Government's move is particularly serious if Nordic economic cooperation, of which the Swedes themselves have spoken so eloquently and passionately, is to have any meaning. When Norwegian Finance Minister Rolf Preshus described the Swedish devaluation as a serious backward step for Nordic cooperation, he was putting it mildly considering the circumstances. From the viewpoint of Nordic cooperation, we are witnessing most uncommon cynicism from the Palme government.

The violent reactions created by the Swedish devaluation among Sweden's neighbors must be viewed in the context of what over the years has emerged as something of a Swedish pattern of action. At the Nordic Council and in other forums of organized Nordic cooperation, it has been possible -- particularly for Norway -- to point to growing Swedish protectionism. It is noticeable how the Swedes often make decisions affecting the economy and trade as if they were a law unto themselves, as if they had no idea of the effect their measures would have on their neighbors' problems. Thus, this is not the first time the Swedes have pushed their difficulties onto others.

In the last few days, there have come warnings against exaggerated Norwegian self-satisfaction. It has been pointed out that Norway has also devalued no less than twice in quite a short time. To the extent that this is supposed to be a serious assessment of the economic situation in Norway and Sweden, respectively, it is impossible to ignore the fact that the comparison is a shaky one as far as some of its central points are concerned. And there is of course a great difference between a devaluation of 3 or 6 percent and a devaluation of 16 percent. The Swedes most recent devaluation of the krona, which was originally to have been 20 percent, cannot be assessed in isolation, but must be viewed in the context of last year's 10-percent devaluation. This fully confirms that consideration for its neighbors has not mattered much to the Swedes.

As a matter of course, we assume that the last few days' currency shocks in the Nordic area will have repercussions in the bodies whose task it is to further promote Nordic economic cooperation. They will need to talk openly about the problems. As far as the effects of the Swedish devaluation of Norwegian industry are concerned -- a topic to which we will return in greater detail at a later date -- it is clear that there is great confusion among politicians. Special arrangements will have to be made, but it would be an illusion to think that the problems of industry could be solved with subsidies and selective support arrangements. The situation which has recently arisen makes it even more necessary to pursue a policy which can bring costs down and increase the companies' competitiveness.

PAPER VIEWS PALME'S SECURITY POLICY PROBLEMS

PM151415 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 8 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Swedish Security Policy"]

[Text] The new Palme government enters office at a remarkable moment for Sweden's security. The hunt in Harsfjarden has revised fundamental questions for ordinary people as to how protected we can actually be in an age of deterioration in relations between the major power blocs. The only things the politicians must devote their attention to are strategic economic decisions. The prime minister has himself pointed out the necessity of participation on the international scene, where he does, of course, belong more than any other Swedish party representative. With Olof Palme as prime minister and Pierre Schori as foreign ministry under secretary, many Social Democrats are hoping for a new world role for Sweden.

As foreign minister, Ola Ullsten followed the Social Democratic tradition of quickly and firmly condemning unsatisfactory situations and violations, particularly in the Third World and especially by the superpowers. It is possible to imagine a considerably more tame policy. However, the fact remains that during the 6 nonsocialist years, Swedish foreign policy did shift emphasis. Palme will not simply be able to take over where he left off. Security policy -- separate from traditional diplomacy -- has acquired greater weight in the Swedish debate than it had in the middle of the seventies.

Many nonsocialist decisionmakers have been more interested in Europe and our immediate environs than in the Third World. But more importantly, there has been the change from relative detente to a deterioration in superpower relations.

At the government level, the Defense Ministry has been overshadowed by the Foreign Ministry on security issues, especially in times of crisis. Because of their personal interests and temperaments, both Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten and Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Leif Leifland have become key figures in decisions requiring military knowledge; we need only look at the latest submarine incident.

It is a reasonable development that security policy should principally be pursued and coordinated by the Foreign Ministry. The choice of the novice Borje Andersson as defense minister indicates that Palme is fully aware of this.

A central section of Swedish security policy -- for geographical reasons, if for no other -- concerns Sweden's relations with the Soviet Union. An article in DAGENS NYHETER by peace researcher Wilhelm Agrell on this topic has met with both agreement and criticism.

On the whole, the general assumption is that Agrell is advocating a less demonstrative policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union -- what is important should be to reduce Soviet mistrust of Swedish neutrality. However, many people missed Agrell's recommendation that Sweden should have "seized" the grounded submarine in the Blekinge Archipelago. Open force! -- it is a hazardous notion that the Soviet Union would have appreciated this more than what actually did happen.

Ola Ullsten has rejected the idea that Sweden is under growing pressure from the Soviet Union. It is true that nothing has happened at the official level, but it is indisputable that in many other ways the Soviet Union has shown remarkable displeasure with Sweden. Most recently, TASS has been speaking of the submarine hunt in Harsfjarden as "perhaps an intentional fabrication with the aim of smashing the trust and the traditionally normal relations between the Soviet Union and the Scandinavian countries."

The point made by critics like Agrell is that Sweden has no basic strategy as far as relations with the Soviet Union are concerned. It is not necessarily enough to fall back on "nonalignment in peacetime with the aim of neutrality in wartime." The discovery of a Soviet submarine in Swedish territorial waters close to the shore called for a fully considered approach -- as far as behavior, tone and so on are concerned -- for which no one was really prepared.

The Palme commission's motto is "common security." A fundamental idea here is that one should "build security together with one's opponents." Palme and his colleagues on the commission also want to give the United Nations greater powers for the prevention of crises.

In such a case it would be logical -- at least as a first step -- to report a submarine incident to the Security Council rather than rely immediately and exclusively on one's own national military resources. For a Palme government it will probably also be logical to make a greater use of franker and more frequent dialogues with the Soviet Union.

Major questions -- and difficult ones; security policy will be a central concern -- with all the problems and possibilities it bring with it -- for the Palme government.

JOINT CYPRUS-GDR COMMUNIQUE PUBLISHED 16 OCT

NC161915 Nicosia Press and Information Office in English 16 Oct 82

["Joint communique of the state visit of the general secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and chairman of the State Council of the GDR, Erich Honecker, to the Republic of Cyprus, 14-16 October 1982"]

[Text] At the invitation of the president of the Republic of Cyprus, Spiros Kiprianou, the general secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic, Erich Honecker, paid a state visit to the Republic of Cyprus from 14 to 16 October 1982.

During his stay the distinguished guest from the German Democratic Republic laid a wreath to honour the first president of the Republic of Cyprus, Archbishop Makarios. Erich Honecker paid a call on the mayor of Nicosia, visited sites of cultural and historic interest and acquainted himself with the life of the Cypriot people and their achievements.

The president of the Republic of Cyprus handed over to the general secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic the highest distinction of his country, the Makarios III Order.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou held official talks in a friendly atmosphere, discussing questions relating to the further deepening of bilateral relations as well as current international issues.

Also participating in these talks were: from the side of the German Democratic Republic:

Guenter Mittag, member of the Political Bureau and secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany, member of the Council of State; Oskar Fischer, minister of foreign affairs, member of the Council of Ministers; Gerhard Beil, state secretary and first deputy minister of foreign trade; Guenter Sieber, member of the People's Chamber and its Foreign Affairs Committee; Guenter Schurath, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the German Democratic Republic to the Republic of Cyprus.

From the side of the Republic of Cyprus:

Nikolaos Rolandhis, minister of foreign affairs; Dinos Mikhailidhis, minister to the president; Patroklos Stavrou, under-secretary to the president; Ambassador Angelos Angelidhis; Kharalambos Hadjipanayiotou, director-general, Ministry of Finance; Vanias Markidhis, acting director-general, Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Kharis Vovidhis, director of the President's Office; Ilias Ipsaridhis, director, Political Affairs Division, Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Alekos Shambos, director of the Minister's Office.

During the visit, the following agreements and accords were concluded:

-- Convention between the German Democratic Republic and the Republic of Cyprus on legal assistance in civil, family, labour law and criminal matters;

-- Agreement on the mutual recognition of education certificates and academic degrees;

-- Convention between the government of the German Democratic Republic and the Government of the Republic of Cyprus for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and capital;

-- Agreement concerning waiver of visa requirements for holders of diplomatic and service passports;

-- Executive programme on cultural and scientific cooperation for the years 1982 and 1983.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kipraianou were gratified to note a successful development of relations between the two peoples and states in all areas and a remarkable progress since the meeting of the two heads of state in Berlin in 1980. Cooperation between the two countries has been significantly promoted by the further development of mutually advantageous relations under strict observance of the provisions of the United Nations Charter and the principles of the Final Act of the Helsinki conference, and the similarity of views concerning basic international issues, as they were reflected in the communique agreed in 1980. Stable relations for the benefit of both peoples reflect the viability of the concept of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems and the two countries' desire for peace.

The president of the Republic of Cyprus, Spiros Kiprianou, praised the progress achieved by the people of the German Democratic Republic in further developing the national economic potential and expanding social welfare schemes as well as the GDR's contributions towards strengthening peace, European security and detente and towards disarmament. He had words of particular appreciation for the active solidarity of the German Democratic Republic with the struggle of peoples for respect for their sovereignty for national and social liberation and against imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and apartheid.

President Kiprianou thanked the Government and the people of the German Democratic Republic for the unswerving support and unshakable solidarity they have extended to the just struggle waged by Cyprus and her people. He gave a detailed account of the efforts made by the government and the people of his country to bring about a just, democratic and stable solution of the question of Cyprus.

President Kiprianou emphasized that Cyprus was making its own contribution towards ensuring peace and towards disarmament and arms limitation both on the basis of the relevant United Nations resolutions and in pursuance of the principles and declarations of the Non-aligned Movement. In this regard President Kiprianou recalled his proposal for the demilitarization and disarmament of Cyprus as a contribution to the wider efforts on the matter.

Erich Honecker highly praised the achievements of the Cypriot people in building an efficient economy and consolidating democracy. He commended the contribution made by Cyprus to international efforts for peace, national independence and cooperation. He accentuated his appreciation of the active role of Cyprus within the Non-aligned Movement.

Erich Honecker informed about the efforts undertaken by the working people of the GDR under the leadership of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany in implementing the decision adopted at the party's 10th congress. Although confronted with more complicated external conditions, the people of the German Democratic Republic had continued making headway in further shaping the advanced socialist society. Erich Honecker explained the GDR's economic strategy to ensure dynamic economic growth on the basis of scientific and technological progress, intensification and higher effectivity of production with a view to successfully pursuing in the 1980's its course of united economic and social policies in order to consolidate and gradually improve the people's material and cultural living standards.

In this context Erich Honecker explained in detail the German Democratic Republic's foreign policy, which is aimed at securing peace, halting the arms race and opposing confrontation and boycott policies. He further explained that mindful of its historical responsibility to ensure that never again will a war start from German soil and that the present and future generations will be saved from the catastrophe of a nuclear inferno, the GDR consistently works for the continuation of detente and the expansion and intensification of peaceful cooperation between states with different social systems.

The German Democratic REpublic and the Republic of Cyprus reaffirm their determination to develop further their mutual relations on the basis of strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, mutual respect and non-interference in internal affairs, and to continue their political dialogue as in the past.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou stated with deep concern that the course shifting from the policy of detente and dialogue to confrontation and the accelerated arms race have led to an exacerbation of the international situation. The dangers to world peace, which emanate from hotbeds of tension and conflict, have alarmingly increased. Mankind feels increasingly frightened of a world-wide nuclear inferno.

Both sides regard concrete measures for arms limitation and disarmament, notably in the nuclear field, as the effective means to counter these dangers. They are highly concerned about the planned deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe and its repercussions on European security, world peace and detente.

Both sides resolutely rejected policies of discrimination, boycott and interference in the internal affairs of other states and stressed the need for strict respect for the United Nations Charter and the Helsinki Final Act.

The two sides agreed that the safeguarding of peace is the principal objective of our time. They underlined the urgency of concrete steps to preserve peace, stabilize detente and achieve disarmament, commending all realistic contributions to this end. The obligation which the USSR has undertaken not to be the first to use nuclear weapons was commended by Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou as a significant contribution to the efforts to eliminate the danger of nuclear war and to advance confidence in international relations.

They expressed their expectation that the Geneva talks between the Soviet Union and the United States on a limitation of nuclear armaments in Europe and strategic armaments as a whole on the basis of the principle of equality and equal security will lead to success.

Both sides underlined the usefulness of a dialogue at the highest level between states with different social systems as a means to enhance mutual understanding, to build confidence and to reduce existing tensions.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou shared the view that the improvement of the international situation largely depends on the development of relations between the European states with different social systems. Particularly in the present dangerous international situation, Europe as the cradle of detente can give new and strong momentum to the efforts for safeguarding peace. Both sides pointed to the specific importance of the Madrid follow-up meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe which has established under the international law the framework within which to build relations of states with different social systems in accordancd with the post-war order as emanated in Europe.

The two statesmen reiterated the readiness of their countries to do everything in their power for the successful conclusion of the Madrid meeting. During its resumed session with a view to adopting a substantive and balanced concluding document, which would also include a mandate for the convening of a conference of confidence and security building measures and disarmament in Europe as well as adequate provisions regarding respect for and implementation of the principles of the Final Act. They reaffirmed their view that the process of security and cooperation in Europe in pursuance of the Helsinki Final Act is an urgent need to preserve and strengthen peace, security and mutually advantageous cooperation on this continent. Erich Honecker appreciated the constructive role of the European neutral and non-aligned states at this meeting and recalled that the GDR immediately subscribed to the Stockholm appeal of the foreign ministers of these countries to make fresh efforts for a successful conclusion of the Madrid meeting.

Both sides underlined their profound interest in the achievement of positive results in the Vienna talks on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe as well as in the Geneva committee on disarmament, and reaffirmed their readiness to make their contributions within the scope of their possibilities.

The Republic of Cyprus and the German Democratic Republic support all efforts directed at converting the Mediterranean into a region of peace and cooperation. In the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act they advocate the extension of confidence-building measures to that region, the withdrawal of warships carrying nuclear weapons from the Mediterranean, and the renunciation of the stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of the European and non-European non-nuclear-weapon states in the Mediterranean area.

Both sides support the worldwide movement against armaments and for peace and international security which is gaining momentum and is increasingly involving broad sectors of society. They emphasized the resolve of their countries to join forces with all those who are prepared to take action in line with the charter and resolutions of the U.N. with a view to opposing the aggravation of international tensions and the danger of a nuclear war.

Both sides stressed their determination to continue their consistent efforts to achieve political solutions to all international conflicts with due respect for the sovereign rights of the peoples.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou strongly condemned Israel's brutual aggression against Lebanon and the crime of genocide committed against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples. In this respect they stated the full responsibility of Israel. They expressed their deep concern at the extremely serious situation caused by the Israeli aggression and voiced their full solidarity with the Arab people of Palestine and its sole and legitimate representative, the PLO, as well as with the Lebanese people and all victims of the Israeli aggression.

They call for the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and for the implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to return to their homes, self-determination and establishment of an independent state of their own.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou expressed deep concern at the lack of progress in resolving the Cyprus problem. They deplored the fact that the resolutions of the UN on Cyprus have not been implemented and they called for their full and speedy implementation. They emphasized that the withdrawal of all foreign troops which occupy part of the territory of the Republic of Cyprus is indispenable for a just and lasting solution, ensuring the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, unity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus.

Both statesmen have accentuated the need for an early solution of the Cyprus question on the basis of the UN resolutions, the relevant declarations of the Non-Aligned Movement and the high level agreements of 1977 and 1979 through constructive, substantive and direct negotiations, without any foreign interference, on an equal footing between the two Cypriot communities, under the UN auspices, and through all other necessary steps within the framework of the UN.

Both statesmen reaffirmed their view that a representative conference on Cyprus within the framework of the United Nations would significantly advance the prospects of a life of peace for the Cypriot people. They re-emphasized that the complete demilitarization and disarmament of Cyprus would not only be in the interest of the Cypriot people but would also promote peace, security and stability in the region of the eastern Mediterranean.

Both sides deplored the subsisting armed conflict between Iraq and Iran. They are in favour of the earliest possible settlement of that conflict by peaceful means and welcome the initiatives launched to this end by the United Nations and the Non-Aligned Movement.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou supported the proposals concerning the establishment of zones of peace in various parts of the world, as an essential precondition to promoting detente and peaceful cooperation among peoples.

Both sides reaffirmed their solidarity with the struggle of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America for their right to self-determination without external interference or pressure.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou valued the movement of the non-aligned countries as an important and positive factor in the search for solutions to complex international issues. They noted with satisfaction that the Non-aligned Movement is actively involved in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, and racism. In the face of the tense international situation the non-aligned states have a greater responsibility for the preservation of peace, for international security, for arresting the arms race and for averting a nuclear war.

The two sides pointed to the high responsibility of the United Nations in safeguarding peace and security and promoting harmony among nations. They voiced their resolve to lend their active contribution to strengthening and enhancing the organisation's effectiveness based on strict respect for the United Nations Charter.

Erich Honecker and Spiros Kiprianou expressed profound satisfaction at the manner in which the visit proceeded and the results it produced. They valued these results as an essential contribution to the further all-round development of bilateral relations as well as to the strengthening of peace, and they reaffirmed their determination to systematically continue the political dialogue on the various levels.

The general secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic, Erich Honecker, expressed his sincere thanks to Spiros Kiprianou for the extremely warm welcome and the generous hospitality accorded to him and the members of the delegation of the German Democratic Republic.

Erich Honecker invited the president of the Republic of Cyprus, Spiros Kiprianou, to pay an official visit to the German Democratic Republic. The invitation was accepted with gratitude. The date of the visit will be fixed through diplomatic channels.

The two sides agreed on the simultaneous publication of this joint communique in the capitals of the two countries, Berlin and Nicosia.

LISSARIDHIS DISCUSSES MEETING WITH PAPANDREOU

NC181924 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Socialist EDEK Party Chairman Lissaridhis made a statement after his return from Athens, where he met with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and had talks on the Cyprus issue. Mr Lissaridhis expressed full satisfaction and said that there was absolute identity of views on the questions which were discussed. Mr Lissaridhis said that they analyzed all aspects of the Cyprus problem and its correlation with Greek reality, as well as the general situation in the region. The EDEK chairman added that he again noted the Greek prime minister's strong and deep interest in the Greek Cypriots and their fate and stressed that utilizing the alignment that is being offered constitutes an urgent national necessity.

AKEL'S PAPAIOANNOU CONGRATULATES KKE LEADER

NC181915 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou has sent KKE Secretary General Florakis a message congratulating him on this party's success in the [municipal] elections.

The message states that with their vote the Greek people have shown that the change in the country is inseparably connected with the unity of all the democratic and progressive forces.

DAILY CLAIMS TURKISH ESPIONAGE CASE UNCOVERED

NC181139 Nicosia ALITHIA TIS DHEFTERAS in Greek 18 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] According to private reports received by ALITHIA, a grave case of espionage was recently uncovered in a key position "near" the General Staff but outside the National Guard. According to our reports, the case concerned the delivery of documents to a foreign embassy for channelling to the Turkish side.

According to the same reports, the case occupied the Ministerial Council's last meeting. Immediate and effective measures were taken to neutralize the leaking of the documents without any objection from the person against whom the accusations had been made.

At the same time, we have been informed that the responsible authorities are following the Turks' increasing spying activity in the free areas, in which foreigners who are in Cyprus under various capacities are being used.

According to some observers, the intensification of the spying activity recalls the pre-invasion period during which a Trukish agent had in midspring (that is, in summer) [as published] opened a fur shop in a commercial area in downtown Nicosia.

The responsible authorities are now seriously vigilant, but they should be strengthened by the general public concerning anything suspicious that may come to their attention.

Furthermore, the Turkish side's search for excuses for a new military operation causes apprehensions. Typical of this are the new tales about arms which Denktas expressed in New York after the propaganda failure concerning the Melkonian Institute [an Armenian school in Nicosia], in which it seems the services of a foreign embassy were involved. The commando operation the Turks had been preparing, and which was foiled after strict warnings by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, could have extended to a broader clash, given Melkonian's proximity to the National Guard General Staff.

Further Reports

NC191034 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 19 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The exclusive reports that were published in ALITHIA yesterday about a grave case of espionage at a key position near the National Guard General Staff not only have not been denied, but have been confirmed by various authoritative sources whom we have contacted.

As we reported, the case has occupied the Ministerial Council, and the involved person, who occupies a high position, was silently neutralized. In addition, we have been informed that the culprit was caught redhanded photographing documents after he had channeled other documents to the services of another embassy so that they would end up on the Turkish side.

It is understood that during the investigation of the case charges were explored in conjunction with the involved person's personal circumstances, which presented "blanks and anomalies" in certain aspects.

Public opinion has been shocked by this espionage case and persistently asks to be informed:

1. Why does the government remain silent and not reveal the case?

2. Why isn't the neutralization of the alleged culprit being done through the proper channels, that is through the courts?

3. Is it possible that benefits will be given to the culprit after his neutralization?

4. Why was the implicated person allowed to deal with the Ministerial Council instead of the proper measures being taken?

5. If evidence existed and was shocking and convincing enough to make the implicated person accept his removal, why was it not sent to the prosecutor in order to lay the foundations for a file for penal prosecution?

6. Why was the treatment for such a case so lenient and tolerant?

Until the proper explanations have been given, the handling of this very grave case will continue being viewed by the public as one scandal on top of another.

Daily Claims Israel Involved

NC191037 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 19 Oct 82 p 1

[Excerpt] According to our reports, important documents connected with Armenian activities were recently leaked to the Israeli Embassy and then through that country's secret services (Mossad) to the corresponding Turkish services.

According to our reports, these documents concerned reports by the republic's security authorities on Turkish claims concerning the alleged activity or existence of armed Armenians in Cyprus.

OFFICIAL SOURCE CITED ON STATE-CHURCH 'DIVORCE'

NC161002 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 16 Oct 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Archbishop Khrisostomos, who is second on the official protocol list after President Kiprianou, was not invited to the official dinner given in honor of Mr Honecker.

When a correspondent asked a government official why President Kiprianou ignored his beatitude, the latter replied: "Now you understand it. The state-church divorce is final. The archbishop will not be invited again to official activities."

When the correspondent remarked that things may change, the government official said in both a serious and joking manner: "As long as there is the AKEL-Democratic Party minimum program the archbishop will not be invited...."

O AGON: TURKS INCREASING ARMS IN THE NORTH

NC181202 Nicosia O AGON TIS DHEFTERAS in Greek 18 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] In the past 10 days the Turkish occupation forces have been strengthened with a new type of artillery gun and with special army units that have manned the confrontation lines. They have further restricted the peace force members' movements in the occupied territories and banned them from visiting or passing through the entire line.

The Cyprus Government has informed the peace force of the new Turkish military reinforcements and at the same time denounced the new situation that is being created to various governments and to the UN secretary general.

The security authorities possess information on the new military reinforcements, which are considered to be very great, on the advancement of units to the confrontation lines and, according to the same reports, on the preparation of a helicopter port in the area of the village of Asha.

In addition, small military vehicles which use diesel oil have been moved to the occupied territories. Some time ago the Turks replaced their tanks' engines with a new type of engine that burns diesel oil.

The new arms have been brought by ships via Famagusta port and then been moved to various areas in the occupied territories.

In order to cover up the transport of the new arms, the Turks invented the alleged arming of the National Guard. Subsequently, Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas stated that the National Guard will attack the Turks.

Twenty days ago, the Turks reportedly transported to Cyprus special helicopters for very fast, aggressive operations. In order to cover up these activities, they invented the issue of the Armenians in the free territories.

The Cyprus Government has taken all necessary measures to deal with the situation the Turks have created with the new arms they have brought to the occupied territories. It has made the necessary representations in various directions. Meanwhile, the Turks have forbidden the UN forces to circulate. Their movement takes place only after a special permit has been granted and only on a special route that is specified for them.

DENKTAS, CAGATAY WARN GREEK CYPRIOTS ON ARMS

NC190722 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 15 Oct 82 p 1, 11

[Necdet Berkan report from New York]

[Text] Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] President Rauf Denktas stated that Greece and the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus continue to amass troops on the island and added: "The number of Greek and Greek Cypriot troops is currently 80,000."

Denktas had a 30-minute meeting with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar yesterday. Later he held a news conference at which he said that Papandreou and Kiprianou want to convert Cyprus into a Greek island. To achieve this goal, they are continually amassing troops and piling up arms.

On the other hand, TFSC Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay warned the Greek Cypriot administration, saying: "The Greek Cypriot side must not indulge in dangerous games by arming."

Replying to Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou's proposals that the Turkish troops withdraw and that the UN peace-keeping force be reinforced, Cagatay said: "The Turkish troops will withdraw from the island only when the security of the Turkish Cypriot community is assured. Turkey and the TFSC are resolutely determined on this."

ATAKOL RETURNS TO CYPRUS AFTER NEW YORK VISIT

TA190620 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0500 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Foreign Affairs and Defense Minister Kenan Atakol returned home yesterday from New York. Atakol was in New York in order to prepare the ground for President Rauf Denktas' talks with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar on the Cyprus issue, to attend the UN General Assembly sessions and to hold contacts.

In a statement at the Ercan [Tymbou] State Airport, Atakol said the UN secretary general's assistance was sought for foiling the economic embargo being imposed by the Greek Cypriot side on the Turkish Cypriot community. He continued: During my stay in New York, I had the occasion to meet and talk with representatives of various countries. During these bilateral talks, I reviewed the latest developments on the Cyprus intercommunal talks and explained to representatives of countries which allowed the imposing of an economic embargo by the Greek Cypriot side that their stand was not helpful for the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem and that, on the contrary, such a stand caused a more intransigent Greek Cypriot attitude.

On his talks with the UN secretary general, Atakol said that he was reminded that his semiannual reports on the Cyprus issue failed to mention the economic embargo being imposed on the Turkish side by the Greek Cypriots and that he was asked to do so in his next report. Atakol added that the secretary general's assistance for the elimination of this embargo was also requested. Atakol said that the UN secretary general's attention was also drawn to the efforts being exerted by the Greek Cypriot side for armaments, and that his intervention on this issue was asked.

Atakol said that he had given the necessary reply to the ugly statements made by the leader of the Greek Cypriot community, Kiprianou, at the UN General Assembly. He added that his reply was distributed among all UN representatives and to the press. Atakol said that THE NEW YORK TIMES published his reply to Kiprianou and added: During my stay in New York, I tried to reply to and counter the ugly propaganda being conducted by the Greek and Greek Cypriot representatives at the United Nations. I made helpful contacts in order to explain our views and policies.

Atakol was also present during talks held between President Rauf Denktas and UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar.

OZGUR REELECTED RTP LEADER AT NICOSIA CONGRESS

TA171719 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Ozker Ozgur has been reelected leader of the Republican Turkish Party [RTP]. The seventh congress of the party was held in Nicosia today. Ozgur addressed the congress and referred to various issues. On the Cyprus issue, Ozgur said that imperialism viewed Cyprus as an unsinkable aircraft carrier. Ozgur said that the Greek Cypriot Orthodox Church, EDEK, the Panhellenic Socialist Movement in power in Greece and the opposition New Democracy and the Democratic Party, which is the extension of imperialism in Cyprus, prevented the solution of the intercommunal problem. Noting that the establishment of an independent nonaligned federal republic purged of imperialist bases in Cyprus depends upon the solution of the intercommunal problem, Ozgur said that his party wishes to speed up the intercommunal talks in a bid to achieve a speedy solution.

Referring to domestic problems, Ozgur said that the government is resisting the [word indistinct] of the constitution, and that it is exacerbating the economy. Ozgur expressed the belief that the arms race should be stopped, that military pacts should mutually be dissolved, that relations among countries, irrespective of their social systems, should be developed and that [word indistinct] should be based on mutual trust among peoples.

Meanwhile, the PLO representative in Cyprus, who is observing the RTP congress, expressed his wish for the success of the congress. Referring to the genocide of the Palestinians by Israel, he said that the culprits should definitely be punished by the world.

The congress later discussed issues on its agenda and made various decisions. A motion was submitted and adopted to postpone the discussion of an amendment on the rules and regulations of the party to the extraordinary rules and regulations amendment meeting to be held at a later date. Later, elections were held for membership in the Central Administrative Chairmanship Council, the High Honor Council and the party [word indistinct]. Ozgur was the only candidate for party leadership in accordance with a party center decision. Being the only candidate, he was reelected the RTP leader.

DAILY URGES CONFRONTING TURKISH PROPAGANDA

["My Opinion" column by "the Observer"]

[Text] We are again confronted with a well-planned and organized campaign of lies by the Turkish side which, under the pretext of the alleged armament of the Greek Cypriot side, aims at misleading world public opinion and covering up Turkey's dark targets against Cyprus.

First we had the clamor about the alleged delivery of Palestinian fighters' arms that passed through Cyprus to the National Guard. After that, we had the campaign about the alleged existence of Armenian fighters in the free areas. Now we have the fabrications about the armament of the Greek Cypriot side and preparations for an alleged attack against the occupied areas.

All this is not incidental. It proves, on the one hand, the effectivenss and devilish manner in which the Turkish propaganda machinery operates and, at the same time, reveals that there are specific Turkish targets, although unknown to us, in Cyprus that the Turks would not hesitate to hit if the opportunity were given, and they are seeking the pretexts for this purpose.

Of course, nobody here in Cyprus believes that there are Armenian fighters or that we are being armed to attack and liberate our lands by crashing the military colossus called Turkey.

It is not important, however, what we believe. What is important is convincing world public opinion -- to which Denktas is basically addressing himself -- that all this is a question of fabrications and frenzied allegations and is not reality.

However, the fact that we account for and defend ourselves for something which Turkey and Denktas should apologize over is sad and indicative of the failure of our enlightenment efforts.

This is so, because we should have done what Denktas is doing now. It is Turkey and Denktas who should be giving a reason and defending themselves for the presence of 40,000 Turkish troops and the continuous arming of these troops with modern and heavy arms.

Unfortunately, there is negligence in this as well. Instead of moving to systematically condemn the Turkish armament by citing evidence before world public opinion and foreign governments, the government now comes to apologize and defend itself against the Turkish fabrications.

What are the republic's diplomatic services doing abroad? What is the inter-governmental enlightenment committee doing? What is the Press and Information Office doing?

Of course, all that Denktas is saying are lies. In our capacity as the press, regardless of whether we support or oppose the government, it is our duty to support the government in its efforts to confront the Turkish propaganda. Furthermore, it is our duty to point out and stress the need for the government to awaken and activate its appropriate agencies for enlightenment.

This is so, because it appears that most of the government agencies have been carried away by the preelection excitement. The Press and Information Office, for instance, instead of exercising maximum activity to repel the Turkish propaganda, has become active in refuting the positions of the parties opposing the government; it is contending with the parties and newspapers and deals negligibly with repelling the Turkish propaganda.

So, it is time for the government to awaken and prepare its enlightening counterattack. Let the government, at least, forget the February elections for a while and let it deal with the crucial national issues.

ATHENS REPORTS MUNICIPAL ELECTION RESULTS

NC181331 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Municipal elections were held throughout the country yesterday in a calm atmosphere resulting in a sweeping victory for the democratic forces.

At least 172 mayors were elected by PASOK, as compared to 73 in 1978. In other words, there is a 237 percent increase. New Democracy elected 18 or 19 of those it supported as compared to 118 in 1978; in other words, there is a decrease of strength by 84.7 percent. PASOK won 90 percent of communities and towns with up to 10,000 inhabitants.

Runoff elections will be held next Sunday in a great number of municipalities. Runoff elections will be held in Athens between D. Beis and Tz. Tzanetakis; in Piraievs between I. Papaspirou and A. Skilitsis; in Thessaloniki between S. Kouvelas and Th. Manavis; and in Patrai between Th. Anninos and G. Solomos.

Results were released a short while ago on 1023 out of 1060 polling stations in Athens. D. Beis received 38.32 percent; V. Efraimidhis 18.57 percent, and Tz. Tzanetakis, 37.92 percent.

In Piraievs, at 350 out of 366 polling stations I. Papaspirou received 36.65 percent; D. Alpeas 20.08 percent; and A. Skilitsis 42.09 percent.

Final results for Thessaloniki: S. Kouvelas 40.86 percent; Th. Yiannousis 23.55 percent; and Th. Manavis 34.1 percent.

Final results for Patrai: Th. Anninos 30.26 percent; G. Solomos 41.59 percent; and A. Filias 28.15 percent.

In nome capitals, 19 candidates supported by PASOK were elected as compared to 4 supported by New Domocracy. A total of 40 municipalities controlled by mayors supported by New Democracy now have PASOK-supported mayors.

Spokesman on Averof Statement

NC181003 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] In reply to Averof's statement on the municipal elections, the government spokesman stated the following: Averof once again is unrealistic. A mere reading of the figures would convince him that New Democracy has suffered an overwhelming defeat throughout the country. The proud and independent PASOK victory, which approaches 90 percent in municipalities and communities proves that the 48 percent it won previously in the parliamentary elections has been surpassed.

New Statement, Reply

NC182020 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] New Democracy Chairman Averof made a statement tonight in which he maintained that the government and the mass media have been trying to misinterpret the municipal election results and to conceal the PASOK loss compared to the 1981 parliamentary elections. The New Democracy chairman also maintained that New Democracy has considerably increased its strength and that the same goes for the extreme leftwing, stressing that the KKE has outflanked PASOK and that this requires special attention.

MESIMVRINI ON PASOK'S 'DISTORTION' OF ELECTION

[Editorial: "'Change' Now Enters a New, Adventurous Phase"]

[Text] Numbers are implacable. The ruling party has suffered an impressive shrinkage of its popular base. It emerges deeply wounded from the first round of the municipal elections. In an effort to somehow patch up its wounds it will have to rely on very dangerous potions during the forthcoming second round of voting at the end of this week. Without guaranteeing any cure, these potions will shake even further the ruling party's authority, self-reliance and aura.

Numbers truly illustrate the merciless, dramatic collapse of the people's confidence in the party which, exactly 1 year ago, triumphantly won the [general] elections and rose to power. No delayed sophistry (like that which the government's propagandists are already concocting and which their pen-pushers will broadcast), no after-the-fact resurrection of the theory of nonpolitical municipal elections (which was layed to rest by the prime minister himself with his impermissible last-moment intervention in support of all the chosen candidates of "change"), no after-the-fact distortion of the loss (as allegedly the unavoidable aftereffect of being in power) could now bridge the gap between the expectations nurtured (and advertised) by PASOK's cadres, who raved with enthusiasm, and the painful, for them, head-on collision with the reality of 17 October 1982.

The numbers which emerged from the polls ridicule -- let us recall everything -- the pseudoscientific Gallop polls with which they tried to create an artificial "trend" through the progovernment press, which never learned its lesson from previous gaffes. The insignificant and naked numbers pulverize the PASOK newspapers' vast and stentorious headlines which forecast a "sweeping victory" and the "crushing" of its opponents as well as the conquest "on the very first Sunday" of the greater municipalities by the greens [PASOK's color].

Numbers give the lie to the prime minister -- and we are sorry that we are obliged to underline this -- who, after his heavy impropriety in the morning, committed a second one just after midnight by distorting the political conclusion of the vote in an effort to present -- by deceiving his followers -- an unquestionable failure as a success. He will be the first to suffer for this, because, as of today, Papandreou is entering an adventurous phase and it is questionable whether slithering compromises will be sufficient to deal with the overt and covert extortion efforts by the remaining "forces of change" which (turning necessity into a virtue) he hastened to congratulate.

The numbers, which the Ministry of Interior and the slow-minded ERT [Greek Radio and Television] attempted to conceal, to complicate, and to delay, clearly point toward a grave danger, even more threatening than expected by those most concerned about the country's political affairs -- the ruling party's trend toward popular-front methods in an effort to control the popular base. Next Sunday wise citizens (and there certainly are many of these within PASOK's ranks) will be given the opportunity to drastically express their opposition to such dangerous developments.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA URGES LOCAL SELF-ADMINISTRATION

NC181905 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 18 Oct 82 p 4

[From the "Views" column: "New Life"]

[Text] The local and village authorities' fresh term of office opens a new era for the institution of local self-administration. This era's main characteristic will be the exercise of true local authority, that is, to trace on the spot, study and resolve local problems.

Replying to Mr Averof, Government Spokesman Dhimitris Maroudhas observed: With his fresh statement today, Mr Averof is attempting to amend the statement he made yesterday. But unfortunately for him, there are the clear numbers. Unfortunately for Mr Averof, PASOK's great victory in the municipal elections is conveyed by clear numbers. Whom is Averof trying to persuade when he himself has not been persuaded by what he said yesterday? As for all the other allegations he has made, they would have been very useful were he writing a novel.

It is high time that the municipalities, and not the ministries' bureaucratic procedures, have the authority to decide where and how kindergartens, nursery schools and elementary schools should be established.

The role of ministries and public organizations -- for example, the organization for the construction of school buildings and so forth -- should be of an advisory nature.

The local self-administration should take over urban transport, parks and public utilities which are now in the hands of various public-law corporate bodies which are not part of self-administration.

It is high time not only to strengthen local self-administration but, through decentralization, which has been identified with this strengthening, also to free the central government from a bureaucratic burden that has been created by the rightwing's concentrationism.

The new life in local self-government will, at the same time, give the government the life and breath which are so valuable to it. The citizen will behave entirely differently when he knows that the solution of local problems is exclusively within the local authorities' powers.

Thus, an end will be put to continuous representations and memorandums to ministries for the establishment of local libraries, stadia, parks, sewage works and so forth.

But if all these things are to be done, along with the submission of the 1983 budget, there should be a solution not only to the problem of state financing but also that of the self-financing of the municipal and village authorities, and of finding fresh revenues and fresh resources for the organization of local self-administration.

PAPANDREOU REMARKS TO U.S. PAPERS ON BASES

[By ELEVTHEROTIPIA correspondent P. Makrias]

[Excerpts] New York, 18 Oct -- Prime Minister A. Papandreou has warned the United States that if there is no agreement within a certain period of time, then the U.S. bases must go, according to a dispatch by NEW YORK TIMES correspondent (Marvin Hone) from Athens. The time for the talks will be agreed upon by the interlocutors, Papandreous stated.

In an interview with the U.S. correspondent, the prime minister insisted that he is not seeking a confrontation with the Reagan administration. He added:

"Either there will be an agreement, or else we have finished with the status of the bases. In other words, supposing that we do not reach an agreement within a period of 6 or 9 months, no matter what it may be, if we fail to agree on this, it does not mean that the bases will remain as they are. It means that they must go."

The dispatch states that Papandreou is being subjected to strong pressure from the Communists and his own Socialists to issue a proclamation closing the bases.

Papandreou now states: "It was not one of the high priorities, but the time has now come. I am not sending an ultimatum to Washington, but I believe that it must understand that the current status cannot be continued."

Papandreou said that the Americans also want a speedy conclusion to the negotiations, and one of the prime minister's close aides said that Greece estimates a 6-month to 1-year period to conclude all phases of the talks.

The duration of the new agreement, Papandreou said, will be determined at the negotiating table. Sources close to the government speak of keeping the bases until there is an agreement for the dissolution of the NATO and Warsaw Pacts.

Papandreou stated that the bases are not related to Greek national defense or to NATO, but that they are "exclusively U.S. bases and that they were established under the neocolonial climate which followed the civil war."

Papandreou refused to say what his government is seeking in exchange, but added that since the bases do have some strategic value to the United States, the question of Greek national defense could be connected to the issue of the bases.

Careful Steps

The government will not undertake any unilateral action on the removal of the U.S. bases or on withdrawal from NATO and will avoid high-handed actions that could expose Greece to a Turkish attack, Prime Minister Papandreou said to WASHINGTON POST correspondent Lauren Jenkins.

In his interview, which is published on the newspaper's front page, the prime minister stated:

-- The question of the bases and relations with NATO now have a secondary position after national defense, which could be helped by the United States and NATO.

-- The need to defend the country against Turkey forced him to postpone implementation of some of the more radical foreign policy positions.

-- The negotiating position on the bases is known only by the prime minister himself, Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos and President Karamanlis.

-- What is of particular interest to him is the duration of the agreement on the bases and some control over their use so that information is not passed on to Turkey and hostile actions against third countries are not undertaken.

-- He has not asked the United States to stop any of its activities on the bases, not even electronic surveillance of Libya.

"We are against the bases, which limit national independence," Papandreou stressed.

KIPRIANOU, PAPANDREOU MEET IN ATHENS 18 OCT

NC181233 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou talked this morning in Athens with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou on developments in the Cyprus problem. They outlined prospects. The meeting, which was held in a cordial atmosphere and a climate of sincere cooperation, began at 1030 and lasted more than 1 and 1/2 hours. The meeting was attended on the Cyprus side by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Minister to the President Mikhailidhis and Ambassador in Athens Khatzimiltis. It was attended on the Greek side by Deputy Foreign Minister Kapsis and Ambassador in Nicosia Zakharakis. Ministry officials from both sides also attended.

As our special correspondent has reported, the meeting reviewed developments in the Cyprus problem. A reciprocal briefing between the Greek prime minister and the president of the republic also was held. In addition, the latest developments were reviewed and prospects were evaluated pending discussion at the United Nations, which is expected to take place next March. Finally, the issue of missing persons was discussed.

At the end of today's meeting, Papandreou told the press that his cooperation with Kiprianou will continue and will be completed tomorrow night during a dinner that will be given in honor of the president of the republic. Before the talks in Kastri, [the suburb where Papandreou lives] the Greek prime minister received a delegation from the Cyprus Committee for Missing Persons and Undeclared Prisoners. The basis of the discussion was a memorandum that the committee had submitted to the Greek prime minister before the meeting. The committee's representative expressed full satisfaction with the meeting with Papandreou.

DAILY WARNS AGAINST TURKISH ULTERIOR MOTIVES

NC161721 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 16 Oct 82 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "Who Is Threatening Whom?"]

[Text] Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktas' statement that the Greek Government is encouraging the Greek Cypriots to make military preparations in order to launch a blitzkrieg against the north and conquer the areas currently occupied by the Turks is an ill omen. Predatory powers usually find some future danger as an excuse to justify their own military preparations or their own aggressions and we have no doubt that Turkish chauvinism has not satisfied its predatory voracity by occupying 40 percent of Cyprus. Its ulterior goal is to gobble up the entire island and extend itself to the Aegean. After all, it does not coneal its intentions. Therefore it is forging the necessary excuses to justify its future adventurisms. Even recently the Turkish foreign minister questioned the Greek status of the Aegean in his talks with his Greek counterpart. Consequently, let us keep our eyes open and be ready for any eventuallity, principally by taking care of our national front's unity. As regards Mr Denktas' "apprehensions," there is a very effective way to dissolve them. It is the demilitarization of Cyprus with the simultaneous increase of the UN peace force. The Greek Government has offered to undertake the relevant expenses. Thus, Mr Denktas will be able to sleep well if, of course, there are no malicious plans on his side.

PRC DELEGATION CONTINUES ANKARA CONTACTS

TA181942 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] The deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, Zhang Zhen, has begun his official contacts in Ankara. The PRC military delegation headed by Zhang visited the chief of the General Staff headquarters this morning. Zhang Zhen was received by Deputy Chief of the General Staff Gen Necdet Oztorun with a military ceremony at the headquarters. Zhang was later received by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren. National Security Council members, namely Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, Naval Forces Commander Adm Nejat Tumer and Gendarme Forces Commander Gen Sedat Celasun, were also present at the meeting. The PRC ambassador to Ankara, Zhou Jue, was also present at the meeting between General Evren and Zhang. The PRC military delegation later called on General Oztorun and conferred with him for some time. National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken also received the PRC military delegation. National Defense Ministry Under Secretary Gen Ragip Ulugbay was also present at the meeting.

The delegation later visited the Ataturk Mausoleum, laid a wreath and paid its respects. Zhang wrote the following in the special book at the mausoleum: High respects and greetings to the founder of the Turkish Republic and its army, to Ataturk. Zhang will continue his contacts in Ankara tomorrow as well.

FRG LABOR MINISTER MEETS TURKISH COUNTERPART

TA181127 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] The labor minister of Baden-Wuerttemberg in the FRG, Dietmar Schlee, who arrived in Ankara yesterday, has begun his contacts, calling on Labor Minister Turhan Esener this morning. After being received by National Security Council member and Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, he will also meet with officials from the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] and the Turkish Confederation of Employer Unions [TISK]. The official talks, to be headed by Esener, will be held tomorrow. The various problems of the Turkish workers employed in Baden-Wuerttemberg will be discussed at the meeting.

Schlee will visit a factory built with funds from Turkish workers employed in the FRG in Konya's Kulu district on Wednesday. He will leave for Istanbul the same day and will depart Turkey on 21 October.

Kohl's Stance on Turks Viewed

NC150734 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 11 Oct 82 p 4

["Here Is the World" column by Zafer Atay: "While the Curtains Are Going Up"]

[Excerpts] Let us first talk about Helmut Kohl. This so-called master politician, who became chancellor of such a gigantic country as the Federal German Republic at a most unexpected moment, has proved even before occupying his chair that he is after cheap successes. In a statement he made on television 24 hours before officially assuming office, he said: "The Turks in Germany have increased. We are going to reduce their number." And then he began his program which is intended to disgust the Turkish workers and drive them away.

Kohl is also taking advantage of the atmosphere of "hostility for foreigners -- hostility for Turks" supported by certain politicians burning with an inordinate passion for votes.

It is true that Germany is in the grip of an economic crisis. But the Turkish workers are not responsible for it. The Turkish workers are experiencing more than their share of this crisis. Of the 2 million unemployed, 170,000 are our compatriots. They are industrious people, but as the fountains of the economy are choked up, they are helplessly waiting like their other, nearly 2 million, fellow workers.

What will Kohl do? Will he oust Turkish workers who possess all the necessary documents and who have been living in the FRG for 10 years? This is not possible. "Respect for the laws" of which the FRG claims championship, will obstruct Kohl. After staying in Germany for a definite period, no foreigner can be driven out of the country.

If 1.5 million Turks brush aside their pointless ideological skirmishes, their regional quarrels and individual interests and appear before Kohl in defense of their legal rights, the German Government can do nothing to harm them. As consumers, 1.5 million Turks are contributing extensively to the German economy. Even a small-scale boycott would be enough for Kohl to attract lightning toward himself. What about the billions of marks reportedly belonging to the Turkish workers in the German banks? What, we wonder, would happen if these sums were to be withdrawn and deposited with Turkish banks or with branches of American or Swiss banks? Wouldn't the German bankers rush to Kohl's doorstep?

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN DEPARTS FOR IRAN

TERCUMAN ANALYZES PAPANDREOU STATEMENT ON TURKEY

NC181048 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 13 Oct 82 p 4

[Article by Professor Fahir Armaoglu: "Papandreou's Sincerity..."]

[Text] Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, who is on a 3-day visit to Kuwait, posing as an apostle of peace, told a Kuwaiti newspaper that he was sincere in his desire to establish ties of friendship and cooperation with Turkey. The Turkish Government must have considered this statement important, because the Turkish Radio and Television Network (TRT) gave prominence to it.

We hasten to add that there is nothing new in the Greek prime minister's statement, nor is it sincere. We cite the following reasons:

1. For one thing, the TRT has not given the full text of this statement. It has only quoted the above-mentioned sentence. This is deceptive, because, when the full text of the statement is read it can be seen that Panandreou has only reiterated what he has said before. This is what he has been saying: "Greece claims nothing from Turkey, but Turkey has persistent demands for Greece."

2. In making this statement to the press of an Arab state with which Turkey is developing relations, Papandreou is pursuing a double tactic. First, he is trying to win the sympathy of the Arab world by showing the so-called importance a Christian Greece attaches to its relations with a Muslim Turkey.

Second, he is slyly accusing Turkey of being engaged in arming. When his statement is closely examined, one would think that it is not Greece but Turkey which is militarizing the Aegean islands, contrary to existing treaties. He sounds as if Turkey is provoking an arms race. This is Papandreou's shrewdness for you.

3. By accusing Turkey of provoking an arms race, Papandreou may have planned to influence the United States, with which he is going to discuss the question of U.S. bases in Greece toward the end of this month. The Greek press has begun clamoring that insuring Greece's security be taken up during these talks. Naturally, the Greek press means security against Turkey.

One might think that after a year's failure in his economic plans Papandreou may be wishing to soften his relations with Turkey in order to concentrate on economic issues. There are no indications in Greece's present policy of a change of method and conditions in the economic arena. Such a change would require that certain steps be adopted. And yet there is not the slightest indication of this.

In conclusion, we must not characterize Papandreou's speech as an expression of sincerity. On the contrary, it should be evaluated as an insincere attempt, slyly undertaken against Turkey. What is more, we have to bear in mind that Papandreou, who has based his entire political life and future on his animosity for Turkey, is not a man who would give up certain inordinate desires and tactics in a year's time.

FUGITIVE BROKER FACES TRIAL IN ISTANBUL 18 OCT

[Text] Istanbul, 18 Oct (AA) -- Cevher Ozden, owner of the insolvent "Kastelli" brokerage house, the largest in Turkey, will be put on trial today on charges of embezzlement and fraud. Ozden, recently extradited from Tunisia, faces imprisonment of at least one year and three months.

DEV YOL TRIAL BEGINS IN ANKARA MARTIAL LAW COURT

TA181128 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] The trial of the illegal Revolutionary Path [DEV YOL] organization has begun at the Army 4th Corps and Martial Law Command First Military Court in Ankara. Of the 574 suspects connected with the trial, 498 are under detention. The identities of the suspects are being determined at today's hearing. Once this has been done, the indictment will be read. Three hearings a week will be held until the trial is concluded.

PEACE COMMITTEE MEMBER RELEASED TEMPORARILY

TA151516 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Istanbul, 15 Oct (AA) -- Niyazi Dalyanci, former director of the private Turkish News Agency (THA) became the first defendant to be released on a temporary basis pending conclusion of the trial in the "Turkish Peace Committee case." Trial of the 27 members began in June for "trying to establish in Turkey a communist pro-Soviet regime" and engaging in communist propaganda. Dalyanci is accused of making "statements which can discredit the Turkish state abroad."

The martial law court decided, on the other hand, to call for prosecution of Prof Cetin Ozek, one of the lawyers defending members of the Peace Committee being tried for contempt of court since he had accused at court the judge of violating the laws.

VOTCP ON CONSTITUTION SECURING WORKERS' RIGHTS

TA171408 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] is an ardent defender of a national democratic constitution.

The TCP is opposed to the junta constitution, which is called the 1982 constitution. The TCP calls on the Turkish working class and the people to unite in the struggle against the junta's constitution, and to oppose this constitution in unison. This constitution is one that defends the interests of a handful of holding companies and monopolist bosses who are blinded to everything, including the workers and laborers, except ever-increasing profits. This constitution is one that usurps the rights and interests of the workers and laborers.

In replying to the question "what kind of a constitution should replace the junta's constitution?" the TCP underlines the following point: "The constitution proposed by the TCP is one that fully recognizes the freedom of the working class and all those employed to sign collective wage agreements, to strike and to form unions. The Turkish working class wishes to be organized within the framework of free trade unions. The workers are opposed to every kind of prohibition and limitation in connection with forming unions and becoming members or renouncing membership. The workers want to unite within the framework of free unions based on class interests, independent of the bosses and their (?state), and administered and controlled by no force other than the working class. The workers want democratic unions where they will have the right to express their opinions and make decisions, and whose rules and regulations, policies and administrators will be determined by the workers alone, without any outside pressure or limitation. The TCP supports, with all its strength, these demands by the Turkish working class. The Turkish working class wants the right to stage unlimited strikes, general strikes and solidarity strikes, and wants a free collective wage negotiation system on behalf of all those working, including civil servants. The TCP proposes a constitution that will legalize all the demands of the working class.

All limitations placed on rights that might be secured through collective wage negotiations should be lifted. The butcher of wages, the so-called High Arbitration Council, should be abolished. Attempts to create different scales for the minimum wage should be frozen, and a minimum wage policy which guarantees a decent existence should be implemented. All articles that usurp the rights of workers and laborers employed in small enterprises should be abolished. The incredible police measures taken against strikes should be considered offenses. All obstacles facing union activities in work places should be removed. There should be an end to efforts aimed at placing the unions under the financial and administrative control of the bosses and their state. The human crime, called a lock-out, should be constitutionally banned and all regulations that place workers' rights at the mercy of the bosses and governments should be stopped.

The TCP proposes a constitution that bans the prosecution of workers because of union activities based on class interests. The Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] trial should be stopped immediately and all unionists, workers and experts who have been detained, who are being prosecuted for defending the class interests of the workers, who have received various prison sentences and for whom the death penalty is being demanded, should be released.

The TCP believes that a constitution that guarantees all the rights and freedoms of the workers will, inevitably, be a constitution that secures all the rights and interests of the entire Turkish people, because the working class is the most exploited class in our country. The guarantee of workers' rights and interests is tantamount to securing the rights and interests of all of the other classes and strata that earn an honest living. It is tantamount to securing rights and interests of the overwhelming majority of the nation. The TCP is an ardent defender of such a national democratic constitution. Therefore, our party calls on the workers as follows: Workers affiliated with DISK, the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is], the Turkish Moral Rights Workers' Trade Union [Hak-Is] or those not affiliated with a union, unite to put a stop to the junta's constitution.

Peasants, civil servants, artisans, intellectuals, youths, patriotic officers, unite your strength with that of the working class if you want to put an end to hunger and oppression. No to the junta's constitution. No to the constitution of the employers, the bosses, the collaborationist monopolists and the landlords.

PAHR OPPOSES ISRAEL'S SUSPENSION FROM IAEA

AU191103 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 19 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] "I regret that the accreditation and participation of Israel in the general conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency [IAEA] in Vienna was prevented, and I also regret that the United States has reacted to it with measures that hinder the work adn the functioning of the IAEA." This was stated by Foreign Minister Pahr in a talk with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in connection with the suspension of the remaining payments due this year to the IAEA from the United States.

"Our basic attitude is to oppose the expulsion from an international organization. We regard the universality principle as very important and decisive," Pahr went on to say. "Every state should have the opportunity to participate in solving problems. We would never vote for an expulsion but, on the other hand, we are not against justified criticism of states.

"In the specific case concerned, Austria abstained from voting on the resolution in which Israel was criticized, but it did vote for the validity of Israel's accreditation," the foreign minister declared.

REFUGEE SITUATION BELIEVED TO BE IMPROVING

AU191033 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 16-17 Oct 82 p 1

[Summary] Geneva (APA) -- According to a report of the Austrian Interior Ministry to the Executive Council of the UN Office of High Commissioner for Refugees, the refugee situation in Austria has continued to improve during the past few months. Although refugee camps continue to be overcrowded, the number of refugees assigned quarters in small hotels and private rooms has declined to 10,000. According to the report, the influx of refugees from Poland since the proclamation of martial law has not declined as drastically as had originally been expected: Since December 1981, 5,200 Poles have requested political asylum in Austria. In 1981, 29,901 Poles applied for political asylum in Austria. On 1 October 1982, there were only 8,172 Poles among the 12,554 refugees from East European countries who requested political asylum in Austria.

SOMALI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT

AU191150 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 19 Oct 82 p 2

[Text] Abdurahman Jama Barre, foreign minister of the Somali Democratic Republic, arrived in Vienna on Monday for a 3-day official visit. In the afternoon on the same day he met with Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr for working talks focused primarily on the critical situation in the Horn of Africa where a border war between Somalia and Ethiopia has been raging for several weeks. Barre will also be received by President Kirchschlaeger and Chancellor Kreisky.

Barre is the first foreign minister of Somalia to pay an official visit to Austria.

BRIEFS

LOWER DEFICIT WITH EAST -- In the second quarter of this year, Austria's trade deficit with East European countries was 2 billion schillings, compared with 3.5 billion schillings during the first quarter of 1981. This favorable development was due to a 4.5 percent increase in Austrian exports to East European markets and a 10.5 percent decline in imports from this region. The export increase was confined to exports to the USSR, which went up 31.7 percent, and the CSSR, which increased 12.8 percent, while exports to the other East bloc countries were lower than during the corresponding 1981 period. KOHL, HONECKER MEETING 'POSSIBLE' BEFORE 6 MARCH

LD191650 Hamburg DPA in German 1401 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Saarbruecken, 19 Oct (DPA) -- Peter Lorenz (CDU), the Federal Government's representative in Berlin, believes that a meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR State Council, is possible before 6 March 1983, the tentative date for elections to the Bundestag. He made this remark during an interview with Saarland Radio today.

Asked about the Federal Government's use for the first time of the phrase "two states in Germany," Lorenz said that this has always been CDU usage. However, one wants to avoid confrontation over terminology. In all official matters the language of the treaty on the basis of relations between the FRG and GDR of December 1972 will be adhered to.

KOHL DEPARTS FOR UK FOR TALKS WITH THATCHER

LD191538 Hamburg DPA in German 1517 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 19 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl this afternoon left by air for London for talks with Mrs Margaret Thatcher. He is continuing the series of courtesy visits he is paying to Western capitals.

Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is accompanying the chancellor. Kohl's trip is also intended to prepare for the British-German consultations due to be held in Bonn at the end of next week. The chancellor will be returning to Bonn tonight.

HELSINKI REPORTS GENSCHER, STENBACK REMARKS

LD191928 Helsinki International Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has said that the FRG's foreign policy is not changing, although there has been a change of government in the country. Foreign Minister Genscher said in an interview granted to the Finnish Broadcasting Company that the Federal Republic is interested in promoting the process of detente, which began in Helsinki. According to Genscher, the Federal Republic has positive views toward the convening of a European disarmament conference. Genscher granted this interview at the conclusion of Foreign Minister Par Stenback's visit to the Federal Republic. Here is a report by our correspondent:

Foreign Minister Stenback ended his visit to Bonn over a long breakfast with Foreign Minister Genscher. The breakfast was a continuation of yesterday's discussions, but on a more open and less formal level. The main topic of discussion was the Madrid CSCE follow-up and the possibilities of bringing the development -- which took form in the Helsinki document -- to an honorable conclusion, as Foreign Minister Genscher put it.

Genscher was also able to describe the topics of the West German-Finnish talks and the policy of Kohl's new Federal Government. The change from Schmidt to Kohl does not mean changes in foreign policy, Genscher assured. There has been no change in the political line, and there is no intention of making any change. Genscher said that the FRG is situated between the East and West, and that it is in the interests of the FRG to maintain the continuity and credibility of the foreign policy of the Federal Republic of Germany. Genscher added that in the future also, Bonn will want to make use of every possibility for increasing East-West cooperation and for creating an extensive network of East-West agreements, which would pave the way for a true policy of detente.

The Federal Republic does not, according to Genscher, wish to assume the role of mediator between the two superpowers. It would be, Genscher said, an overestimation of oneself and would not correspond to the position of the Federal Republic of Germany. Genscher also said that Bonn is, above all, working within the framework of the European Community and NATO.

Regarding the main topics of the West German-Finnish foreign ministers' talks -- the CSCE and the Madrid conference -- Genscher said: Despite our different positions, Finland is a neutral country and we are a member of the European Community and the Western alliance. We are equally interested that the Madrid conference should set as its clear task the convening of a European disarmament conference that can agree on extending confidence-building measures from the Atlantic to the Urals.

Genscher did not consider the idea of nuclear-free zones in Europe as realistic. The Federal Republic, too, aims at limiting armaments and at disarmament, but Genscher said that the policy of the Federal Republic goes in a different direction by negotiating the gradual elimination of the different weapons systems. Genscher said that if we strive for more realistic steps in the field of disarmament, we must take into account the weapons systems and their entire scope. This will begin with the START talks, continue with the talks on the medium-range weapons, the MBFR talks and, as I hope, with a European disarmament conference. This is, in my view, a more realistic way.

DIE WELT LISTS GDR DEBTS TO WEST BERLIN

DW190837 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16-17 Oct 82 p 4

[Text] Berlin -- East Berlin owes the West Berlin Senat about DM500 million because for decades the "GDR" has failed to fully pay for electricity expenses for the intercity railroad or to compensate Western health insurance institutions for their social security contributions. The Senat Chancellery has now submitted an appropriate list of charges to the House of Delegates.

According to this list, the demands of health insurance and old-age insurance institutions on the "GDR" amount to DM200 million alone. West Berlin's power supply enterprise, the "Bewag" Company, is owed DM22 million for electricity. There are unpaid bills amounting to DM55 million -- some of them 20 years old -- for construction work on Reichsbahn [GDR railroad] premises in West Berlin.

DIE WELT has learned from former Reichsbahn employees who were dismissed by the Reichsbahn Directorate in East Berlin after the intercity railroad strike in the fall of 1980 that the list of debts by the Senat is incomplete. For example, the "GDR" deducted from the wages of its West Berlin employees approximately DM100 million in income taxes alone, and since the wages are 25-30 percent below the salary level of the federal railroad, the "GDR" has cleared a profit of about DM290 million over a period of more than 30 years.

DEFENSE MINISTER REAFFIRMS ATLANTIC SOLIDARITY

LD200954 Hamburg DPA in German 0929 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Hagen, 20 Oct (DPA) -- Defense Minister Manfred Woerner wants to consolidate the Atlantic alliance and remove any differences which have arisen, particularly in relations with the United States. Two weeks after assuming office, Woerner stated today at the 26th meeting of Bundeswehr commanding officers in Hagen that no one should have any doubts that the new Bonn government will uphold German interests with the utmost determination. There should be even closer cooperation with France on security policy.

Addressing about 400 admirals and generals, Woerner said that he faces a mountain of unresolved problems. In the Bundeswehr, priority should once again be given to the individual.

BUNDESWEHR OFFICIAL ON MISSILE DEPLOYMENT

LD191934 Hamburg DPA in German 1210 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Hagen, 19 Oct (DPA) -- Inspector General Juergen Brandt has made it unmistakably clear that the siting of the first new NATO medium-range nuclear missiles will start in West Europe at the end of 1983 if no results have been achieved by then at the East-West Geneva disarmament talks.

Addressing the 26th commanders' meeting in Hagen today, Brandt told about 400 generals, admirals and colonels that the Atlantic alliance's dual decision could become the focus of domestic policy discussion during the next 12 months. "In all these arguments, the Bundeswehr will be one of the targets, one of the objects for attack."

Altogether, 96 of the 464 cruise missiles planned for Europe are to be sited in the Federal Republic. In addition, 108 Pershing II missiles are to be sited. England has already declared its readiness to take 160 cruise missiles. Italy will take 112. The Netherlands and Belgium have so far reserved their position on the issue.

Brandt noted that it seems to be a problem for many citizens to identify with the Bundeswehr's task. It is noticeable that society tends "to discharge and delegate its will for defense to the Bundeswehr and to leave concern for external security to a few politicians and soldiers." He sees with satisfaction, however, that soldiers, and particuarly officers, have learned to discuss their mission publicly. It would be important in discussions about peace "for the Bundeswehr and its soldiers to submit themselves to discussion freely and with self-confidence and to use this to consolidate their own motivation, as is already happening."

CSU'S STRAUSS CONSIDERS BUNDESTAG ELECTION

LD191842 Hamburg DPA in German 1638 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Munich, 19 Oct (DPA) -- CSU Chairman and Bavarian Minister-President Franz-Josef Strauss is thinking about running for election to the Bundestag on 6 March. According to Bavarian Government spokesman Hans Tross, he told the CSU parliamentary group in Munich today that if his party were to ask him to be a candidate, he would "very seriously" consider it.

In such an event, he is sure to be the top candidate on the CSU regional list. If the FDP should fail to be represented in the new parliament and the CDU/CSU gains an overall majority, Strauss is tipped as the likely vice chancellor and federal foreign minister.

In a report to the CSU group today, Strauss described the new Federal Government as a "transitional government" with an "emergency" program. In the long term, the new coalition cannot exclude other important areas of policy, besides economic, financial and social policy, from its program.

BULGARIAN AGENT REFUSES TO TESTIFY IN TRIAL

[Excerpt] Duesseldorf, 19 Oct (DPA) -- The trial of 30-year old Dimitur Manolov from Varna began today before the Duesseldorf higher regional court. It concerns the betrayal of an escape bid to the Bulgarian intelligence service which resulted in the imprisonment of two women in the GDR. The charge against Manolov is that as an agent of the Bulgarian State Security Committee intelligence service, he prepared in August 1980 the escape of two GDR women via Bulgaria to the Federal Republic for a payment of 10,000 marks, but at the last minute, out of a sense of loyalty to the state, reported the plan to his control named "Stefan" in Varna.

Following his betrayal, the initiator of the escape plan, a businessman from Essen, and his two Australian friends were arrested in Varna and released only after a payment of 50,000 marks each. Manolov is also accused of having spied as a travel courier on German vacationers engaging in illegal currency deals in order to get them to spy for the Bulgarian intelligence service.

Manolov was arrested in November 1981 in Essen and has been in custody since. He had confessed when interrogated by the Federal Criminal Investigation Office and the examining magistrate, but later retracted his confession. He refused to testify at today's trial.

MIDEAST COMMITTEE OFFICIAL ON RECOGNITION OF PLO

JN192136 Amman Domestic Service in Arabic 2100 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Paris -- Claude Cheysson, French minister of external relations, yesterday evening received (Charles St Proux), head of the French Committee on Peace in the Middle East.

In a statement to a PETRA correspondent after the meeting, (St Proux) said that his talks with Cheysson dealt with the role that France is playing in efforts to achieve a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. He said that our stand is like that of the head of French foreign diplomacy who had stated that France will do its best to achieve a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East and establish an independent Palestinian state.

(St Proux) added that he had informed Claude Cheysson that the Arabs had shown every flexibility and response through the Fes summit resolutions to achieve a just and comprehensive peace in the region, and that the international community must now act to force Israel to show flexibility and responsibility in its stands to achieve the Palestinian people's national aspirations and withdraw from the Palestinian and Lebanese territories. He said that he had asked Cheysson to have France implement its initiatives in the Middle East in a practical manner by officially recognizing the PLO and inviting PLO Executive Committee Chairman Yasir 'Arafat to pay an official visit to Paris.

The French Committee on Peace in the Middle East comprises French personalities from various political trends and is working to achieve a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East.

GRAIN PURCHASE DEAL CONCLUDED WITH PRC

LD191450 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] For the first time in the history of France and China, the two countries have signed an intergovernment loan agreement for the purchase by China of 700,000 tons of cereals on credit. China is to buy a total of 875,000 tons of French wheat; cash will be paid for 175,000 tons and the remaining 700,000 tons will be covered by the loan granted by the Paris National Bank and the agricultural credit bank. The French Government will reimburse the two banks the difference between the very low rate granted to the Chinese and the current rate on the international market.

LE MONDE VIEWS ANGOLA GESTURE ON CUBAN TROOPS

[Editorial: "Toward a Settlement in Namibia?"]

[Text] By its complexity as much as by the interests at stake, the negotiations on the Namibian conflict are probably one of the most frustrating for the incalculable number of governments, movements and organizations involved in them. Nonetheless, there is reason to wonder, with all the usual reservations, whether the negotiations have just taken a new step since Angola made it known through its ambassador in Paris on Thursday, 14 October, that it accepted the idea of "making a gesture" as regards the withdrawal of Cuban troops from its territory.

Of course, caution requires us to stress the importance of the conditions which accompanied that proposal: that Pretoria should stop military intervention in Angolan territory and put an end to "to all military, logistical, air and surface aid to the armed gangs which are infiltrating Angola from Namibia" (in other words to the armed supporters of Mr Savimbi's National Union for the Total Liberation of Angola); that South Africa should also agree to sign a cease-fire in Namibia and to withdraw its troops from that country in keeping with the UN resolutions, handing it over to the "blue helmets [UN forces]."

In addition to that series of conditions, there are reproaches addressed to the United States, the only Western negotiator, Angolan Ambassador de Almeida said, to be "obsessed by the Cuban problem," and which still "links Cuban withdrawal (from Angola) with the Namibian independence process." Nonetheless, for the first time Luanda is recognizing the reality and parallel nature of the dual negotiations launched by the Reagan administration: While the broad outlines of a Namibian settlement have been achieved -- as [External Relations Minister Claude] Cheysson recalled in Dar es Salaam last weekend, when he stated that the "contact group" (United States, France, FRG, Canada and Britain) had accomplished its task, the implementation of that plan was stumbling and possibly still is stumbling against the discussions opened at the same time between Washington and Luanda on the Cuban military presence in Angola.

It was in vain that Mr de Almeida again denied the link between the two. He nonetheless repeated that if there is a Namibian settlement, Cuba and Angola will analyze "the resumption of the implementation of the program for the gradual withdrawal of the Cuban forces in a period of time decided by the two governments."

Whatever happens, any optimism must be tempered by the scope of the task still awaiting the negotiators in guaranteeing that the Angolan Government will not be defenseless the day its Cuban allies announce their withdrawal. In that regard, France probably has a "guarantor's" role to play. Indeed, the fears of a regime weakened by years of war and which inherited a bankrupt economy cannot be underestimated.

Since there is every reason to think that Mr de Almeida spoke with his government's agreement, the fact remains that Angola has just, in a way, made its entry into the American negotiations. The extreme caution of the initial South African reactions -- Pretoria initially refused to make any official comment on the Angolan "gesture" -- moreover suggests that in so doing, Luanda has placed the ball in the South African court. The Angolan "gesture" could be epoch-making.

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON FRENCH-AFRICAN SUMMIT

[Editorial: "A Message to Africa"]

[Text] Judging from the warmth of the welcome, Mr Mitterrand's second African tour has been as unsurprisingly successful as the first tour he made in May. The Kinshasa French-African summit even provided the head of state with an opportunity for "fruitful" exchanges with a large number of leaders, including Mr Hissein Habre, whose authority Paris no longer disputes. However, one cannot help wondering about the scope of the message which France delivers to its black African partners on the occasion of such visits, which are so rich in folklore and demonstrations of friendship.

First, in these times of economic difficulties, the fight against terrorism, the massacres in Lebanon or the suppression of freedom in Poland, it is not very surprising that the French public shows no passionate interest in the very serious questions posed, as the Kinshasa final communique stresses, by "the thorny problems of the constant deterioration in trade terms" for states which are victims of "the deterioration in the international economic situation." The French merely paid routine attention to that.

Mr Mitterrand probably took care to remind the Africans that France's aid was "a useful, sometimes, necessary contribution, but merely complements talent for work and the gift of imagination." Despite that explanation, France's African partners nonetheless seem to be counting on increased aid from Paris. In view of the serious difficulties at home, would it not have been better to place more emphasis on the inevitable limits of French aid?

To suggest, as people now are, that France will devote 0.52 percent of its gross national product to Third World aid in 1982 -- as against 0.42 percent this year -- is perhaps a little risky when you do not yet know what the French gross national product will be next year and when you are aware of the little public support for that plan.

The France-African summits are traditionally an opportunity for an exchange of news and explanations among partners who do not always understand each other. That is a useful function and explains the grumbling of a large number of French-speaking countries about the presence in Kinshasa of a large number of invited [non-French-speaking] countries -- nearly 20 -- an exercise which will probably not be repeated at the next summit in Paris in 1983.

Finally, any policy, if it is to be intelligible, must be able to rely on appropriate tools. The reason why France's African policy gives the impression of a degree of confusion, as in the past, is because there still seems to be too many decisionmaking centers and because the Elysee is all too often forced to intervene, as a last resort, to restore some order and reassure its African partners. In addition, the prestige and means of action of the Development and Cooperation Ministry -- which ought to be that policy's preferential tool -- are already feeling the effects of a reform whose scope and interest are not understood in Africa.

Paris' task is particularly thankless since a large number of French-speaking Africans have an instinctive affection for France and have complete confidence in it. But, rather than merely attack U.S. monetary policy -- a proper but easy target -- would it not be better to tell Africa more emphatically that it must rely primarily on itself?

LE MONDE VIEWS ALGERIAN ECONOMIC LINKS

[Editorial: "New Phase Between Paris and Algiers"]

[Text] "New vision," "new course," "new tone," "France and Algeria are setting the example," "a historic and exemplary type of cooperation." Those are a few of the expressions which Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert and Algerian Planning Minister Abdelhamid Brahimi used liberally to describe the results of the joint Franco-Algerian Grand Commission set up on 21 June which has just met in Paris.

However paradoxical it might seem, it is also the first time since independence that such a body has met and that the French and Algerians have examined the content of their cooperation point by point.

An internal document about 40 pages long specifies the different projects which they plan to carry out, which is natural, but it also defines the "new spirit" of that cooperation, which is unprecedented as they took pleasure in stressing. "We are not prohibiting imitation but, instead, recommending contagion," Mr Jobert and Mr Brahimi stated. Moreover, that line of action had been drawn up by a "think tank" in keeping with the political recommendations inspired by the new international order and formulated by President Mitterrand and President Chadli Bendjedid after their meeting in Cancun and the French head of state's visit to Algiers.

Thus, four main axes have been chosen. Cooperation will form part of an overall assessment of relations between Paris and Algiers; the two governments pledge to ensure that the work is sustained in order to guarantee its smooth running; the two countries will encourage the promotion of all actions likely to enable a real transfer of technology and control of development; they will coordinate technical and economic cooperation through vocational training operations which should encourage the reintegration of immigrant workers.

Although liberal, this approach is nonetheless realistic. For the first time since 1971, France, whose balance of trade has always been favorable, will record a heavy deficit in its trade with Algeria this year because of the increase in the price of oil and the gas imports. In order to face foreign, especially Japanese, competition, French enterprises must offer "something extra," and that is the transfer of technology.

The Algerians, who are refusing to establish a direct link between the signing of the new contracts and the gas agreement, state that their ambitions are on a larger scale. In any case, they have given practical form to their desire for cooperation by adopting a more flexible attitude which made it possible to conclude a major agreement of transport under the terms of which France will construct the Algiers subway in particular. In addition, the Algerians assert that the business they gave to French enterprises during the first 6 months of the year is worth Fr 15 billion.

Beyond the figures, whose importance cannot be denied, Paris and Algiers consider that the turn which their relations have taken is different from the artificial reconciliation in 1975: Mr Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Algiers at that time had been essentially political and hence subject to moods, whereas the interweaving of economic and social exchanges contains a guarantee of permanence.

DIRECT ACTION: NO RESPONSIBILITY FOR EXPLOSIONS

LD191348 Paris Domestic Service in French 1145 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Excerpts] [Announcer] Direct Action states that it was not involved in the attack of the Lycee Carnot and the explosion of the booby-trapped car in the Avenue de la Bourdonnais in Paris which killed two bomb disposal experts. A letter which arrived at the France-Inter editorial offices from certain groups close to Direct Action denies the recent news reports following the arrest of Direct Action activist Frederic Oriach.

Gerome Bernaldi [France-Inter journalist], you have examined the document that Direct Action sent to our office. Can you guarantee its authenticity?

[[Bonaldi] Yes, in two ways. First the way in which the document reached us, by the same route used for claiming responsibility for attacks; a very complicated and secret route which prevents any attempt at deception. Then this document of eight sheets was typed on the same typewriter that was used previously to claim responsibility for two attacks which were identified as being by Direct Action.

[Announcer] In this document, Direct Action tries to present itself as being less dangerous than it is reputed to be?

[Bonaldi] Yes, it is very clear and precise. One: The organization has nothing to do with the murderous attacks of this summer. Two: Direct Action has no organizational link with the militants of the Armed Revolutionary Lebanese Faction. Then the document condemns the hysterical campaign, the fabrication of falsehood, lies and unrelated facts.

Is it sufficient, the document says, to manipulate an unbalanced person who places a bomb at Gare St, Lazare at 1800 and to claim that Direct Action did it, for people to demand our heads, promoting incomplete stories, to in fact call for a lynching? The document, which carries yesterday's date, does not mention Frederic Oriach, who was arrested last week, and it does not say whether the former activist was a member of Direct Action.

In fact, the extreme left organization is trying to correct things to some extent. Direct Action has always had precise and clear targets -- anti-Zionist and not anti-Semitic targets and symbolic attacks which were never murderous. [Passage indistinct] Avenue de la Bourdonnais and the Lycee Carnot, we were not involved, including through the intermediary of the Armed Revolutionary Lebanese Faction. We are not linked with them.

COLOMBO SCORES U.S. SANCTIONS AGAINST FIRMS

NC191934 Paris AFP in English 1912 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Rome, Oct 19 (AFP) -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today lashed out at U.S. sanctions on European firms breaking Washington's embargo on the Soviet gas pipeline to Europe.

In an interview published in the newspaper IL CORRIERE DELLA SERA, Mr Colombo attacked Washington for putting the Italian firm NUOVO PIGNONI on its blacklist of firms having supplied U.S. technology for the pipeline.

Nuovo Pignoni, along with West German, British and French firms, has been barred from receiving any U.S. energy-related technology because it supplied Moscow with pipeline equipment made under U.S. licence.

Mr Colombo said the U.S. had taken "extra-territorial and retro-active" measures against the Italian firm, since it had signed its pipeline contract with Moscow before the U.S. embargo was imposed.

But the Italian foreign minister stressed the need for a re-examination of the West's global economic strategy towards Warsaw Pact countries. He said such a study should include the transfer of strategic equipment, high technology and energy credits to the communist bloc.

Mr Colombo added that the current pipeline row between Washington and its European allies could serve to produce a "broader" vision of trade links with Moscow, as well as strengthen the "foundation of Western solidarity".

The Italian press, meanwhile, reported that Italy is still waiting for a reply to its complaint to Washington on Saturday that authorities in New York had seized General Electric gas turbines en route to Italy.

The turbines were due to be delivered to Nuovo Pignone, which is an affiliate of the state-owned ENI oil company. ENI subsequently confirmed that the turbines were earmarked for the trans-mediterranean gas pipeline from Algeria, and not for the Soviet pipeline.

The press here also reported another pipeline mishap on Saturday at the Italian port of Livorno as a 60-ton gas compressor for the Soviet pipeline was being loaded onto the Soviet freighter Alexander Dovchenko.

The compressor slipped from a crane onto another compressor already on board. They were both badly damaged and had to be returned to the factory at Florence.

COLOMBO, BRAZIL'S GUERREIRO DISCUSSES FALKLANDS

AU190910 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 19 -- The situation in Latin America after the Falklands war was the topic of discussions here Monday between Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and his visiting Brazilian counterpart Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro.

The two ministers also discussed East-West relations and the North-South dialogue. The two diplomatic chiefs agreed on the need for a resumption of dialogue between Argentina and Britain in a "more serene" climate.

Colombo added, however, that discussion of the Falklands issue at the United Nations will be "delicate" and "will not be speedily concluded". The Italian minister stressed that it is important that "the UN vote have the broadest possible unity".

POPE TO RECEIVE LEBANESE PRESIDENT PRIVATELY

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 19 -- Pope John Paul II will receive Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil at the Vatican Thursday in a private audience. Al-Jumayyil will go to the Vatican immediately after his arrival in Rome from Paris.

The pontiff has repeatedly voiced the desire to visit Lebanon, and particularly war-devastated Beirut. It is believed a papal visit will be discussed during the audience.

PERTINI HAS PRIVATE LUNCHEON WITH POPE JOHN PAUL

AU192004 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Excerpt] (ANSA) Rome, October 19 -- Pope John Paul II was Italian chief- f-state Sandro Pertini's luncheon guest today at the medieval presidential estate of Castelporziano between Rome and the Tyrrhenian Sea.

The private luncheon, an unprecedented event between heads of the two states, came amidst a mounting controversy in Italy about the Vatican bank's (IOR) involvement with the bankrupt Banco Ambrosiano and its alleged "moral" if not legal, liability for the 1,287 million dollars shortfall in the Milan bank's accounts.

The Vatican radio gave no account of today's talk, saying only that the pope had accepted the invitation, "warmly extended for some time", for the sake of "thanking the president for his visit to the Vatican and for the considerate care he showed", during the pope's [word indistinct] the May 1981 assassination attempt.

INTERIOR MINISTER VIEWS ANTI-JEWISH ATTACKS

AU191555 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 19 -- Italian foreign policy has always asserted "in the most explicit way" Israel's right to its existence and security and the Palestinians' right to their land, Italian Interior Minister Virgioni Rognoni told the Senate here today in answering questions on the October 9 attack on the Rome synagogue.

The attack left a two-year-old child dead and some 37 persons injured. They were the victims of four handgrenades hurled into the crowd leaving the synagogue after a religious ceremony.

According to Rognoni, there has never been space for anti-Semitism in Italy, even during Fascism "as shown by the rejection of the Fascist racial laws by the country's civil conscience".

He added that after the attack the Italian authorities have now organized a permanent guard for all possible targets of anti-Jewish attacks in Rome.

In other points, he confirmed that the Italian police is working in close cooperation with other European police forces because of "analogies with other anti-Jewish attacks which suggest a single criminal design".

In the search for the mastermind behind the synagogue attack, heavy suspicions are centered on Palestinian dissident (Abu Nidal), who was expelled from and sentenced to death by the Palestine Liberation Organization a few years ago and is now seen as the guiding hand behind the slaying of PLO officials in Europe and attacks on various Jewish targets, including the synagogue in Vienna.

CPSU'S ZAGLADIN TO VISIT 20 OCT, MEET BERLINGUER

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 19 -- Vadim Zagladin, a member of the Soviet Communisty Party Central Committee and head of its Foreign Bureau, will arrive in Italy tomorrow at the invitation of the Modena Gramsci Institute, the Italian Communist Party's Marxist research center.

Zagladin will deliver a speech on Soviet foreign policy. Zagladin will also have talks with the Italian Communist Party's International Research Center (CESPI) and will meet with Italian Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer.

Zagladin said in an interview with the PCI newspaper "L'UNITA" that his visit to Italy "falls within the framework of the development of relations between the Italian and Soviet Communist Parties, to which we attribute a great importance".

This will be the first visit to Italy by a Soviet official after the Italian party's condemnation of events in Poland. With reference to the banning of the independent trade union Solidarity in Poland, Zagladin said that "first of all it was decided not by the Polish Government but by the Polish parliament, the highest state organ in the country.

"Secondly", he added, "it was not a banning of one union or another, but adoption of a law which foresees the construction and development of the union movement in Poland on a new basis, which eliminates the negative residues of the past".

PCI SECRETARIAT ATTACKS BAN ON SOLIDARITY

PM191403 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 14 Oct 82 p]

[Apparent text of PCI Secretariat 13 October statement]

[Text] The serious news about the tensions and clashes taking place in Poland following the dissolution by law of the trade union Solidarity, with which the majority of Polish workers identified, confirms that the recourse to martial law and to repressive measures damaging to the rights of freedom and of trade union organization do not constitute a solution to the social and political crisis that has existed in Poland for over 2 years. The PCI renews its protest and condemnation in connection with actions and measures which are in themselves unacceptable and which exacerbate the tensions and splits in social and political relations.

This is not the way to bring about and develop the free and responsible dialogue among the various representative and components of Polish society, which remains the prime and essential condition for starting, in the interests of socialism itself, to resolve the crisis by means of a policy of democratic renewal and thorough reforms.

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES -- (ANSA) Rome, October 1 -- Two million 119 thousand Italians are unemployed, 9.2 percent with respect those holding down jobs. [sentence as received] The latest quarterly statistics released here Thursday show one million, 624 of the jobless are under 29 years of age, and of these, 36.2 percent have high school or university diplomas. Unemployment strikes particularly hard at women, 15.1 percent of the working age population compared with 6.2 percent of working age men. [Text] [Rome ANSA in English 0833 GMT 1 Oct 82 AU]

PRODUCTION FIGURE SETBACK -- (ANSA) Rome, October 2 -- A sudden industrial setback in June dragged the level of Italian production 3.9 percent lower than it was a year earlier, according to the latest figures released by the National Statistics Board. The consumer goods industries took the worst fall, tumbling 5.2 percent, while the production of investment goods slipped 4.7 percent with respect to the level registered in June 1981. The first six months of year saw the production index hoisted a mere 0.3 as compared with 1981 even though there was ten working days more on the calendar. FREITAS SEEKS UNANIMOUS APPROVAL FOR DEFENSE LAW

[Excerpt] "The government is prepared to consider proposed amendments to the national defense law from the opposition parties, provided they respect the principles embodied in the revision of the Constitution," Prof Diogo Freitas do Amaral asserted in Oporto in the course of a meeting with northern journalists, during which he gave an account of the document, which will be submitted to the Assembly of the Republic for debate and approval next Thursday.

The deputy premier and defense minister emphasized that "we do not regard it as a perfect or complete document," but defended his wish to see it approved unanimously. However, he stressed that was not necessary, while expressing the hope that it will win the approval of the deputies of the "two-thirds majority who approved the revision of the Constitution."

The national defense law, Freitas do Amaral explained, is a keystone for building the state and is needed for Portugal's physical and legal order. In his opinion, the document could only be drafted now, because of the previous existence of Council of the Revolution, and also because "the conditions for its being approved in the Assembly of the Republic have only now been found."

The text now approved by the cabinet was submitted to the political parties a few days ago, and has elicited, according to Freitas do Amaral, no proposed amendment. However, the defense minister warned, "this does not mean that none will arise in the course of the debate in the Assembly of the Republic."

In Freitas do Amaral's opinion, this national defense bill is identical to those implemented in most European countries, and its principal aim is to "resist an external enemy." In this context and confronted with a comparison with Loureiro dos Santos' document, Freitas do Amaral maintained that that military man's document represents a conception rather widespread in Latin America, but "entails some dangers," since it envisages struggle not only against "an external enemy but also against an internal enemy," -- something which, in the defense minister's opinion, "lends itself to the overthrow of institutions, regardless of democracy."

SWISS EMBASSY BOMBING CAUSES NO DAMAGE, INJURIES

PA181501 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1431 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Lisbon, 18 Oct (EFE) -- A fire bomb exploded at the Swiss Embassy here. The bomb caused no damage or injuries. An official disclosed that the ambassador found the bomb, a "Molotov cocktail" type, at the embassy door this morning. He had awoken when he smelled something burning.

A Hungarian exile claimed responsibility for the attack in a telephone call. He said that he "tried to burn the embassy to draw the developed countries' attention to the refugee problem."

Apparently this was carried out by Adam Paragh, a Hungarian who tried to hijack a Portuguese "TAP" airliner in October 1978 and divert it to Madeira.

Paragh was tried in Lisbon on that occasion and the court considered him "not dangerous" to society and released him.

TWO ARMY OFFICERS TRANSFERRED FROM MADRID

LD191226 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Military sources have told Spanish radio that the Armed Forces Official Gazette today published the compulsory transfer of Infantry Lt Col Angel (Sanchez Aranda) from Madrid to Almeria and of Col Antonio (Cisque de Canut) from Madrid to Santa Cruz de Tenerife.

Engineer Col Antonio (Cisque de Canut), who is on the active service list, was held in enforced standby [disponible forzoso] in the Madrid garrison and is now transferred to a post in the offices of the military governor of Santa Cruz de Tenerife.

Lt Col Angel (Sanchez Aranda), who is also on the active service list and holds a General Staff diploma, occupied a post on the staff of the Captaincy General of the 1st Military Region and is now transferred to the Recruiting and Mobilization Zone No 93, which is administered by the military governor of Almeria.

These compulsory transfers are provided for by Article 55 of the 1976 regulations on filling vacancies, which give the minister of defense wideranging administrative powers in such matters.

UDC'S LAVILLA COMMENTS ON ELECTION ISSUES

PM191339 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 7 Oct 82 p 12

[Interview with Union of Democratic Center (UCD) Chairman Landelino Lavilla during car journey from Madrid to Chinchon by Ramon Pi and Pau Baquero -- date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Let us take, Mr Lavilla, the first hypothesis: The UCD wins and governs. What are the principal priorities, the guidelines of a government policy?

[Answer] Within the election program as a whole, I will highlight two priorities especially: economic policy, whose fundamental aspect is the struggle against unemployment, and the strengthening of the democratic system. In economic policy, important gains have been achieved over the last few years: Our dependence on oil has been reduced; inflation has been halted; there has been an increase in exports; and, for the first time, in 1982 we have curbed the process of destruction of employment. Henceforth, we must begin recovery with criteria substantially different from those of the Popular Alliance and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE]. We must increase private enterprise; we do not want a leading role for the state. It is also necessary to support investment and rebuild employers' margins to allow the earning of profits, which are the driving force of new investments and new jobs. Without entering into the wrangling over figures, we believe that more jobs can be created with this approach than with the economic policy proposed by any other party. In addition, we believe that the tax burden should not be increased, although we do not foresee a reduction of taxes. Nor can the budgetary deficit continue to grow, although to cannot be eliminated drastically but will have to be reduced gradually.

[Question] And as for the second priority?

[Answer] I am proud to have helped create a Constitution which has given us a framework of stability in order not to dramatize each electoral struggle lest it appear that vital values are being put at stake. That is why I do not like to state the issue in emphatic terms and say that we are staking the model of society, because then we would be doing the system's stability a disservice.

Our political philosophy is the defense of the world of civil freedoms, everyday freedoms, because people sometimes also speak emphatically of freedom in general, and forget the specific freedoms which make it possible to say that we live in freedom and which are those which ultimately constitute the framework of a free society. [answer ends]

Fundamental Differences From Popular Alliance

Landelino Lavilla does not like to speak of the other parties when asked to do so; he prefers to speak of his party and what it represents in Spanish life. In his opinion, it is for the Democratic and Social Center to explain the reasons for its departure from the UCD. "Because I have seen no basic grounds with respect to its political stance and that which may be inferred from the UCD's election platform." As for the Popular Alliance, Mr Lavilla maintains the continuation of a fundamental difference as regards the Alliance's desire to amend the consititution, "although this is a point which they have eliminated for electoral purposes." Another important difference lies in the different approaches to tax policy. Lavilla rejects the term "tax counterreform," which is being applied to the UCD's policy, but he denies at the same time agreement with the Popular Alliance's viewpoints on some taxes, "such as the capital tax, which we do not wish to abolish, and still less call it a confiscatory tax."

When we asked the UCD's top leader about the electorate's possible confusion as regards several options presenting themselves to it as centrist, this was his reply: "The UCD is presenting itself as a center party, and the Democratic and Social Center is attempting to do so. The other political forces -- and this is a fundamental difference -- are struggling to occupy the center area. All the parties are making an effort at moderation in their election platforms, which voters would do well to compare with their respective fundamental and program declarations. However, I categorically assert the full consistency between our election platform and what we have declared at our congress. In the UCD there is no disguising of attitudes or playing down of stances."

"Spain Is Centrist"

In Mr Lavilla's opinion, Spain is sociologically centrist and has found its political expression in the UCD. In his opinion, the other parties are currently appealing to that centrism to converge in what he terms a central area. "I am proud to head a party capable of historic operation which is to act as a catalyst for this general moderation. I know that this is to some extent an electoral servitude for us, but this is also our greatness. Now then: The UCD is the center; other parties aim to occupy a central aim. It is not the same. Centrist voters must therefore go toward the genuine center; a center which is solely the UCD."

[Question] Let us turn, Mr Lavilla, to the second hypothesis. The UCD does not win and the PSOE governs. What do you believe the Socialists' conduct in power and the UCD's conduct in opposition would be?

[Answer] You have put it well. This is a hypothesis, and I accept it as such, because, of course, I do not accept as a theory the reality of a Socialist triumph. I will go further: I can see no sound reasons for any likelihood of a Socialist triumph. But taking the hypothesis which you put to me, I will say that from the Popular Alliance's stances it is impossible to win the election and it is undesirable that it be won from the Socialist stances. Why is it undesirable? Because the ideological slant, the underlying principles, the direction in which they wish to take society, matter more to me than some specific and measurable points in the PSOE's election program. Obviously, I do not find it desirable to move toward a socialist society. There are some points which make it possible to glimpse that slant, which appears very faintly in the election program, but exists: for instance, the call for the democratization of the power structure in enterprises or the strengthening of the Ministry of Culture -- which was criticized once by the Socialists under the accusation of cultural dirigisme against the UCD -- or some aspects of the philosophy of unionization. The underlying significance of the guiding elements of Socialist policy matters to me. And I do not find that desirable for Spanish society.

[Question] And as for a UCD in opposition?

[Answer] I have already referred to our deep democratic convictions. If the Socialists win the election and can translate that victory into a parliamentary majority, the Socialists must be able to govern normally. That is beyond dispute. But, naturally, we will maintain our political proposals, which are essentially different from those of the Socialists in many respects and in their underlying inspiration. We will maintain the major program points which inspire our political action and will seek to insure that they are implemented as far as possible, in accordance with the parliamentary game. And again under this hypothesis, I believe that the UCD's major role will be to rebuild from there the great center option as an alternative to that hypothetical Socialist government. [answer ends]

Before concluding the interview, we could not forget the thorny issue of the centrist party's crisis. Lavilla asserted that crisis is now history, adding, however, that, "if the diagnosis and the exposition which I made 18 months ago at the Palma congress had been accepted, the party would probably have ended its crisis at that moment, and with Suarez as chairman. I wanted to change the party without changing the chairman, and what has happened is a change of chairman without changing the party."

Lavilla acknowledged that the centrist crisis' process of maturation has been very lengthy --"a wretched process," But now that that process has been completed, Lavilla's confidence and faith in his party are complete, to the extent of stating with complete conviction that, "considering what will happen starting from 28 October, the essential factor which can balance and stabilize the process lies in a strengthening of the UCD as a political option."

"Spanish Democratic Process Is Irreversible"

The whole issue of the latest military events could not be left out of the conversation with the UCD chairman, who is, moreover, the man who was presiding over the Congress of Deputies when the chamber was attacked with submachine guns on 23 February [1981]. "Operation Cervantes" and what it entailed earned this opinion from Landelino Lavilla:

"I have described these attempts as pathological in a situation which must generally be described as normal. At the same time, I have highlighted the guarantee constituted by the fact that it was the Defense Ministry and Interior Ministry services themselves which thwarted the attempt. Whether we do or do not have pathological incidents of this kind, the Spanish democratic process is irreversible. I believe that we must all work to insure that the Spanish people exercise their rights freely and genuinely on 28 October, without external influences on what constitutes the supreme action of a democracy, which is voting. This episode must not work as a factor of encouragement of the vote of fear; by no means.

CUBAN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR BILATERAL TALKS

[Text] Copenhagen, Oct 19 (AFP) -- Cuban vice-president, Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, arrived in Copenhagen today for a three-day official visit.

During his stay, Mr Rodriguez will meet with Prime Minister Poul Schluter and Foreign Minister Uffe Elleman-Jensen, as well as have a private audience with Queen Margrethe II.

The situation in Central America and the Caribbean, Cuba's military engagement in south-western Africa and East-West relations are among the topics expected to be discussed, sources here said.

Mr Rodriguez is also expected to stress Cuba's desire for a rescheduling of its mounting foreign debt repayment obligations to Western creditors, the same sources said.

The Cuban debt to Denmark stands at around 250 million kroner ($27.77 million).

Denmark had a balance of trade surplus with Cuba in 1981, exporting goods worth $5 million kroner ($6.11 million) and importing Cuban goods worth 20 million kroner ($2.22 million).

TELEPHONE LINKS WITH USSR REMAIN DIFFICULT

LD191520 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1300 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Difficulties in telephone connections between Finland and the Soviet Union continue. In the last few weeks it has been almost impossible to place a call from Finland to the Soviet Union, particularly at night, according to the General Directorate of Posts and Telecommunications. Difficult telephone connections have reduced the number of telephone calls between Finland and the Soviet Union by 50 percent this autumn. In June, over 30,000 telephone calls were made from Finland to the Soviet Union. In September, the number fell to 15,000. During summer it was still possible to dial direct from Finland to the Soviet Union, but a few months ago telephone traffic between the two countries changed over entirely to the manual switching system.

SWEDEN

POLISH 'REFUGEES' LAND, REQUEST POLITICAL ASYLUM

LD192132 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 2100 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Summary] An aircraft with 20 Polish refugees on board landed just after 1900 at Sturup Airport outside Malmoe this evening. All refugees, 15 adults and five children, immediately asked for political asylum. They reached Sweden after a dramatic flight over the Baltic. The single-engined crop-dusting plane took off after dark and made an intermediate landing, taking several refugees on board.

Before the plane left Polish airspace at about 1700 [as heard] it was discovered and shot at by pursuing Polish Air Force planes. The refugees opened a door of the plane and threw strips of tinfoil out to confuse the pursuers' radar. Neither the plane nor any of the refugees were hurt by the shooting. The plane then flew low over the Baltic in the direction of Bornholm.

The pilot made contact with the air traffic control in Roenne and was told to fly directly to Sturup. Air traffic control there was alerted. Therefore, Swedish interceptors were never sent up to meet the plane. The refugees have now been taken to Malmoe for accommodation and further questioning.

PA REPORTS THATCHER MEETING WITH FRG'S KOHL

LD192034 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1943 GMT 19 Oct 82

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] A "meeting of minds" emerged at No 10 tonight, when Mrs Thatcher met the new West German chancellor, Herr Helmut Kohl, for 1-1/2 hours of talks. The chancellor, who, took over as head of the West German Government earlier this month, is a right-winger and he and Mrs Thatcher agreed not only on domestic politics and economic policy but also on world developments.

It was their first meeting since Herr Kohl became leader, but they are to meet again next week in Bonn when Mrs Thatcher flies to the Federal Republic for the latest in the series of twice-yearly meetings between Britain and West Germany.

The two tonight discussed only briefly the crisis in relations between Europe and the United States which has blown up over the efforts of the American administration to limit common market steel exports the America.

But they did not seek to pre-empt the outcome of tomorrow's crucial meeting of the West Germany Cabinet to discuss proposals which could lead to German agreement on a joint European approach to the United States on the issue largely thrashed out today by Common Market officials in Brussels. The two leaders also surveyed East-West relations, including the Siberian pipeline which is also a contentious issue between Europe and the United States.

While the two leaders met together with only interpreters present -- neither speaks the other's language -- Foreign Secretary Mr Francis Pym and the German Foreign Minister Herr Hans-Dietrich Genscher, were holding parellel talks at the Foreign Office. Then the foreign ministers joined the prime minister and Chancellor Kohl along with the Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Geoffrey Howe, for dinner at No 10.

They were to continue their discussions later.

After dinner at No 10, the two leaders spoke to newsmen, and Mrs Thatcher said: "If I might put it this way, I think it was a true meeting of minds." She added: "We know full well one another's views on how to tackle the great problems which face both Germany and Great Britain. We are both affected by the world recession, and we have very similar ideas about how we should approach that recession to overcome it."

Steel prices were also discussed, with particular reference to the U.S. duties on European steel exports imposed from next Thursday [21 Oct]. Britain's contributions to the EEC budget formed another topic, to be further discussed when the two leaders meet in Bonn next week. Poland was considered, in the context of East-West relations. "We are both staunch members of the Western alliance, and whatever problems there may be between the members of the alliance, hey are small compared with what unites us," declared Mrs Thatcher.

Chancellor Kohl said he was grateful that Mrs Thatcher would visit Berlin with him, "To show the understanding that you feel for the situation of my divided country." Differences between Britain and West Germany were very small, he said and both wanted to further the alliance "which is for both of us the very basis of our policies."

There were "certain differences" on the Common Market, "but I am of a new generation," declared Chancellor Kohl. "I am the first federal democrat chancellor who was a child of the post-war generation, who in the years after the war fought passionately for a united Europe, and I will do what is in my power to see we will move forward towards European unity in this decade."

ARAB COMMITTEE VISIT TO UK, U.S. 'DELAYED'

LD191502 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1355 GMT 19 Oct 82

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Long-running negotiations are still continuing over the possible visit to London of a high-ranking Arab delegation seeking a Middle East peace settlement, the Foreign Office said today.

But according to diplomatic sources, the difficulties centre on how far a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organisation can be received as part of a delegation by senior ministers either in London or in Washington.

The Foreign Office said last week that the Arab League delegation was likely to visit London at the end of this week or early next week following a visit to Washington.

But today a spokesman said: "Talks to settle a date for the visit are still continuing."

Officials said they now did not expect the delegation to be in London until early November. The visit to Washington had also been delayed.

The delegation is expected to be led by King Hassan of Morocco and to include foreign ministers from major Arab states and as such would almost certainly be received by Mrs Thatcher.

The Foreign Office said today the delegation would be welcome in London, and added: "We have been told that the delegation would be led by King Hassan and will comprise the foreign ministers of Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and Syria. We have not been asked to receive a PLO representative in the delegation."

A spokesman for the Arab League office in London said arrangements for the visit were still being negotiated and it was expected that a representative of the PLO would be involved in talks at some stage.

It was still uncertain if King Hassan would be in London in person.

The Foreign Office earlier said that in July a British minister received an Arab League delegation which included a representative of the PLO.

NO INVOLVEMENT IN PLAN TO OBSTRUCT ARAB COMMITTEE

LD191208 Riyadh SPA in Arabic 0650 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Riyadh, 19 Oct (SPA) -- A British official source has denied that Britain participated with the U.S. Government in drafting a plan to abort the task of the seven-man Arab committee. In a statement to AL-JAZIRAH, published today, he said Britain had absolutely not participated in drawing up such a plan. He said obstructing the task the Arab delegation was not permissible. The British official reaffirmed that Britain does not object to receiving an Arab delegation which includes the PLO. He said Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO's Political Department, had previously paid several visits to London. The official pointed that the British Government expects that the Arab committee will submit a detailed report about the beginning of its mission in Washington, which will start Wednesday. It is recalled that the seven-man Arab committee, under the chairmanship of King Hassan II of Morocco, will visit Britain 26 October.

ISRAELI EMBASSY DENIES 'UNDERGROUND ACTIVITIES'

NC200903 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 20 Oct 82 p 8

[Text] In a letter sent to O KIRIKAS yesterday, Israeli Ambassador Dover states, among other things:

"The allegations you published in today's edition of your newspaper, which indicate an imaginary relationship between the activities of Armenians and the leaking of information to the Embassy of Israel, are fabrications. The contain not a single trace of the truth. The Israeli Embassy in Nicosia," Dover adds, "has never had nor will ever have, in any manner or form, any connection with underground activities."

In yesterday's edition, O KIRIKAS did not allege that the Israeli Embassy was related to, took part in or encouraged underground activities. What O KIRIKAS wrote was that certain reports in its possession mentioned that the Israeli Embassy received information related to the activities of the Armenians.

KLIRIDHIS STATEMENT ON KIPRIANOU'S MOSCOW VISIT

["Exclusive statement" by Democratic Rally Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis on President Kiprianou's visit to Moscow; date not given]

[Text] Democratic Rally Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis does not believe that Soviet policy on the Cyprus issue will in any way change so that decisive Soviet pressure is brought to bear on Turkey to withdraw its troops from Cyprus. In an exclusive statement to O AGON on President Kiprianou's visit to Moscow, Kliridhis stated:

"In the past the president of the republic made repeated visits to Eastern countries. He discussed the Cyprus issue and joint communiques were issued. Yet the Cyprus issue continues to remain at a standstill, because no effective pressures were exerted upon Turkey by the countries he visited to have the occupation forces removed and the UN resolutions implemented.

"Kiprianou's visit to Moscow, which was repeatedly called off in the past, is undertaken now after formation of the Democratic Party-AKEL cooperation and just before the imminent presidential election.

"I do not believe that Soviet policy on the Cyprus issue will be altered in such a way that there will be fundamental Soviet pressure on Turkey to withdraw its troops from Cyprus and implement UN resolutions.

"I would still like to hope that with respect to the Cyprus issue, the result of the Moscow talks will not be just another Kiprianou trip overseas."

O AGON Views Visit

NC171156 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 17 Oct 82 p 1

["My Opinion" column by the Observer]

[Text] President Kiprianou's coming visit to Moscow constitutes a significant political event. Without any hestation or reservations, and despite this visit's unpleasant background, we greet Mr Kiprianou's trip to the Soviet capital with the expectation that it will produce positive results.

However, Mr Kirpianou's visit is not a routine trip. It is imperative that the visit be prepared very carefully so that it will really be useful. Mr Kiprianou has to seek a clarification of certain points of Soviet policy on the Cyprus issue so that the Cypriot people will know what they can expect from the Soviet Union.

It is well known that the Soviet Union gives Cyprus moral support, which is expressed through its favorable votes at the United Nations as well as through communiques expressing solidarity with the Cypriot struggle. However, it is also very well known that:

-- Until now, the Soviet Union has not courageously condemned by name the Turkish invasion and occupation; and

-- The Soviet Union has not thus far resolutely demanded the withdrawal of the Turkish troops and confines itself to generalizations, by demanding the withdrawal of all foreign troops.

Therefore, the results of Mr Kiprianou's visit will be worthless if he goes to Moscow and secures a scentless, tasteless and colorless communique that reiterates the well-known Moscow position without this communique /clearly and unequivocally/ [slantlines denote boldface] condemning the Turkish invasion and occupation of Cyprus and demanding the withdrawal of the Turkish troops.

The Cypriot people demand -- and this is fair -- more concrete and practical help from the Soviet Union. They demand that this superpower adopt a firmer stand toward the Turkish invasion and contribute more resolutely to the efforts to drive the invaders out.

It is no secret that the tolerance which the Soviet Union has demonstrated toward the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the genocide against the Soviet Union's allies -- the Palestinians -- has caused unpleasant impressions here and justified doubts as to whether this country would be prepared to hasten to the aid of Cypriot Hellenism in the event Turkey aimed to complete its crimes against Cyprus.

This is another serious point on which Mr Kiprianou should seek to receive specific answers.

-- Is the Soviet Union prepared to take preventive measures against a possible new attack by Turkey on the island?

-- If such an attack were launched, with what practical means could the Soviet Union protect the independence and nonalignment of our homeland?

So, there are many things in the Soviet stance toward the Cyprus issue that must be clarified. This is why we consider this visit to be of significance.

The reiteration of well-known, standard, platonic declarations, which would not add anything to the entire, well-known picture, cannot satisfy our people. In order to become successful and useful, the president's Moscow visit should essentially result in:

-- A clear Soviet condemnation of the Turkish invasion and occupation;

-- A clear demand for the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation forces; and

-- The granting of means by the Soviet Union to Cyprus to safeguard its independence and avert or neutralize any new criminal attack against our homeland.

This is what the Cypriot people ask from the Soviet Union; nothing less and nothing more; and they hope they will receive them....

KKE CENTRAL COMMITTEE STATEMENT ON 19 OCT PLENUM

[Statement released by the Press Office of the AKEL Central Committee following the 19 October plenary session]

[Text] The second plenary session of the AKEL Central Committee and the Central Control Committee was held yesterday, Tuesday. It dealt with the question: "Political developments after AKEL's 15th congress and our new duties."

A statement released by the Press Office of AKEL's Central Committee states:

"Ezekias Papaioannou, the party's secretary general, presented a wide-ranging recommendation on the subject. The recommendation covered and shed light, in an analytical and factual manner, both on international and domestic political developments. Special emphasis was placed on the critical and delicate situation in the Near and Middle East areas, on the progress and the prospects of the Cyprus political problem, on developments on the domestic Cypriot front, on the historic and definitive character of democratic cooperation between the Democratic Party and AKEL, and on the forthcoming presidential election.

"AKEL's secretary general proclaimed in the most emphatic manner that the gates to democratic cooperation are and will reamin wide open for every Cyproit patriot and democrat. He appealed to all patriotic and democratic forces, irrespective of their political position, to strengthen the ranks of cooperation for the salvation and justification of our people and our fatherland.

"The plenum of the AKEL Central Committee and the Central Control Committee unanimously ratified the document of the Political Office and the recommendation of the party's secretary general. After a responsible and richly fruitful discussion, the plenum approved the AKEL leadership's handling of all the burning issues of interest to the country. It interpreted and declared the enthusiasm, faith, optimism and certainty of the party as a whole in the triumph of the national-salvation line of AKEL and the gala reelection of President Spiros Kiprianou in the February 1983 election.

"The plenum concluded its work with the slogan: 'As of today, every democrat and patriot must work for the election triumph of the democratic cooperation, for the victory of Cyprus and its liberation cause.'

"Andreas Fandis, the party's assistant secretary general, presided over the work of the AKEL plenary session of the Central Committee and the Central Control Committee.

"The text of the extremely important address by E. Papaioannou will be published tomorrow, Wednesday, 20 October."

BRIEFS

TURKISH CYPRIOT EXERCISE -- The commando units of the Security Forces of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus carried out a successful exercise in the (Kentilarion) region on 18 October. In a statement before the exercise began, Security Forces Commander Brig Gen Koksal said that the exercise was part of the 1981-82 training program, that it aimed at applying what has been taught during the training year, and that it thus measured the level of training. PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON U.S. BASES ISSUE

NC191805 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 19 Oct 82 p 14

[NBC Television interview with Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou -- date and place not given]

[Text] Question: Over the weekend you referred to the retention of the U.S. bases in your country by saying that the agreement on the bases must be completed within a certain time. What period of time will you be laying down?

Papandreou: This period is something to be defined by the two parties. What I really meant is that the present state of affairs, which was introduced in 1953, is truly unacceptable (today). There is nothing similar in any other European country and this means that we must ask for the early conclusion of the talks. I mean up to 6 months, but of course I am waiting for U.S. Negotiator Bartholomew and we will have the opportunity to decide together on a jointly agreeable date.

Question: Does your government consider the statement about a period of time as anything other than an ultimatum?

Papandreou: No, that is precisely what we do not want to do. We have made it absolutely clear to our allies and to the United States that we do not intend to proceed with unilateral actions. We are certain that the U.S. side will have the sense to behave honestly with us.

We know that the United States is a strong country with important strategic interests in this part of the world. We are not seeking a confrontation, but a solution. And according to the indications I have from the U.S. Government, the climate is very positive.

Question: What terms do you seek in these negotiations?

Papandreou: As you very well realize, if I disclosed them, I would not be a good negotiator. But I can basically say one thing: First of all, these bases must not jeopardize our relations with other the Mediterranean countries with which we maintain good relations.

I shall refer to a second issue which pertains to our country's national defense. Rightly or wrongly, we are greatly concerned about this, which we call a threat to the Aegean, to the Aegean sea, a threat that comes from Turkey, an ally. At this time we have managed to agree on a moratorium between the two governments and two countries and, therefore, I do not intend to go into details. But it is clear to us that the Atlantic alliance, NATO and the United States, itself, with its presence, with its bases, must take into consideration the fact that Greece believes it is threatened by an ally. It is a unique, almost unimaginable situation. And for this reason all the negotiations must be correlated with the question of Greece's security and territorial integrity.

Question: Don't you fear that any hard line you might adopt toward the U.S. bases or the military arm of NATO would push these two powers into the arms of the one you are afraid of, that is, Turkey?

Papandreou: Of course this is a possibility which one must bear in mind, and I have made it absolutely clear to the Greek people that we do not intend to proceed with any action that would jeopardize our territorial integrity in any way.

On the other hand, I am not prepared, nor are the government or the Greek people prepared, to say "Yes" to everything, solely because of this possibility. We will not talk under pressure or duress. We behave as equal, as ethically equal.

Question: I would now like to talk about the Middle East. Last week, after your visit to Kuwait, you stated that the majority of PLO officials no longer wish to question the existence of Israel. What has to be done so that the PLO will state this publicly and officially?

Papandreou: Simply and solely, the issuance of a statement that the Palestinians are entitled to have their own homeland and that measures will be taken to determine this homeland. President Reagan's proposal is a very important first step. At Fes the Arab states and governments went beyond Reagan's statement, and I think that some climate is being created that would allow 'Arafat to state: "Yes, we recognize the existence of Israel within its borders that existed prior to 1967, and we wish the guaranteeing of the security of its borders." I am sure that this is absolutely feasible.

Question: Mr Prime Minister, by implementing the aforesaid, you say that the PLO officials are prepared to drop from their statements any reference to the destruction of Israel?

Papandreou: The vast majority of PLO officials and Yasir 'Arafat himself are absolutely prepared to do this, but they do not want to act unilaterally. In any case, for them the most important step at this moment is that the Reagan government decide to meet and talk with them. They believe that their representative should enjoy the right of recognition [as the representative] of the Palestinian people.

PAPANDREOU ADDRESSES PRESS LUNCHEON 19 OCT

NC192007 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Hellenic Radio and Television reporter Aris Xipolitidhis reports:

The government and PASOK were conscripted to serve the Greek people's interests, stressed Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, speaking at noon today at a luncheon in his honor by the Union of Foreign Correspondents, during which he analyzed the government's domestic and foreign policies. The luncheon was given at the Grande Bretagne Hotel and was attended, apart from the prime minister and Mrs Papandreou, by President of the Chamber of Deputies Alevras, many ministers and deputy ministers, ministry secretary generals, bank governors, other officials and many Greek and foreign newsmen.

The prime minister was addressed by Chairman of the Union of Foreign Correspondents Katsaros. Addressing the luncheon guests, Papandreou stated:

[Begin recording] I must say that we are proud on this day when we complete 1 year in power. I believe that, over and above the concrete achievements which we can mention, there is also something else which one cannot easily define. This is what we can call the political climate. In essence, it is the relationship between the state and the citizen. Perhaps the most important think which PASOK has to offer Greece is to make the citizen an active citizen, to give the Greek people the opportunity to participate in the country's public life with maturity and determination and to forge the nation's progress toward the future.

In other words, first of all there is the reconciliation of the state and the citizen and the state and the people. Without a doubt there is much we could have done better. The people know this, but the people also know that all of us, the members of the government and the movement's cadres, were all conscripted to serve the genuine interests of the people and the nation in the same way that we and the people conceive them and express them.

Concerning the country's foreign policy, we have so far done our duty exactly within the framework which we announced to the people, both before the elections, in announcing the government's policy, and in our government policy statement in the Chamber of Deputies.

We are following a genuine, multifaceted Greek foreign policy. We recognize and stress that Greece belongs simultaneously to Europe, both Western and Eastern Europe, because in principle, we do not accept that the Potsdam and Yalta Agreements can control Europeans' lives. Nearly 40 years have passed.

We are a Balkan country and here we also continue a tradition which was inaugurated after the war, under Yeoryios Papandreou, which was successfully pursued by Konstandinos Karamanlis and is today being continued with much warmth by the PASOK government.

We want good neighborly relations. We want the Balkans to truly contribute to peace, detente, disarmament and the European continent. Toward this end we have already held many contacts and we will hold many more.

We are also a Mediterranean country. We are connected to Southern Europe. We must stress that North and South, the problem of North and South, exists not only between Europe and the Third World in Africa, but as in our case, for example, also in the heart of Europe, between Northern and Southern Europe, with very important and difficult problems which must be solved if Europe is to acquire a true identity and totality.

In the Mediterranean area, more broadly, we not only pursue the traditional Greek policy of relations, but we also strive to warm them up, to expand them, so that the Mediterranean countries, the countries of the Middle East, and, further away and deeper, the countries of Africa fulfill the role that suits them and the formulation of the history of our times.

We know that we are a small country and we have no high views about the prospects available to a small country. Yet we believe that every country, no matter how small, has the duty to contribute positively and in accordance with the expectations and values of its people toward the progress of humanity.

In reference to the great social changes in our country, whose foundations were already laid during the first year, we cannot but state that we are proud and deeply satisfied. It is true that a great task was accomplished this year. This lays the foundation of the long-term progress of the country toward the desired great change. [end recording]

Remarks on Cyprus Issue

[Text] Greek Prime Minister Papandreou stressed that the Cyprus issue has never been, nor is it, a Greek-Turkish issue. Answering questions by newsmen during a luncheon in his honor by the Union of Foreign Correspondents, Mr Papandreou added that the Cyprus issue is an international issue; a problem of the indepence and integrity of a UN member country.

Referring to the intercommunal dialogue, Mr Papandreou stated that the dialogue taking place in Cyprus is feigned and nonexistent, because, he added, no dialogue is being held between Mr Kiprianou and Mr Denktas or between the two interlocutors, but it is rather a dialogue between Nicosia and Ankara, which is presently there with a considerable modern military force and is holding 36.4 percent of Cypriot territory.

Mr Papandreou added: I sincerely do not believe that the present dialogue can lead anywhere. It is simply dragging on. It has been 8 years, he said, and if the dialogue is continued at the present rate, it will take another 8 years.

Mr Papandreou stressed that the Cypriot people have a right to freedom, integrity and national independence. Mr. Papandreou said that the Cyprus issue has two aspects -- the external and the internal.

As for the internal aspect, Mr Papandreou said, this must be solved exclusively by the Cypriots and neither Greece nor Turkey has a say in it. He added: Although we admit that the Hellenism of Cyprus is a continuation of the Hellenic nation, as a Hellenic state we have no claim, nor does the Greek state have any other say on the communities, apart from that of a guarantor. He added: Of course, the same applies to Turkey.

Mr Papandreou said: As a guarantor power it is our duty to mobilize the international public so that the Turkish Government may understand that the occupation of any part of Cyprus cannot be continued. Mr Papandreou repeated his proposal for the withdrawal of the Greek Army contingent in Cyprus and of the Turkish occupation troops and for increasing the UN peace force -- the additional expenditure of which would be undertaken by Greece -- so that all the interests of the Turkish community may be fully protected. This is, for us, the repositioning of the Cyprus issue.

Answering a question in connection with a conference on the Cyprus issue under his chairmanship, Mr Papandreou said he intends to complete his contacts with all the Cypriot political leaders, but added that he does not consider it right and proper to hold a joint meeting in Athens under his chairmanship prior to the presidential elections in Cyprus. Afterward, he said, we will decide.

Asked about the Cyprus dossier, he said that immediately, at the beginning of November, the Greek Chamber of Deputies president must promote the establishment of an interparty parliamentary committee of inquiry which will proceed with an investigation of the Cyprus dossier. It is clear, Mr Papandreou stressed, that the investigation will not take place solely in order to brief the government or the committee, but in order to brief the Greek and Cypriot peoples on what happened in 1974 -- the case of the highest treason in the country's modern history.

Further Comments

[Excerpt] Answering a question on the domestic situation in Cyprus, Papandreou replied that any statement he makes on Cypriot domestic affairs is to no purpose. I am not the one, he said, who is in a position to judge and determine progress of political affairs in the Republic of Cyprus. I respect the political will of the Cypriot people.

It is natural that when I am with the political leaders of Cyprus -- where there are clearly different views and strategies among the various parties -- I discuss, I listen and I speak. He emphasized that this is not a question of public statements, but a question of cooperation toward attaining a common goal for the people of Cyprus and the people of Greece.

KIPRIANOU, PAPANDREOU END TALKS; ISSUE STATEMENT

NC200629 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Text] President Kiprianou concluded his consultations in Athens with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou on Cyprus developments with a working dinner which Papandreou gave at Kastri [Papandreou's private residence] last night. The following joint statement was released after the dinner:

Within the framework of the close and sincere cooperation and the regular consultations between the Governments of Greece and Cyprus, President of the Republic of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou visited Athens and conferred with Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou on 18 and 19 October. During the consultations, which took place in a cordial atmosphere, Cypriot developments to date were reviewed and a particularly useful exchange of views was held on prospects facing the national issue.

The two governments evaluated the situation and made decisions on necessary actions in view of the nonaligned summit conference and the subsequent debate on the Cyprus issue at the UN General Assembly.

The humanitarian issue of Cypriot and Greek missing persons was also examined, and decisions were made for its speediest and most effective promotion.

The consultations were attended on the Cypriot side by Foreign Minister Rolandhis; Minister to the President Mikhailidhis; and the director of the President's Office, Vovidhis. Attending on the Greek side were Deputy Foreign Minister Kapsis; the director of the Prime Minister's Office, Makheritsas; and Greek Ambassador to Cyprus Zakharakis.

[Text] The deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, Zhang Zhen, is continuing his contacts in Ankara. He called on the armed units school and Training Division Commander Maj Gen Mehmet Onder this morning, and conferred with him for some time. After the meeting, Zhang Zhen and his delegation observed exercises carried out by the armed units school and the division command.

Zhang and his delegation then visited the gound forces academy commander, Major Gen Fikret Kupeli. Zhang also toured the ground forces academy and observed sports demonstrations by the students.

Zhang and his delegation then toured the military electronic equipment industry's installations in Macunkoy, Ankara, and were briefed by the officials.

Visits Chamber of Commerce

TA191747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, Zhang Zhen, today visited the chairman of the Turkish Union of Chambers of Commerce, Industry and Stock Exchanges, Mehmet Yazar. Yazar said that the PRC delegation's visit to the Union of Chambers was a sign that the economic and commercial relations between the two friendly countries would develop. Zhang said that the developed countries could not extend sufficient aid to the developing countries, and therefore the developing countries must develop their economic relations with other developing countries. He pointed out that for the peace and happiness of Turkey and the PRC, his country wanted relations between the two countries to develop within the framework of the principle of mutual benefit. He added that a commercial delegation from the PRC would soon visit Turkey.

BADEN-WURTTEMBERG LABOR MINISTER NEWS CONFERENCE

TA191757 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] The labor minister of Baden-Wurttemberg in the FRG, Dietmar Schlee, has said that it is out of the question for the Turkish workers in the FRG to be sent back to Turkey by force. In a news conference he held after official talks between the two countries ended in Ankara, Schlee discussed the main lines of the new FRG Government's policy regarding foreigners. He said that by trying to stop the flow of foreigners into the country, his country was trying to help the foreign workers already living in the FRG to adapt. He added that they were considering taking a series of measures to encourage foreign workers in the FRG to return to their countries, including a lump sum payment of their unemployment, old age insurance and children's premiums. Another measure to encourage them to return was to create job opportunities in their own countries, he added. For this purpose, he said, the FRG would increase the financial aid it extended to the developing countries, both directly and through international organizations.

Replying to a question, Schlee said that there was no systematic hostility against foreigners in the FRG, and that certain small incidents could not be described as hostility to foreigners.

Schlee will tour a factory in Kulu, Konya, tomorrow. The factory was set up by Turkish workers who had worked in the FRG. Schlee will then go to Istanbul. He will leave Turkey on Thursday.

GENSCHER SAYS FRG WILL NOT SUSPEND TURKISH AID

NC200742 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 17 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Emre Aygen report from Strasbourg]

[Text] Federal German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has stated that German aid to Turkey has not been suspended. Genscher, who is in Strasbourg to attend the European Parliament, which is the consultative organ of the EEC, answered questions from the GUNES correspondent on this subject. Stating that rumors in EEC circles to the effect that Germany would suspend aid to Turkey did not tally with the truth, Genscher added: "We have a newly-formed government. I can only give the parliamentary commission the report on aid next week. Aid to Turkey will continue."

The Federal German foreign minister, who has been accused by Hans Bradens, his Social Democrat Party colleague, of delaying the report on Turkey, stated that the new government will clarify this situation. When asked to comment on the question of reducing the Turkish workers in Germany, Genscher said: "This matter has been subjected to certain provisions in the protocol of the newly-formed CDU-FDP coalition government. I cannot say anything beyond this."

As is known, the coalition protocol envisions reducing the number of Turkish workers and adopting measures which will serve as incentives for their repatriation.

Following the bilateral talks Federal German Chancellor Kohl had with Italian Foreign Minister Colombo, he stated that despite the increasing unemployment in Federal Germany the Italian workers in Germany will continue to work there. Kohl added that the new government will try to find a solution to the question of foreign workers, but the solution would not push the Italian workers into a difficult position.

The Federal German chancellor will visit Italy at the end of October in order to discuss the question of labor in Europe with Prime Minister Spadolini. IL TEMPO, published in Rome, reported that the repatriation of the Turkish workers will be one of the priority measures to be taken in the search for remedies to unemployment.

FRG AGRICULTURAL COOPERATION PROTOCOL SIGNED

TA192020 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] A protocol was signed in Ankara today envisaging cooperation between Turkey and the FRG in the fields of agriculture and forestry. The protocol was prepared at the end of the meeting held by the Turkish-German agricultural cooperation agreement executive committee. It was signed by Erkan Benli, the deputy under secretary of the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, who was also the head of the Turkish delegation, and by (Peter Baron), the head of the FRG delegation. In a statement at the signing ceremony, Benli said that an agreement was reached for the two countries to undertake joint investments in agricultural tools and machinery, as well as in the mlik and meat processing industry. Benli also said that the two countries would exchange agricultural research results and agricultural and forestry experts.

In his speech, the head of the FRG delegation said that significant progress was achieved in the field of agricultural cooperation between the two countries. He expressed the belief that this cooperation would be lasting.

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN TO VISIT SOVIET UNION

TA191628 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1605 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 19 Oct (AA) -- Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Nazmi Akiman has said that Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen will pay an official visit to the Soviet Union, but that the date has not been set yet.

Speaking at his weekly press conference today, Ambassador Akiman said that Turkmen would visit the Soviet Union, and added "the relations between the two countries are suitable for such a visit."

SECURITY COUNCIL ADOPTS DRAFT CONSTITUTION

TA191612 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 19 Oct (AA) -- The National Security Council has adopted the draft consitution which will be submitted to a referendum on 7 November 1982. The draft adopted by the council provides that the referendum, if in favor of the constitution, will endow the chairman of the National Security Council with the title of president of the republic. The president will serve under the oath he took as head of state back on 18 September 1980.

Former Politicians

A 10-year ban on political activity will be imposed, according to the draft adopted by the council, on the leaders, other national officers and administrative board members since January 1980 of the party in power and the main opposition party on 11 September 1980, while a 5-year ban will be in effect for members of parliament on the first of January 1980.

The 10-year ban prohibits those involved from founding or membership in political parties, or becoming party or independent candidates in general or local elections. Former MP's are prohibited only from founding or taking active office in political parties.

Former life senators and senators from the president's quota who have been prosecuted for contempt of the state or have joined a political party are also prohibited from membership in any political party for a period of five years.

Presidential Council

The draft constitution provides for the National Security Council to maintain its functions until a new parliament is elected and convened following general elections. The council will be transformed into a presidential council for a 6-year term following the formation of the new parliament, at the end of which it will dissolve.

The council will have the function of reviewing all major legislation within the first 10 of the 15 days allotted for review by the president.

Grand National Assembly

The 400-seat Grand National Assembly will be elected for a term of 5 years. The council amended Article 52 of the draft constitution which had obliged workers to pay labor union dues directly to the union, replacing the clause by a new one which says the mode of paying dues to labor unions will be prescribed by law.

Any labor union officer is required to have served 10 years as a worker. Multiple membership in labor or employers unions is prohibited. Another clause in the first draft, which held minimum wage tax-exempt, has also been deleted by the National Security Council.

Published in Official Gazette

[Excerpt] The new Turkish constitution, which has been ratified by the National Security Council and which will be submitted to a public referendum on 7 November 1982, has been published in the Official Gazette.

The constitution draft was prepared and adopted by the Consultative Assembly before it was passed by the council. Simultaneously with the approval of the new constitution in the referendum, the head of state and president of the council will become the president of the republic for a period of 7 years with the full authority and rights invested in him by the new Turkish constitution.

FOREIGN MINISTRY ON GREEK OFFICIALS' STATEMENTS

TA191546 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Nazmi Akiman has pointed out that a positive dialogue has started between Turkey and Greece, adding that it was now necessary to refrain from making statements that might damage this development.

Replying to a journalist's question about the recent statements by Greek Government officials about Turkey, Ambassador Akiman recalled that the Turkish-Greek dialogue was restarted with the 3 October meeting of the foreign ministers of the two countries in Canada. He said that during that meeting, agreement was reached on issues that could yield results, adding: While the dialogue is developing in that direction, we hope that the official statements also lie in that direction.

MEETING ON ISLAMIC AGRICULTURAL COOPERATION

[Text] A meeting began in Ankara of the Islamic countries Food Security and Agricultural Development Conference Subcommittee. The subcommittee is assessing the work being done to increase the agricultural production of the Islamic countries and make them agriculturally self-sufficient. Agriculture and Forestry Minister Sabahattin Ozbek, who is the current chairman of the meeting, said in an opening speech that Turkey, which attaches importance to cooperation among Islamic countries, is one of the few countries in the world to be self-sufficient in agriculture and food. Ozbek pointed out that a report was drawn up on Turkey's agricultural potential within the framework of the decisions adopted at the first Islamic countries Food Security and Agricultural Development Conference, held in Ankara last night.

The minister also said that a project was underway regarding the regional agricultural and hydrological research and training center to be set up in Turkey, adding that this center would contribute to the agricultureal development of the Islamic countries. Pakistan's Minister of Food, Agriculture and Cooperatives Mohammad Fazil Janjua, who also attended the meeting, pointed out that his country supported efforts to increase the Islamic countries' agricultural production. He added that food security had vital importance for Islamic countries. The United Arab Emirates' and Senegal's agricultural under secretaries are also attending the subcommittee meeting, which will last 3 days.

Meanwhile, Pakistan's Janjua called on Ozbek this morning and conferred with him for some time. In a speech at that meeting, Ozbek said that they would assume the work to be done to develop the agricultural cooperation between the two countries. Janjua said that agricultural technology had shown great progress during recent years, and that his country wanted to benefit from this technology.

Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu received Janjua at 1700 today. In a speech at the meeting, Ulusu expressed his great pleasure at seeing the visiting minister in Turkey. Ulusu pointed out that beneficial contacts were being held with Janjua in Ankara, adding that the aim was to raise the cooperation between the two brotherly countries to much higher dimensions in all fields. The prime minister stressed that Turkey observed every positive development in Pakistan with interest and appreciation.

The transplanting of any foreign body on another living body is a difficult matter. The prominent specialist, Dr Barnard, has not as yet successfully carried out some transplant operations on the human body. Nor do I see how we would be able to transplant a people alien to the Lebanese people on a Lebanese body and on a Lebanese land. A day will come comparable to those throughout the course of our history when we saw other occupiers. We saw other occupations. We saw other foreign armies that felt at ease on Lebanese soil. They sought to implant domestic differences to strengthen their colonization and occupation of the land. We saw all the foreign forces being impelled to leave Lebanon and for Lebanon only to remain stronger. Lebanon will triumph. Lebanon will very soon, I believe, recover its independence, sovereignty, and its distinguished trait, particularly its role in the Middle East and in the world to serve peace. This will not be an artificial peace into which they sometimes want to draw us or impose on us.

He was asked: Has President Mitterrand promised you something in the cultural domain?

He answered: We raised this aspect, among others, at length with President Mitterrand. We talked for some time about France's abandonment of its cultural presence in Lebanon. We raised this aspect extensively. I believe that we were in agreement on the need to initiate new activities within this context and on the likelihood of cooperating to create the atmosphere for a culture in which we would be in full partnership.

He was asked: how about the Francophones?

He answered: We are still a member of this council [as heard]. President Hilu was its chairman. He is always an active member and we always figure as a member of this society.

He was asked: Has the misunderstanding been removed between France and the Phalangist militias, which charge French policy with being more pro-Palestinian than pro-Lebanese?

He answered: At any rate, it is the French press that has been criticized, not the French Government. If the French press has been criticized, then this is something normal. I personally criticize the Lebanese press from time to time. The reason is that in France and in Lebanon, we find ourselves in two democratic countries and everyone has the full right to criticize the Phalangist Party or the Palestinian resistance. Anyway, this matter does not jeopardize the wishes of all the Lebanese and French for cooperation and coordination of stances in the service of peace.

President al-Jumayyil was asked: The talk was about politics, not about the French press?

He answered: Naturally, at critical moments, the Lebanese want France to be more on their side. Naturally, an initiative, such as the meeting between Mr Cheysson and 'Arafat in Tunis, angers a number of Lebanese, who believe that 'Arafat was the cause of Beirut's destruction and the cause of many calamities and that his actions had led to Israeli reactions on the land of Lebanon. Nor are the Lebanese gratified to see Mr 'Arafat exonerated through this meeting. However, France is a sovereign country and France has its policy, and this policy must be understood. But this does not change the fact that France has not recoiled vis-a-vis any sacrifice to extend a helping hand to Lebanon. The most eloquent proof of what I am saying is the blood that was shed by some French officers, and even by some diplomats, in serving Lebanon, its cause and its peace in a better manner.

He was asked: How about the relations with Syria?

He answered: In my UN speech, I was very clear. We are interested in establishing very friendly and fraternal relations with Syria. The reason is that the ties that bind the Lebanese and Syrian people are much stronger than the factors of dissension between the two peoples.

SOMALIA'S BARRE TALKS WITH CHANCELLOR KREISKY

[Text] Yesterday, on the second day of his official visit to Austria, A. Jama Barre, foreign minister of the Somali Democratic Republic, met for a talk with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. Earlier, the guest visited parliament, where he met with Nationalrat and Bundesrat deputies. Foreign Minister Pahr gave an official banquet in honor of Minister Barre at the Vienna Pallavicini Palace.

YUGOSLAV FINANCE SECRETARY ON AUSTERITY MEASURES

AU200924 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Erich Macho report on austerity measures taken in Yugoslavia, including interview with Yugoslav Federal Secretary of Finance Joze Florjancic in Vienna today, with recorded answers in Serbo-Croatian with superimposed German translation]

[Excerpts] The occasion for the minister's visit to Vienna was the seventh session of the so-called mixed government commission which wound up its talks this morning without any immediate specific results. The Yugoslav side expressed a number of desires. The toughest nut to crack is the request for a $100 million loan which Yugoslavia wants from Austria. But this will remain wishful thinking. In addition, Yugoslavia is interested in generous financing of the Karawanken Tunnel as well as in additional preferential tariff rates. There is hardly any possibility of complying with these Yugoslav wishes at the moment, however.

As far as preferential tariffs are concerned, Austria cannot grant any preferential tariffs within the framework of GATT to other states on a bilateral basis.

At the talks, Austria was concerned above all with blunting the edge of the Yugoslav travel restrictions which particularly affect Carinthia and Styria. Trade Minister Staribacher today appealed to the Yugoslav minister to review these measures which unfavorably affect Austria. In an interview with the Austrian radio and television service, the Yugoslav minister stated in this regard:

[Begin recording] We have adopted these measures to improve our economic situation and exports. I have promised Minister Staribacher that the Yugoslav side will carefully examine all suggestions from abroad because we still are, as before, interested in good cooperation and open borders. We shall do everything possible to prevent these measures from having a stunting effect on the relations with the neighboring states, and above all, with Austria. [end recording]

Asked how long Yugoslavia will pursue this policy of austerity, of belt tightening or, in other words, how long the Yugoslav citizens will have to put up with these restrictions, the minister said:

[Begin recording] This largely depends on the world economic situation as well as on the extent to which we in Yugoslavia succeed in overcoming certain difficulties. We have never hidden our difficulties before the world because we hope that the world and the neighboring states will show understanding for them and that they will help us to overcome these difficulties soon. [end recording]

Financial Crisis Precarious

[Kurt Seinitz and Torsten Weidnitzer report: "Yugoslav Financial Crisis: Only the United States Can Still Help"]

[Text] Vienna -- Yugoslavia's financial crisis is worse than has been publicly admitted by Belgrade. That is why Yugoslav Finance Minister Florijancic is seeking to raise large new international loans.

As an important trade partner, Austria is also considered by Belgrade as a potential lender, since new Austrian exports to Yugoslavia and the repayment of old Yugoslav debts to Austria and the payment of interest on these debts are at stake. Yesterday, the joint Yugoslav-Austrian Commission held a meeting in Vienna. The Yugoslav side was headed by Finance Minister Florijancic. High-ranking Austrian civil servants, who do not wish to be named, have confirmed that as long as 3 weeks ago Yugoslavia informed Austria of acute financial problems and of Belgrade's wish for loans ("the situation is extremely precarious and complicated").

In a talk yesterday with KRONEN-ZEITUNG, a leading official of the Austrian National Bank drew a rather gloomy picture of Yugoslavia's economic, finance and debt situation. "They are at their wit's end. In the past few weeks many large foreign banks have precipitately withdrawn their capital from Yugoslavia, so that at present there are acute payment difficulties there. Theoretically, it would be best if Yugoslavia's financial position were internationalized, as was done some years ago with Turkey, and if an international financial body were to do a general taking of stock in Belgrade so that international aid operations and their distribution among various countries could be initiated. At present, the Yugoslavs are seeking financial aid everywhere, but it would be best for them to for them to go straight to Washington, because the United States should actually take the greatest interest in economic and political stability in Yugoslavia. Under Tito, such a development would have been impossible because he would immediately have used his contacts with Washington. But the present Belgrade leaders are to proud on the one hand and too unsure of themselves on the other. They lack the necessary authority and self-assurance."

BRIEFS

HEROIN SMUGGLERS SEIZED — Vienna police have arrested two Turks -- Sadri Gueldez, 53, and Hasan Oedek, 34 -- on the premises of the Vienna southern terminus, and confiscated a belt containing 600 grams of pure heroin found in their possession. The two men had been passengers on the Orient Express and had hidden the 4 million schillings worth of heroin in a toilet on the train, but were denied entry into Austria at the Spielfeld border checkpoint because their papers were not in order. They crossed the border illegally and rented a car to Vienna, where they succeeded in finding the railroad car on a siding, and in retrieving the heroin, but were noticed by a police patrol and taken into custody. CABINET APPROVES EC-U.S. AGREEMENT ON STEEL

LD201512 Hamburg DPA in German 1422 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 20 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Cabinet has approved the agreement between the European Community [EC] and the United States on limiting European exports of tonnage steel and alloyed steel under certain conditions.

Government spokesman Diether Stolze announced after the cabinet session today that the prerequisites for approval of the agreement by the German side are that "the burden of limiting exports should be shared" in the Community and the consent of the "Eurofer" Steel Manufacturers' Association should be obtained. In addition, agreement must first be reached among the EC partners that an extension of the agreement to other products would only be possible by unanimous decision of the Council.

The steel package worked out between the EC and the United States provides for a reduction of the U.S. market share of EC steel from the present 6.3 to 5.75 percent.

With regard to the U.S. wish that Europe's voluntary restriction should also be extended to steel pipe, the Federal Cabinet decided to approve the exchange of letters between the EC and the United States with the proviso that the consultations aimed for do not already commit the Community to actual measures. Furthermore, the Federal Government believes that the export target amounts envisaged in the exchange of letters for pipe exports to the United States will not be accepted by the German steel pipe industry. Washington and Brussels have agreed that both sides would confer as soon as the EC's share of the U.S. pipe market exceeds the current 5.9 percent.

Producers View 'Difficulties'

LD201722 Hamburg DPA in German 1520 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 20 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Government shares the opinion of German steel manufacturers that not they, but rather other European producers are responsible for the present situation. Thus, there is also understanding for the argument that the German taxpayer should not pay for the sins of others.

According to government spokesman Stolze, the cabinet was of the opinion, when making its unanimous decision approving the EC-U.S. agreement on steel, that the German steel inudstry ought not to be further burdened. It had been easier for Economics Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff to agree because the "appropriate" quotas for limitations on deliveries were to be negotiated not by the authorities, but by the steel producers themselves. Stolze said that the Federal Government did not expect, however, that the national steel industry would not to have to accept any burden at all.

Following the cabinet decision, German steel producers of tonnage and high grade steel still see considerable difficulties on the way to reaching an early final agreement. In the opinion of German steel managers, the "sharing of the burden of restricted exports" is, for them, the decisive question in order not to be punished unjustly. The provisos made by the Federal Government are important for the steel industry, which fears that the agreement means that there will be export losses in tonnage and high grade steel of 250,000 tons per year.

GENSCHER 'WILL RESIGN' IF HE LOSES NOV ELECTION

[Bernt Conrad report]

[Excerpt] Bonn -- If Hans-Dietrich Genscher is defeated by his current deputy, Uwe Ronneburger, in the 5 November elections in Berlin for the FDP chairmanship, he will resign as foreign minister and vice chancellor. "The Free Democrats will then have to look for a new foreign minister," circles close to Genscher said.

It was explained that a defeat by Ronneburger at the FDP congress would make Genscher half as valuable as foreign minister. According to Genscher, such a weakening would not only be unacceptable to him, it would be detrimental to the FRG's foreign policy.

PRESS ON PRESIDENT REAGAN'S EMBARGO POLICY

DW201207 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 20 Oct 82

[From the Press Review]

[Text] U.S. President Reagan has declared his readiness to lift the sanctions imposed on West European suppliers for the building of the Soviet natural gas pipeline if the allies suggest effective measures to deal with Moscow's misdeeds in the future.

In this connection, DIE WELT says: What is keeping the Western allies from complying with this? It can't be just their feelings of hurt sovereignty. The White House has quite clearly indicated its understanding regarding this point with the desire to discontinue the sanctions. It has now been widely realized in Washington that something is wrong with the direction they are heading. Even Security Adviser Clark, a man prepared to learn and able to listen, is open to this realization. [as received] There is agreement among the allies with regard to an important point: Nobody is interested in building the second pipeline the Soviets would like to have.

The NURNBERGER NACHRICHTEN states: Just 4 days after Reagan's offer to increase the grain export quota for Moscow, the U.S. Trade Commission presented a surprise in its recent report, which discloses that President Reagan's current argumentation is not quite correct, to put it mildly. For the first time this year, the Soviets didn't have to pay cash and were able to use U.S. bank loans to finance their grain purchases without protests from Washington. The whole embargo policy is that Reagan is now considering how to abandon the idea of sanctions without losing face. The allies can believe that he is serious. It can no longer be kept a secret in Washington that the Reagan administration has maneuvered itself into an awkward situation with its theories on trade with the East.

WOERNER, CARSTENS ADDRESS MILITARY LEADERS

LD201642 Hamburg DPA in German 1356 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Hagen, 20 Oct (DPA) -- In a DPA interview held in connection with the meeting of Bundeswehr commanding officers, Woerner made it clear that he wants to let the soliders know that here is a minister "who feels with you, who is there for you and who will stand before you."

Above all, he wanted to explain to the young conscripts the purpose of their service and to utilize them in such a way that they did not have the impression that they are just wasting time.

"Naturally, the Federal Republic's alliance commitments are the heart of our policy, but it is also important that the Bundeswehr be able to carry out its mission. That is to say, for me, the situation in the Bundeswehr naturally has the highest priority." He said he did not intend to dodge making savings, but at the forefront was the fulfillment of the mission, "and what is necessary for this and what must be done."

Federal President Carstens, addressing the 400 admirals and generals, told the commanding officers that no responsible stateman should exclude thoughts of defense from his considerations. The West is striving for a reduction of weapon arsenals on the condition that the other side do likewise. The Atlantic alliance is pursuing a policy of negotiations with the goal of gradually reducing the arms level by means of balanced and verifiable agreements, while at the same time upholding the principle of equilibrium at the lowest possible level. A unilateral renunication of nuclear weapons on the part of the West could be the end of the strategy of flexible response, the aim of which is to prevent war. Carstens again urged that continuing public discussion regarding peace be taken seriously. In his view, however, no Bible commandment could be interpreted in such a way as to mean "that we should leave our own country and people unprotected to an attacker."

Woerner said it is a central part of his work to participate in the public debate on peace and the policy of guaranteeing peace through deterrence. The government is not going to let itself be pushed around "by a noisy minority." This also applied to the public oath-taking ceremony and the grand tattoo. Service in the Bundeswehr is service for peace, and therefore, honorable service. "Those who wear a soldier's uniform do not need to be ashamed of it nor hide themselves." The peace debate is mainly limited to the nuclear aspect. West Europe's real strategic problem, namely, the Soviet offensive capability in central Europe, is still hardly playing any role.

In Woerner's view, there is every chance of real disarmament. A prerequisite for successful disarmament talks, however, is that the West not allow itself to become divided and that it negotiate in an unwavering, patient and tough manner. The West is sticking unswervingly to NATO's dual decision.

Moscow is in a position to prevent the siting of new U.S. missiles by reducing its SS-20's.

RAF-LINKED GROUP CLAIMS ARSON RESPONSIBILITY

LD201700 Hamburg DPA in German 1549 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Frankfurt, 20 Oct (DPA) -- An anonymous group has claimed responsibility for the arson attacks on four American cars in Frankfurt on Monday night, in which damage totaling DM7,000 was caused. A letter marked with a five-pointed black star sent by the group, which claims solidarity with the Red Army Faction [RAF], was delivered to a Frankfurt daily newspaper today. The police announced that in the letter, the writers state that their actions were meant to commemorate 18 October 1977, the day when Andreas Baader, Gudrun Ensslin and Jan Carl Raspe committed suicide in Stammheim Prison in Stuttgart.

LATE REPORT: GERMAN-FRENCH SUMMIT BEGINS

LD211120 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] The 40th German-French summit began in Bonn this morning. As a preamble, the ministers of foreign affairs and defense from the two countries talked on nuclear strategy. Diplomatic sources say that it is the first time since 1966 that France is prepared to give information concerning her nuclear defense strategy to one of her allies.

Ministers Hold Discussions

[Text] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- German-French consultations began in Bonn this morning with a discussion on security policy between the French and West German foreign and defense ministers. The real "summit" will take place this afternoon after the arrival of the French president, Francois Mitterrand.

Foreign Ministers Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Claude Cheysson together with Defense Ministers Manfred Woerner and Charles Hernu met at the guest residence of the foreign office to establish how to proceed with their plans for closer cooperation.

Consultations on security policy were urged at the last summit in February in Paris and are now being held for the first time. According to government circles, no concrete agreements are expected as yet. The topics of discussion are expected to include joint arms projects and the cost of French troops stationed in the Federal Republic.

Speculation on German involvement in French nuclear strategy is being regarded with great caution in Bonn today. Defense Ministry circles expressly referred to Minister Woerner's comments at the meeting of Bundeswehr commanding officers in Hagen. He said that although close cooperation on security policy is of exceptional importance, it has nothing to do with forming an axis and certainly nothing to do with a nuclear axis. Woerner is said to have added this remark to his speech only at the last minute.

AL-JUMAYYIL ARRIVES, MEETS WITH MITTERRAND

NC201806 Beirut Domestic Service in Arabic 1630 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The third phase of the presidential tour began this afternoon when President Shaykh Amin al-Jumayyil arrived in France following two successful and productive phases in New York and Washington.

President al-Jumayyil has held a series of discussions and contacts, foremost being the Lebanese-French summit discussions, which were held between President al-Jumayyil and French President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace.

The discussions, which included a working luncheon in honor of the Lebanese president, began at 1400 today [Beirut time] and continued for about 2 hours. The meeting was attended on the French side by Premier Pierre Mauroy and Minister of External Relations Claude Cheysson. The meeting was attended on the Lebanese side by Foreign Minister Dr Elie Salim, Minister of Water and Electricity Resources Baha' ad-Din al-Bisat, Ambassador Ghassan Tuwayni and Development and Construction Council Chairman Dr Muhammad 'Atallah.

At the end of the meeting at the Elysee Palace, President al-Jumayyil spoke to newsmen.

President al-Jumayyil said that his talks with President Mitterrand prompt him to be optimistic regarding Lebanon's future. He explained that, in particular, the talks dealt with the French political support for the withdrawal of all the foreign forces from Lebanon, the deployment of the Lebanese Army, the technical and financial aid for the rebuilding of Lebanon and the question of a durable and just peace in the Middle East. President al-Jumayyil pointed out that he sensed that the French president had an amicable understanding of Lebanon's problem.

He said: Lebanon is passing through the phase of restoring independence and sovereignty over its territories following years of foreign occupations. Thus, the multinational force, in which France is participating, will prove its effectiveness with the help of the Lebanese Army in reestablishing the sovereignty of the Lebanese state. President al-Jumayyil added: We also discussed the social and economic conditions of Lebanon -- conditions which require all kinds of aid in order to rebuild and develop Lebanon.

After working luncheon, President Mitterrand confirmed President al-Jumayyil's sacrifices aimed at rebuilding the national identity and said that France will be at the side of Lebanon in view of the friendship which binds it to Lebanon.

President al-Jumayyil thanked the French president by saying: We have no doubts concerning the friendship of the French people. There are letters between us written with blood -- the blood of your soldiers who were martyred or wounded in Lebanon.

The Lebanese and French presidents exchanged the highest medals.

French Minister of External Relations Claude Cheysson has expressed his country's affirmation of its complete commitment to support the Lebanese authority, whose pillars have been established through a national upsurge aimed at adhering to the independence of Lebanon. He added: This incites our admiration.

Replying to a question on the multinational force, Minister Cheysson said: We discussed all the topics that concern the Lebanese president because he is the one who decides and directs, and we strengthen his authority. The Lebanese president has raised the topic of the multinational force and the international force in south Lebanon and its possible future role if the necessity appears for the presence of an element belonging to the United Nations that can contribute to the imposition of respect for commitments from this side or the other to their neighbors. We are ready.

Cheysson added: In light of our capabilities and in coordination with the other friends of Lebanon and within the framework of the European family, we are ready to carry out what the Lebanese president wishes. This, of course, includes the multinational force.

President al-Jumayyil then received French Defense Minister Charles Hernu and Minister of Posts and Telecommunications Louis Mexandeau. This meeting comes within the framework of completing the talks he is holding in Paris in the various political, economic, military and development spheres.

It was learned in Paris today that France has agreed to participate in the international team working toward the rebuilding of Lebanon. This is the team that will be formed under the aegis of the World Bank.

The French Government today entrusted Socialist Deputy (Alain Hector [Hautecoeur]) with the task of coordinating French aid to Lebanon, including the task of modernizing the telephone networks.

[Paris AFP in English at 1549 GMT on 20 October reported that "Informed sources said France had agreed to join the United States in sponsoring an international aid group for Lebanese reconstruction, under the aegis of the World Bank. French agreement was expected to be announced during Mr al-Jumayyil's visit, the source said."

["A presidential spokesman said France would give sympathetic consideration to any requests from the legitimate Government of Lebanon. No specific figure has been mentioned for the reconstruction aid, but the Lebanese director-general of finance, Khattar Chabli, said recently that the amount might exceed 20,000 million dollars. Other sources, however, have spoken of 12 to 15,000 million dollars. Given the extent of damage to Lebanon's economy in the past seven years, donor countries would be unable to assume the entirety of Lebanese reconstructions, informed sources said."]

Statements Following Meeting

[Excerpts] On leaving the Elysee Palace the Lebanese president voiced his optimism when speaking to France Inter reporter (Jean-Noel Cadoux).

[Begin Al-Jumayyil recording in French] My visit to France and my talks with President Mitterrand appeared to me to be highly satisfactory. Political support for the evacuation process; military aid to help deploy our own forces; and technical and economic help with the reconstruction of the country are indeed the elements which, due to our traditional links with your country, we were particularly urged to seek in France. Lebanon is in the process of recovering its full independence and territorial integrity after years of occupation and interference from abroad and of mourning and destruction. This recovery demands an acceleration of the process of the withdrawal of all foreign forces from the territory. The multinational force, in which France is taking part together with the United States and Italy, has proved its efficiency in helping the Lebanese Army to gradually deploy its troops throughout the country, starting with the capital, which has finally been reunited. All I can say for the time being is that these talks give me serious reasons to be optimistic about Lebanon. [end recording]

Talks With Other Officials

[Excerpt] Paris, Oct 20 (AFP) -- Mr al-Jumayyil said his meeting with Mr Mitterrand, attended by French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy and Foreign Ministers Claude Cheysson of France and Elie Salim of Lebanon, was marked by "friendly understanding."

Mr al-Jumayyil also met separately with Mr Cheysson, Defense Minister Charles Hernu and Postal and Telephone Minister Louis Mexandeau, who, according to sources, confirmed France's support for the reconstruction of Lebanon and the restoration of its sovereignty.

At the meeting with Mr Cheysson, the evacuation of foreign troops from Lebanon, a subject he discussed with Mr Reagan in Washington, was reportedly raised.

His meeting with Mr Hernu reportedly centered on technical military cooperation between the two countries, and use of a 600-million franc (86 million dollar) credit line France has granted Lebanon to modernize its army.

Mr al-Jumayyil accorded France profuse thanks for its assistance, but left little doubt that the U.S. played the primary role in Lebanon's security and restoration, saying, "The United States is a strong ally."

He said he was planning a political tour of Arab countries which he had asked for a halt to escalating tensions, saying "Lebanon has offered the Arab and [words indistinct] much more than all the other Arab states combined."

Reiterating his wish for withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, Mr al-Jumayyil said he hoped for an increase in the multinational force to 30,000.

Television Interview

NC202133 Beirut Domestic Service in Arabic 2026 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] The French Television Channel One held an interview with President al-Jumayyil in which he spoke about Lebanese affairs and the aims he hopes to achieve from his current American-European tour. In his interview, he concentrated on the subject of preventing from reoccurring what had taken place in Lebanon during the past 8 years and on continuing to work to rebuild and reconstruct with new realities, a new mentality and new spirit.

Replying to a question on what had been said about the United States' seizing control of Lebanon on the basis of its recent initiatives to help Lebanon solve its crisis, President al-Jumayyil said: Many have been the countries which attempted to seize control of Lebanon but failed. As for the United States, its hand in Lebanon is the hand of friendship and not that of imperialism or domination. Its hand, in addition to the hands of France and all the states, is friendly and peace-loving to Lebanon and the area. They are all in the service of peace in Lebanon and in the area because peace in Lebanon is the key to peace in the Middle East.

Replying to a question, President al-Jumayyil said: We have asked for military aid from the United States and France for rebuilding the Lebanese Army and supplying it with the modern weapons and equipment it needs to meet its national responsibilities and to be on the level of effective modern armies. President al-Jumayyil added: No one can seize control of Lebanon because Lebanon today, as it had been in the not distant past, is its own master and master of its fate and relies on its many friendships in the world, including the American and French friendships.

On his meeting with Walid Junblatt at the press conference in the Marinier Palace and whether he considered it a realization of national unity, President al-Jumayyil said: Mr Junblatt has always been at my side and he has never been far away because to us, the big and broad aims are one. However, the minor differences are marginal in Lebanese political life and cannot be fundamental because of the conformity of the firm principles on which all the Lebanese -- leaders, officials and people -- agree.

Press Conference

NC210108 Beirut Domestic Service in Arabic 2300 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Report on "text" of press conference by Lebanese President al-Jumayyil at Marinier Palace in Paris on 20 October -- read by announcer]

[Text] His Excellency said: To begin with, it is imperative for me to say that President Mitterrand and I are in full agreement, without even the necessity for elaboration in the discussion of some subjects. An identity of views exists between us concerning almost all of the matters that have been raised. France stood on our side in the most difficult phases through which we have passed. We and President Mitterrand have discussed the issues of peace in the Middle East in general and, naturally, the issue of peace in Lebanon in particular. Furthermore, we have dealt with the future of the international force. At this point, I quickly confirm our agreement on increasing the number of these forces and broadening their jurisdictions.

Likewise, our viewpoints have been identical on giving the UNIFIL in southern Lebanon greater importance and more effective strnegth within what has been decided upon concerning the withdrawal of the non-Lebanese forces and armed factions.

The UNIFIL will definitely be called upon to assume additional responsibilities and to deploy on large areas of Lebanese territory. However, as regards the specific areas, it is incumbent on us to await the coming weeks. The reason is that the Lebanese issue is closely linked to a set of unforeseen elements of an external nature. In light of these given facts, we will lay down a timetable.

After having made his terse statement, the president was asked: Has President Mitterrand agreed to reinforce the French force present in Lebanon?

He answered: We have not dealt with all the details. President Mitterrand affirmed his sympathy with Lebanon. At any rate, as I have already said, France has been on our side, particularly under the regime of President Mitterrand. In addition to the good feelings, the backing was even more important. At the luncheon, I expressed to President Mitterrand the Lebanese people's appreciation of the French forces -- the blood of French officers and soldiers has been mixed with the blood of all the Lebanese in serving the values which France and Lebanon defend. The level of the French-Lebanese relations is higher than that of emotions, particularly following the intense backing that France has extended in the direction of peace in Lebanon.

He was asked: You have lauded France and President Mitterrand. However, it seems that the United States is the key [to the solution].

He answered: We are in full agreement with President Mitterrand in this respect. The relations between France and Lebanon are based on a group of elements, including the joint cultural heritage as well as other factors. However, this does not preclude our relations from also being good with the United States. Our relations with the United States have always been excellent, particularly in this phase, because President Reagan is exerting commendable efforts in the service of peace.

What President Reagan can now offer because of a group of factors -- you can imagine some of them, particularly with regard to his relations with the State of Israel -- constitutes a basic factor in the return of peace to Lebanon. In this capacity, the United States has a primary role to play in the rebuilding of Lebanon. I believe that we are agreed on this point. The European Community and our Arab friends are exerting numerous efforts within the task of reconstruction.

We now have two principal objectives: 1) security; 2) reconstruction.

In the domain of security and in the realm of rebuilding, I believe that the United States is an important ally of Lebanon. We defintely adhere to the development of our relations with the United States. However, this does not induce us to foresake loyal friendships, solid friendships and friendships going back a long time, such as our friendship with France.

He was told: I see Walid Junblatt next to you.

He said: Mr Walid Junblatt has always been at my side; he has never been far away.

He was also asked: Does this signify that a national reconciliation has been achieved?

He answered: You are aware that where Lebanon is concerned, one must distinguish between two things: one must distinguish the minor and marginal differences, or the minor discussions on Lebanese daily political life, from the basic rules. This is because the basic ingredients of Lebanese policy are: Lebanon's unity, Lebanon's solidarity with its Arab environment and with the Arab world, and the struggle for a just and lasting peace that would preserve the Palestinians' interests. Therefore, these are the three basic ingredients of our policy, naturally, in addition to openness to all the world. I believe that in this domain, neither Walid Junblatt nor Amin al-Jumayyil differ.

He added: Naturally, there are always marginal discussions on some aspects of Lebanese democracy -- and this democracy should be above all other considerations. We live in a democratic country. Walid Junblatt is the head of the Progressive Socialist Party and I was a member of the Phalangist Party, and each of the two parties has a specific ideology. However, this does not prevent us from being in agreement -- Walid Junblatt and I -- on the need to protect democracy in Lebanon, to protect individual political liberties and the ideological and philosophical liberties.

In my belief, we are all agreed on this point. However, the day when all the Lebanese will form one party and have the same vision of political life in Lebanon will definitely spell the end of Lebanon. It will have lost its raison d'etre and its mission, which lies in ideological plurality and the plurality of religious beliefs and plurality in general at all levels. It is imperative that all these things melt in a Lebanese melting pot to which we all adhere.

He was asked: Do you indeed believe that you can tell the Israelis and the Syrians: Please, get out of Lebanon, or are you relying on President Reagan to put things in their true perspective in this respect?

He answered: As you know, Lebanon is Lebanon, Lebanese territory is Lebanese territory and the Lebanese people are the Lebanese people. Therefore, every foreign force that takes action [mumarasat] on Lebanese territory is a foreign force and an artificial force. The day will come when every foreign force will be compelled to withdraw from Lebanon. However, who we thank for this is not the relevant question.

Regrettably, during a specific phase, the Syrian Government harmed the good relations that should and must exist between Syria and Lebanon. We hope that Syria will understand that it is imperative for Syria's forces to leave Lebanon in the very near future in the interests of both countries. We have a relationship with Syria within this framework and I hope tht we and they will be able to obtain positive results in the near future. We do not believe in lasting animosity among peoples. A specific problem has estranged the Lebanese people from the Syrian people and we are desirous of setting up sincere and fraternal relations -- and I hope that we will succeed in our task.

He was asked: And the Lebanese attitude toward Israel?

He answered: We should not speak of peace between Lebanon and Israel. When they talk to us about this peace, then we will have an opinion to give in this respect. Anyway, it is clear that this aspect of the problem can only be tackled within the framework of a Lebanese agreement, within the framework of Lebanese solidarity and within the framework of consolidating security in Lebanon.

He was asked: Will there be a coming visit concerning financial aid?

He answered: There will definitely be a visit -- a tour of the Arab world. It will not be a visit for begging. We are not that kind of people and that is completely out of the question. Naturally, it will be a political visit to defend the cause of Lebanon with all our friends in the Arab world. Now, as regards the financial matter: Naturally, we are in need of contributions from all the states friendly to Lebanon. The Lebanese have a basic role in the field of development. The Lebanese have always relied on themselves, even in this domain. All assistance must be that of backing. However, it is incumbent on the Lebanese to personally assume their responsibilities for the task of reconstructing the country. These contributions will not be charity -- may I quickly, specifically point this out -- but will be accepted as investments. The Lebanese are able to build the country on their own.

He was asked: How about the withdrawal of the non-Lebanese forces from Lebanon?

He answered: What is important for us is to accede to the complete and immediate withdrawal of the Palestinians, the Syrians and the Israelis from Lebanon. This is the stance of Lebanon -- the other points do not concern us.

He was asked: Will there be future meetings with 'Arafat?

He answered: This matter has not been raised. If it is in Lebanon's interest, then we have no problem about meeting anybody, whoever he might be.

He was asked about the Arab and foreign forces.

He said: I do not know whether it is possible for a human being to be half French or three-quarters French. One is either Lebanese or not at all. Are the Syrians Lebanese? While awaiting [an answer] let them become as such.

He was asked: What is the nature of the aid which the World Bank will offer for the reconstruction of Lebanon?

He answered: I contacted the World Bank, which is helping Lebanon. I am in a position to say that there are large Lebanese consortiums which have hammered out a kind of agreement to help Lebanon. Soon, we will be able to talk with more ease about these projects and about the fundamental assistance in the adventure of reconstruction.

He was asked: How about backing for and sympathy with Lebanon?

He answered: The signs of sympathy that have been shown by many friendly powers arouse our satisfaction, and this is a factor of hope as far as Lebanon is concerned. Many friendly powers have expressed their desire to stand on the side of Lebanon so that it will recover its security and sovereignty. However, at this time I cannot give details in this respect.

He was asked: Do you have any comment to make on the plans forwarded by Jordan and the PLO for the resolution of the Middle East crisis?

He answered: The sole plan in which I believe is the Lebanese plan -- it is summed up as follows: the withdrawal of the Syrians, the withdrawal of the Israelis and the withdrawal of the PLO. This is the sole plan agreeable to us.

Lebanon is the key to the Middle East. Without peace in Lebanon, there will be no peace in the Middle East. We insist that peace in the Middle East must pass through peace in Lebanon. And the withdrawal of the foreign forces from Lebanon is the basic role of my visit to the United States, France and Rome. We hope that the big powers will help us ensure an immediate withdrawal.

He was asked: What about the future of the Palestinian civilians in Lebanon?

He answered: I hope that the problem of the Palestinian civilians will not enter the market of Arab efforts to outbid each other and Arab contradictions. Let the Arabs cease these attempts at outbidding each other; let the slogans stop. Lebanon has offered for the Palestinian cause and for the Palestinians themselves more than what the Arab community and all the Arab states have offered in this respect. I greatly regret this campaign of calumnies to which Lebanon has been recently exposed as the result of some lies and disinformation stemming from the subject of the camps and the protection of the Palestinian nationals in Lebanon.

Lebanon has discharged its full duty toward the Palestinian nationals in Lebanon. Lebanon has given social and economic care to all the Palestinians lawfully residing on its territory.

I regret to say that some Arab states are still the hostages and captives of the logic of cheap efforts to outbid each other at the expense of the Palestinian people themselves. In lieu of offering real support for the Palestinians, they throw stones gratis at Lebanon to prevent it from discharging its duty in this realm.

He added: The Lebanese Army has made a total of 1,400 arrests -- all made by virture of warrants issued by the military public prosecution. Some 500 detainees have been released. Where is the calamity if the Lebanese state -- to protect its citizens and security and the lives of its compatriots -- has apprehended some saboteurs or some of those who have infringed law and order in Lebanon? Therefore, the individual, political and ideological liberty -- all these liberties are held sacred in Lebanon. They are the raison d'etre of Lebanon and the cause of Lebanon's continuity. They are the basis for the role that Lebanon plays in the Arab world. We scrupulously adhere to these liberties and to the protection of all the subjects who lawfully reside in our territory. These matters are given facts of Lebanese policy and of the Lebanese presence. Therefore, we have had enough of casting doubts and efforts to outdo each other. We will continue to ensure the climate of freedom and dignity, we stand prepared to perform all the dictates of our duty and to intercept all the dens of sabotage and all the dens that infringe the law on the Lebanese scene despite the tendentious information campaigns that this readiness will cost us, regardless of the doubts that will be case by the tendentious and hireling people who cast doubts, and irrespective of the rabid campaigns that will occur on the Lebanese scene.

Lebanon has endured enough. We have had-enough of destruction and ruination. We have had enough of doubts cast on the Lebanese sacrosancts. As of 23 September, I assumed my full responsibilities before God, before the homeland and before my conscience. I will continue to pursue this line so that I will protect freedoms, the Lebanese citizens and the safety and sovereignty of Lebanese territory. I will do these things at the expense of all those tendentious persons who cast doubts, all the hirelings, and all the rabid campaigns that are trying to take us back to the war in which we found ourselves in the past few years; that is, a free-of-charge war, murder and destruction.

President al-Jumayyil added: I will try to summarize what I have said in a few words: There is a campaign of calumnies that has been launched against the Lebanese Army and against Lebanon and it has been directed against this army's attempt to organize its affairs, to put its house in order, to control the dens of intrigue and terrorism always present in this house -- dens that operate within the hearing and sight of the whole world to destroy Lebanon and to return us to the past years of internecine fighting.

The Lebanese Government will bear all its responsibilities in this respect, regardless of the campaigns of calumny that claim to defend individual and political liberties. The reason is that it is highly necessary to control the forces of evil that try to crack all these liberties. This struggle will continue with the assistance of the judiciary that oversees all the security operations that are carried out by the security forces in Lebanon. We absolutely insist on safeguarding all guarantees for all those residing in our territory. At the least, we hope that no one will enter into a discussion with us about our security and that nobody will try to outdo us concerning our future and our dignity. In particular, we do not want our absolute determination to avert Lebanon's return to the internecine fighting and to end the conspiracies that are concocted at the expense of our independence and sovereignty to be the object of any discussion.

He was asked: France asks Lebanon what it wants. Today, did you ask for your needs from France?

He answered: I believe we have specified the needs. We have specified them in detail today and the response was also in detail.

He was asked about Lebanon's relations with the PLO.

He answered: Lebanon has always been an asylum and a haven. It has always respected a man for being a man. It has respected man's dignity without stopping to think of his nationality. Ultimately, the Palestinians are human beings and brothers as well. We are responsible for their dignity, security and comfort and we work on this basis. Unfortunately, there are residents in our land -- Palestinians and others -- who have exploited this democratic atmosphere and [word indistinct] Lebanon's absolute sanctifying of freedom and individual liberties to commit excesses aimed at cracking these liberties and destroying Lebanon's democratic edifice. We must be very clear: Lebanon has always been the carrier of the banner of humanism for man and the pioneer of liberties and democracy in the world or in an environment built on intolerance and on the various modes of dictatorship.

In this environment, Lebanon figures as the sole country for which liberties constitute an integral part of its raison d'etre. Therefore, all our efforts are now channelled toward safeguarding a sound atmosphere that would foster the growth of a correct understanding of liberties and democracy in their full and complete sense.

We stand alongside the Palestinian people lawfully residing in Lebanon who discharge all their duties prescribed by Lebanese law. However, we will absolutely not slacken, regardless of the intensity of the campaigns of calumnies being launched by a specific press against us, in destroying all the forces of evil that aim at stabbing Lebanon's message itself.

To a final question, his excellency answered: We hope that Lebanese sovereignty will be restored throughout the Lebanese territory -- from the north to the south and from the coast to Al-Biqa'. I hope that I have been clear in explaining Lebanon's reality. I hope that the world press, which has mobilized itself for this meeting, conveys the truth as it is.

AFP, AP SIGN AGREEMENT ON TELEPHOTO SYSTEM

PA201243 Paris AFP in Spanish 1315 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, 19 Oct (AFP) -- The press agencies FRANCE PRESSE (AFP) and ASSOCIATED PRESS (AP) today announced the signing of an agreement for joint exploitation of a numerical photo transmission system prepared by AFP.

AFP is completing installation of a new interior telecommunications network based on a system called "Sytin" in order to tend to the need of its consumers in the news information photo service in France.

AP will soon use the same system in its own distribution networks in order to combine the transmission of data and photos.

The transmission of text is basically done numerically. However, photo transmission techniques considerably limit the capacity and speed available for the transmission of texts when both are integrated in a single circuit, which often forces consumers to resort to two different circuits.

The AFP procedures focuses on the conversion of traditional photo signals into numerical data, which permits the simultaneous transmission of photos and texts in a single circuit without altering the capacity or speed of transmission, which are fundamental for the text.

SPADOLINI TO DISCUSS USSR PIPELINE ON U.S. VISIT

AU201010 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Excerpt] (ANSA) Rome, October 20 -- The controversy between Europe and the United States over American sanctions applied to European firms supplying the Soviet Union with parts and equipment built on U.S. license for the trans-Siberian gaslines will be "at the center of my talks in Washington", Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini said in the evening. Spadolini will travel to the U.S. capital later this month on official visit on the invitation of President Ronald Reagan.

In an interview in an Italian weekly on newsstands today, the premier noted that "relations between Europe and the U.S. are going through a very delicate phase. The positions taken by our ally across the Atlantic as regards the trans-Siberian gaslines are a demonstration of this".

Spadolini went on to affirm that, "this deadlock will not be broken by moving towards greater conflict but by going in the opposite direction, that of strengthening the partnership between Europe and the U.S.".

The premier's remarks came against the background of the U.S. Customs seizure in New York of General Electric turbine parts ready for shipment to Italy's Nuovo Pignone, on contract to build turbines and compressors for the Soviet and Algerian gaslines. Nuovo Pignone, blacklisted by the U.S. Department of Commerce, learned of the seizure on October 15 and on the following day, Saturday, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo instructed the ambassador to Washington, Rinaldo Petrignani, to seek a clarification of the move.

On the same issue, the head of the small right-of-center Liberal Party, Valerio Zanone, filed a query with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo on government intentions for "the debated and debatable Italian participation in the construction and financing of the Siberian gasline".

In his query, the secretary of the government party also raised the question of Soviet political prisoners forced to work on the gasline project.

The president of the Tuscan region, where Nuovo Pignone is located, sent a letter to the premier yesterday in which he voiced his "extreme concern for the serious difficulties" which could be created for the state company as a result of the American sanctions. Mario Leone also affirmed that "only through the mutual understanding of each side's requirements and positions and a sincere spirit of cooperation" could the impasse be resolved.

Sources close to Nuovo Pignone management yesterday said that the U.S. Customs seizure of some three million dollars worth of turbine rotors would have no immediate effect on the company because of its "extremely diversified" production of turbines and compressors and other equipment.

In another development yesterday, the premier's mediation bid to get the trade unions confederation and public and private industry back to the bargaining table led to a breakthrough with the announcement that labor-management talks on the cost of labor and wage indexation will begin October 27.

COLOMBO CONFIRMS LEBANESE CAMPS BEING INSPECTED

AU200928 Rome ANSA in English 0845 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 20 -- A representative from the Italian Embassy in Beirut and officials from the French and United States Embassies in the capital are currently conducting visits to detention centers where people arrested during Lebanese Army police operations are being held, Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said yesterday.

The foreign minister referred to the checks conducted by representatives from the three nations in the peacekeeping force in a statement to the Senate before ratification of the international treaties covering Italian participation in the Sinai and Lebanon peacekeeping forces.

Colombo told the Senate that Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil has provided ample assurances to the committee of the three nations' ambassadors of his desire to avoid illegality and violence and said that the visits to the places where the detainees are held began yesterday.

Going back to the reedition of the three-nation peacekeeping force, following the completion of the Palestinian evacuation, the foreign minister said that Italian diplomatic steps aimed at returning the force to Beirut were begun immediately after the Israeli-inspired massacre of Palestinian civilians in the Shatila and Sabra refugee camps on September 17 and 18.

He also recalled that the Rome government repeatedly intervened with the Lebanese authorities to press home the need for a normalization ocess in Beirut in the framework of legality and order.

$10 Million in Aid

AU202000 Rome ANSA in English 1935 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Beirut, October 20 -- Italy will allocate a total of 13 billion lire, some 10 million dollars, in emergency assistance for the reconstruction of Lebanon, Italian Minister Massimo Curcio announced here today.

The Italian official is heading up a Foreign Ministry delegation currently conferring with Lebanese authorities on the nation's most urgent requirements and the role Italy can play in meeting these needs.

The minister said that the Lebanese authorities have indicated three priority sectors, water supplies, electrical power and communications. He affirmed that Italy is in a position to provide parts, equipment and technicians for rebuilding these indispensible services now totally broken down after eight years of civil strike and four months of bombardments.

Another project referred to by the head of delegation was for the construction of some 10,000 housing units for the estimated 50,000 homeless in Beirut and in south Lebanon. Curcio said that a final decision on the scope of the Italian contribution to this reconstructions is likely to be announced tomorrow to coincide with the visit to Rome of Lebanese head of state Amin al-Jumayyil.

The delegation includes three experts from the Foreign Ministry Department of Cooperation and Development, an architect and two engineers.

It was also announced today that next week, Italian doctors and medical supplies and equipment will arrive at the (Acca) hospital in the capital whose patients are mainly Palestinian refugees from the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps.

ECONOMIC SANCTIONS AGAINST ARGENTINA LIFTED

PY201338 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 1220 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Rome, 20 Oct (TELAM) -- Italian Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria today signed a decree through which his country lifts all economic sanctions imposed on Argentina as a consequence of the conflict with Great Britain over the Malvinas Islands.

The government decree annuls the suspension of the export of all types of strategic products to Argentina. With the signing of the new legal document, trade relations between the two countries will again be ruled through the framework that was in force before the EEC imposed sanctions as a consequence of the Malvinas war.

GAS DEAL NEGOTIATIONS DUE TO START IN ALGIERS

AU200945 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 20 -- Lengthy and complex negotiations for the Italian purchase of Algerian natural gas will be pushed forward another step today with the arrival in Algiers of an Italian delegation for consultations with officials of Sonatrach, the Algerian state energy agency, on the technical aspects of the future contract.

The delegation includes officials of the Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi (ENI), ENI's engineering subsidiary, SNAM, and is led by Manin Carabba of the Foreign Trade Ministry. Their job will be to transform into a contract the general agreement reached at the end of September by the Italian foreign trade minister, Nicola Capria, and Algerian energy minister, Belkacem Nabi.

The Italian delegation and Sonatrach officials will begin work on the purchase price for the Algerian gas, to be pumped to a Sicilian terminal through the transmediterranean pipeline, a price indexation formula and the terms for the revision of the contract.

One of the most hotly debated points of the general agreement is the price of 4.41 dollars per million BTU's 40 cents over the current market price. The surcharge has been defended by the Rome government on the basis of the [word indistinct] requirements to diversify the nation's energy supply sources and expand trade with North African nations.

SNAM, which will be responsible for the Italian end of the contract, will be reimbursed for the 40 cent surcharge through a mechanism the foreign trade minister is expected to announce tomorrow when he goes before the house Industry Committee to report on issues connected to the Algerian and Soviet gaslines.

POPE REPORTEDLY TO SPEND CHRISTMAS IN BEIRUT

AU201621 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Tel Aviv, October 20 -- Pope John Paul II is planning to celebrate midnight mass this Christmas in Beirut in order to pray for peace in the Middle East, two journalists from the Tel Aviv daily, YEDI'OT AHARONOT, said here today.

According to the reporters, who were quoting what they described as Vatican sources, the Catholic leader will also visit the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Shatila where, just over a month ago, Lebanese rightists massacred hundreds of refugees while the Israelis controlled the area and access to the camps.

According to the journalists, the pope will discuss his plan with Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil when they meet at the Vatican shortly. But the pope "has no intention of visiting Israel", the journalists added.

According to the two reporters, the pope plans to fly to Beirut on December 24 and stop in Beirut for two or three days, visiting both the Muslim and Christian sectors of the Lebanese capital, celebrating various masses, and going to the refugee camps.

The two journalists are (Yael Esri), who lives in Switzerland, and (Edwin Eytan), who lives in Paris.

VATICAN DENIES POPE, PERTINI DISCUSSED IOR CASE
